PEOPLE ex rel. THISBY v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 556. (Sac. 606.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1900. RECLAMATION DISTRICT—PRIOR ORGANIZATION—DISSOLUTION—DE FACTO EXISTENCE—COLLATERAL ATTACK—APPEAL—JURISDICTIONAL DEFECT.

1. Swamp-land district No. 8 was set apart by the state board of swamp-land commissioners in 1861. Thereafter Act April 2, 1866 (St. 1865-66, p. 799), was passed, providing that swamp lands should be turned over to the respective counties for reclamation purposes, and that the county supervisors should assume the duties of the swamp-land commissioners. Act March 28, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 507), substituted new methods of reclamation; and section 32 prescribed that, after any swamp-land district then formed had organized under the act, the county supervisors should turn over all matter relating to the district, provided that until such organization said districts now formed should proceed under the laws then in force. Section 71 repealed the act of 1866 and other acts. District No. 8 took no steps to reorganize. Thereafter the reclamation district, defendant herein, was formed under Pol. Code, § 3446, and included a portion of district No. 8. Held, in quo warranto proceedings to test validity of defendant's organization alleged to be void on the ground that district No. 8 still existed by virtue of section 32 of the act of 1868, that the proviso in the latter section did not apply to districts taking no steps to reorganize, and hence district No. 8 had no existence thereunder, and did not prevent defendant's organization.

2. The objection that the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to grant a petition to form a reclamation district, because the description of the land therein was insufficient under Pol. Code, § 3446, could be first taken on appeal; it not appearing that the defect could have been cured by evidence in the lower court.

3. Plaintiff instituted quo warranto proceedings against a reclamation district, claiming that it included land within an earlier district, but failed to show that the latter had a de jure existence. Plaintiff then relied on a de facto organization. Held, that defendant was not precluded from controverting the de facto organization by the rule prohibiting collateral attacks.

4. An insufficient petition for the formation of a reclamation district was approved by the board of supervisors. No business was transacted by the district for 15 years. Thereafter the supervisors were requested to call an election for trustees, and trustees were chosen. They employed an engineer to make plans, and his report was approved. The supervisors later appointed persons to assess the land. No further business was transacted. The trustees joined with other persons, and formed the defendant district, embracing the same lands, and commenced reclamation. Held, on quo warranto proceedings setting up the prior district as a bar to defendant's organization, that a finding against the former's de facto existence was supported by the evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt. F. Johnson, Judge.

Quo warranto by the people, on the complaint of Rebecca Thisby, against reclamation district No. 556. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Fitzgerald, Ex Atty. Gen., Johnson & Johnson, and Grove L. Johnson (Devlin & Devlin, of counsel), for appellant. A. L. Shinn, W. A. Gett, and Catlin, Shinn & Catlin, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Quo warranto. The complaint alleges that defendant is illegally claiming to be and acting as a reclamation district, and that the organization of defendant was unlawful, and that it never became a reclamation district. A general demurrer was overruled, and defendant answered, alleging the regular formation of defendant as a reclamation district on the 8th day of September, 1893, under the provisions of the Political Code. Defendant had judgment that it "was a public corporation, to wit, a reclamation district, legally organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, and legally entitled to exercise corporate functions and powers." A motion for a new trial was denied, and plaintiff appeals from the order and from the judgment.

The court found that defendant was organized under section 3446 of the Political Code. Appellant does not dispute that on the face of the proceedings defendant was regularly organized. It is claimed by plaintiff that on July 13, 1861, the state board of swamp-land commissioners, pursuant to law, formed the entire body of land known as "Andrus Island," in Sacramento county, comprising about 7,624 acres, into a swamp-land district, designated as "Swamp-Land District No. 8," a portion of which was included within the boundaries of defendant district; that under the act of March 28, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 507), known as the "Green Act," the board of supervisors of said county, on April 7, 1869, organized reclamation district No. 75 out of part of the land included in district No. 8; that said board, on December 9, 1874, organized another reclamation district from the lands in said Andrus island, including part of the land in district No. 75, and known as "Reclamation District No. 213"; that each of these districts includes lands embraced within the boundaries of defendant district; that if any one of them has a legal existence the defendant district cannot stand, since it was not organized under section 3481 of the Political Code relating to the formation of a district from lands already embraced within the boundaries of an organized district, but was formed under section 3446 of said Code, upon the assumption that no organized district stood in its way. The court found that neither district No. 8, nor district No. 75, nor district No. 213, has now, or ever has had, any legal existence as a swamp-land or reclamation district.

1. Appellant interposes the organization of swamp-land district No. 8 as an insuperable barrier to the valid organization of defendant district. District No. 8 was set apart as a swamp-land district under the act of 1861, supra. The scope, purpose, and effect of this act were concisely, yet comprehensively, set forth in People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016, which was a case similar to the one now presented. All the points made in support of district No. 8 in this case were made in the case cited, except that it is now claimed that section 32 of the act of March 28, 1868, was overlooked, and that the effect of this section was to leave district No. 8 in the control of the board of supervisors under the act of April 2, 1866. St. 1865-66, p. 799. The act of 1868 substituted a new scheme for the reclamation and sale of swamp and overflowed lands to take the place of the various schemes developed in preceding statutes. At the close of section 32 is found the following provision: "* * * After any district now formed shall organize under the provisions of this act, the supervisors of the county shall turn over to the trustees all the books and papers in their possession relating solely to that district: provided, that until such organization said districts now formed shall proceed under the laws now in force." Appellant calls attention to the plain language in this proviso, and claims that to give it effect, as must be done, there is no escape from his position, and therefore district No. 8 is still operating under the act of 1866. Section 71 of the act of 1868 expressly repeals the act of 1866, together with a number of other acts on the same subject, and we have no doubt that the later act was intended to take the place of the act of 1866, and not to leave the latter act in force as to all districts theretofore organized. It certainly was not intended that the two acts were to remain in force, else the act of 1866 would not have been in terms repealed, and some more explicit provision would have been placed in the act showing such intention. The later act contemplated a reorganization of the districts previously formed, but it very properly provided that such districts as intended to continue in existence should, during the period of transition, proceed under the laws theretofore in force. The proviso applied to reorganized districts, but did not, and was not, in our opinion, intended to apply to a district, like No. 8, that took no steps to reorganize, and, so far as the record shows, transacted no business after May 5, 1869. At this last meeting the board of supervisors passed a resolution annulling all contracts for works of reclamation in the district, and directed the clerk to notify the controller of the state that all contractors have been fully paid for work contracted prior to March 28, 1868 (the date of the passage of the act of 1868), and requesting him to transfer to the supervisors of Sacramento county all books and papers in his possession relating to said district, and to draw his warrants for the cash balances, if any, standing to the credit of said district. This action was apparently in compliance with section 47 of the act of 1868, and is consistent with an intention to reorganize under the act, and we find nothing in any of the minutes offered in evidence to show that the district attempted or desired to continue its existence under the repealed act of 1866 or any other act. Respondent presents sundry requirements of the act of 1861 with which the district failed to comply, and which it is claimed were essential to the forming of a district, but we do not deem it necessary to go over this ground. We are satisfied that the court correctly held, in People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, that districts formed under the act of 1861 went out of existence when by the later acts the legislature changed its policy for their government and control; and, as appellant claims to be a district under the act of 1861, we must hold that it no longer exists.

2. Appellant makes a feeble claim that district No. 75 was legal, and stood in the way of forming the defendant district. All that is said in support of the claim is that the petition was in due form, properly published, and duly approved by the board of supervisors. It does not appear that it ever after assumed to act, or that any business was transacted in its name. The court, however, found that none of the lands included within the boundaries of this district fell within the boundaries of defendant district, and this finding is not attacked. There is, then, no conflict here.

3. But appellant contends, if there be doubt as to the existence of district No. 75, because formed under the act of 1868, there can be no doubt that district No. 213 was legally organized under the Political Code as it stood when it was organized December 9, 1874. Section 3446 of that Code required the petition, among other things, to set forth "a description of the lands by legal subdivisions or other boundaries." The petition described the various bodies of land as "tract all of swamp land survey Nos. 329 and 330," and similarly as to all the tracts of the several petitioners. The same method of description was held jurisdictional and insuff-ficient in Ralston v. Board, 51 Cal. 592, and also in Ferran v. Board, Id. 307. Ralston v. Board has never been overruled or questioned, so far as we are advised, and we see no reason why it should be. Appellant does not dispute the correctness of these decisions, but meets them by claiming (1) that the decision of the board of supervisors on the question is final; (2) that their decision cannot be collaterally attacked; (3) that a corporation cannot be attacked collaterally; and (4) that at the trial defendant did not make the objection, and it is too late to raise the question now. Defendant did not at the trial make the specific objection that the land was not described in the petition. The objection upon the offer of the petition was that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and some specific objections were stated, but none directly reaching the point in question. Appellant cites numerous cases to show that an objection cannot be first raised in the supreme court, especially one which could have been cured in the lower court, and two cases are cited, to wit, Howard v. Harman, 5 Cal. 78, and Shay v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 541, to the point "that an objection as to jurisdiction must be raised first in the court below." In the first of these cases the objection was that no appeal bond had been filed in the justice's court when the appeal was taken to the county court. The objection was not made in the court below, and it was held too late to make it here, because if it had been made in the county court, it would have been its duty to hear the excuse for the failure, and if sufficient to allow the bond then to be filed. In the other case there were some defects in the proceedings to appeal the case from the justice's court to the superior court as to which no objection was raised until the case came here, where it was urged that the superior court had no jurisdiction to try the case. It was held that, as no objection was made to the regularity of the proceedings in the court below, it was too late to take advantage of the insufficiency of the notice of appeal or of the undertaking. The many cases cited by appellant relate to questions of incompetent evidence, admitted without objection, to the regularity of proceedings, or to objections which, if presented in time, might have been obviated. In the case now here there is no dispute but that the petition as shown in the record is the petition as presented to the board of supervisors. It is not suggested that any evidence would have cured the defect in the description, or that it could have been cured. The objection here goes to the jurisdiction of the board to act upon the petition. It does not depend upon their adjudicating certain facts upon the existence of which their jurisdiction depended. Their jurisdiction depended upon the presentation of a petition setting forth the jurisdictional facts, failing in which the petition conferred no jurisdiction, and the objection could have been taken at any stage of the proceedings, and can be taken for the first time here. In re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 438.

Appellant contends, conceding that the steps taken were not legally sufficient to form district 213, that it was a de facto corporation, and cannot be attacked collaterally nor otherwise, except in a suit by the state; citing Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406, and People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 8 Pac. 84, and some other cases. In the present instance it does not appear to be necessary to consider whether and to what extent defendant is attacking district No. 213 collaterally. Defendant answered the challenge of the state by showing a charter grounded upon strict compliance with the law. The form and regularity of the proceedings by which it was called into existence are not questioned. But plaintiff interposes what it claims is a legally organized district, which embraces all of the land included in defendant district, and therefore it is claimed that defendant was not legally formed. Plaintiff, as we have seen, failed to show compliance with the law, and proof of its de jure existence failed. Plaintiff then relied on a de facto organization, and certain evidence was submitted in support thereof. Its de facto existence became an issuable fact, as much as did the fact of its de jure existence. The rule invoked by plaintiff does not preclude defendant from controverting the de facto existence of the district asserting it. Oroville & V. R. Co. v. Supervisors of Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 354; Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55, 36 Pac. 368. What are the facts? An insufficient petition was filed December 9, 1874, with the board of supervisors, and was on that day approved. Nothing further was done until July 8, 1890, when one of the original petitioners filed a petition asking an order of the board to call an election for trustees, which was done by the board; it appearing that by-laws had been previously adopted, although at what date does not appear. On October 3, 1890, the result of the election was reported to the supervisors, showing the election of Sol. Runyon, G. A. Knott, and P. Crew as the trustees chosen. On February 6, 1891, the trustees reported to the board of supervisors that they had "employed an engineer to survey, plan, locate, and estimate the cost of the works necessary for such reclamation," etc.; that he had made a report in writing which they had approved January 14, 1891, and inclosed with their report to the board a copy of the engineer's report. The trustees requested the board of supervisors to appoint three disinterested persons to view and assess upon the lands a charge proportionate to the whole expense of $40,000 (the estimated cost of the work), etc., and on February 6, 1891, the board appointed three persons as prayed for by the trustees. No further action has been taken by the district. On August 7, 1893, 2½ years after the last action of district 213, petition for the organization of defendant was filed, and was signed by Runyon, Knott, and Crew, who were trustees of district 213, and by the owners of more than half of the land included in district 213, and defendant district included all the lands within the boundaries of district 213. The court found that the prior districts never had any legal existence, and the finding rests upon the lack of any legal organization such as made them corporations de jure, and upon the evidence tending to show that they were not claiming in good faith to be districts, nor doing business as such, and were not corporations de facto. Just how much business must be done by a corporation assuming de facto powers, or what facts showing good faith are necessary to constitute the corporation a de facto organization, can be determined by no fixed rule. In this case it appears that nothing was attempted to be done after the petition was filed for over 15 years. The supervisors were then asked to call an election for trustees of the district, and this was done, and trustees were chosen. They employed an engineer to make a plan, and he reported and the report was approved. The supervisors were asked to appoint persons to assess the lands, and this the board did in 1891, since which time nothing further has been done. The trustees appointed for district 213 united with other of the original petitioners, and formed a new organization, embracing all the lands included within district 213, and were going forward with the work of reclamation, when this action was begun. None of the petitioners for district 213 are complaining, and there is no evidence that any person interested desires that the district should be kept upon its feet. It has no legal existence, and its right to continue because a de facto concern is interposed now rather to defeat what appears to be an effort, after many years of inaction, to do something towards keeping faith with the general government, and for the benefit of the landowners, than to enable it to go forward itself to do the work contemplated in its creation. It would seem to be an effort to prevent reclamation rather than to promote it, and we cannot, therefore, say that the finding of the court is unsupported by the evidence. The judgment and order are affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment, but I dissent from so much of the opinion as rests upon the proposition decided in People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016, that swamp-land districts formed under the act of 1861 ceased to exist after the passage of the Green act in 1868. I think all districts which had been "formed" in the sense of section 32 of the latter act (St. 1867-68, p. 515) were by that section kept in existence, and that for the purposes of such districts, until reorganized under the new law, the original act of 1861 and the amendatory act of 1866 remained in force notwithstanding their repeal for all other purposes. If, therefore, district No. 8 was ever "formed," within the meaning of the Green act, I should be forced to conclude that it was still in existence when the proceedings were had for the organization of the defendant, and that those proceedings, under section 3446 of the Political Code, were ineffectual.

But the superior court has found, upon evidence which I think sustains the finding, that district No. 8 never had a legal existence. It seems to have acquired the designation of "Swamp-Land District No. 8" solely by reason of the petition for its formation and the order of the commissioners for a preliminary survey. From that time forward, it was called "Swamp-Land District No. 8" in reports of engineers and state officers and acts of the legislature. But it clearly was not constituted a swamp-land district by a mere order of the commissioners for a preliminary survey, the only result of which might be to demonstrate the fact that no reclamation could be effected. And yet, for the purpose of that order, and for the purpose of designating the fund out of which the expenses of the preliminary survey were to be paid, it might be, as in fact it was, conveniently designated as "Swamp-Land District No. 8." The result of the preliminary survey, made under the order of the commissioners, was to show the reclamation could not be effected with the funds available, and no plan of reclamation seems to have been adopted, no contract was let, and all proceedings ended with the payment of the expenses of the survey. This was not, in my opinion, a formation of the district in the sense of section 32 of the act of 1868. It was not within the reason of that proviso. Such, indeed, seems to have been the view of the matter upon which the board of supervisors, and all others concerned, have acted during a period of nearly 40 years prior to the proceedings for the formation of the defendant. Upon the grounds thus briefly indicated, I hold that swamp-land district No. 8 was no obstacle to the formation of defendant, and as to the other districts I concur in the principal opinion.

MIZE v. HEARST. (S. F. 1,595.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1900.)

APPEAL—VERDICT—AMOUNT—WHEN SET ASIDE.

Where the verdict in an action for libel was not so large as to show passion, prejudice, or corruption, it will not be set aside on appeal as excessive.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by E. J. Mize against W. R. Hearst,

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. L. Barnes, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover damages for the publication of a libel by defendant in his newspaper the Examiner. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $2,650, for which amount judgment was rendered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

No exception is taken to any ruling of the court below at the trial, nor is any alleged error of law presented; and the sole point made here for the reversal is that the amount of the damages found by the jury is excessive. But, on well-settled principles, an appellate court is not warranted in setting aside the verdict of a jury on this ground unless the amount of damages assessed is so unreasonably large and extravagant as to show that the jury were actuated by passion, prejudice, or corruption; and it is sufficient to say that the record here does not show such a case. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

RAUER v. MERANI et al. (S. F. 1,383.)

ASSUMPSIT—GOODS SOLD—TIME OF PAYMENT—EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION.

In an action for the price of goods, plaintiff's evidence tended to show a sale in August, on Saturday, payment to be part on Monday following, part the following week, and the balance the following week. Defendant's evidence was that the terms of payment were 30, 60, and 90 days, in accordance with notes payable September 15th, October 15th, and November 15th. The action was commenced August 28th, and there was judgment for the whole price in favor of plaintiff. Held, that the judgment was not supported by the evidence, since, in the absence of other proof as to the date in August on which the sale was made, it was inferable from defendant's 30-day note that it was on August 15th; and as, under plaintiff's evidence, there was a credit of 14 and 21 days for the second and third payments, the whole purchase price was not due on August 28th, when suit was begun.

In bank. On rehearing. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 61 Pac. 76.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a suit to recover the price of goods sold. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The claim on the part of appellants is that the action was commenced before payment was due, and their evidence is to the effect that the goods were sold on 30, 60, and 90 days' time, as evidenced by three promissory notes executed and delivered by them, payable September 15th, October 15th, and November 15th. The complaint was filed August 28th. The assignors of plaintiff, who sold the goods, testified that, although the notes referred to were executed and tendered by defendants, they were not accepted, and that the sale was not upon the time specified therein. As to the real terms of the sale the testimony of one of the vendors was quite indefinite, but not inconsistent, with that of his co-partner, who stated that the goods were sold on Saturday, and were to be paid for $100 on the following Monday, $100 the following week, and the balance the week following. As the whole of the second and third weeks, respectively, were allowed for the second and third payments, there was a credit of 14 and 21 days given according to the only evidence introduced by the plaintiff. The goods were sold in August, but the evidence does not show at what date, and, consequently, it does not appear that more than $100 was due at the time the action was commenced. If the sale took place on the 15th, as may be inferred from the evidence of defendants that their first (or 30-day) note was made payable on September 15th, the final payment, even according to plaintiff's evidence, was not due on August 28th, when the complaint was filed. This being so, the judgment, which was for the whole price of the goods, is unsupported by the evidence. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and cause remanded.

In re KRUGER'S ESTATE. (Sac. 757.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—NEGLIGENCE—COMPENSATION

1. A finding by a probate court that services rendered by an attorney for an estate in an action against it were rendered in connection with the administration of the estate cannot be questioned by the executors or attorney on appeal by heirs from an order fixing the compensation of the attorney for services rendered the estate.

2. The fact that an attorney for an estate did not ask for compensation for services rendered in an action against it will not prevent the consideration of the question of the attorney's negligence in that action in fixing his compensation as attorney for the estate.

3. Where an attorney for an estate, in an action against it, failed to explain his delay in having a statement and amendments, on a motion for a new trial, presented for settlement, embodied in the statement, and evidence of such fact was given in fixing his compensation for services to the estate, an argument thereon may be made for the first time on appeal from the order fixing the compensation.

4. Where an attorney for an estate in an action against it appointed a day too late for presentation for settlement of a statement and amendments on a motion for a new trial, and failed to explain the delay, so that an appeal based thereon was dismissed, and judgment rendered against the estate, such facts constituted negligence, and should be considered in fixing the attorney's compensation for services to the estate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. T. Nilon, Judge.

On the settlement of the account of the executors of the estate of W. H. Kruger, deceased, a fee was allowed the attorney for the estate, and from the decree fixing the amount certain heirs and legatees appeal. Reversed.

Fred T. Searls and Geo. T. Wright, for appellants. P. F. Simonds, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal from a decree settling the sixth account of the executors, and the appellants seek to reverse the order or decree as to the allowance of the sum of $6,000 for legal services rendered the executors. The attorney was employed in 1891, with the understanding that he should render such services as the executors might require, and that he should receive such compensation for his services as the court should deem reasonable,—meaning, no doubt, such sum as the court would allow to the executors. Upon the settlement of the fifth annual account, one of the executors asked the court to fix the value of the legal services rendered, which the court then did. From that order the present appellants appealed to this court, and the order was reversed on the ground that the claim for an allowance of an attorney's fee was not contained in the account as filed, and those interested in the estate had no notice that such allowance would be made. 123 Cal. 391, 55 Pac. 1056. After filing the remittitur from this court on that appeal, the sixth account was filed, in which the statement was contained that the attorney was entitled to be paid a reasonable fee for valuable services rendered by him, such fee to be fixed by the court on that settlement. Upon the day for such settlement the appellants, who claim to be the heirs and legatees of the decedent, objected to the allowance of any attorney's fee, on the ground, substantially, that the estate had been injured by the negligent performance of duty by the attorney in a sum far exceeding the claim made on behalf of the attorney. The court allowed as an attorney's fee $6,000, which ruling the appellants claim is not sustained by the evidence.

There was testimony to the effect that the services were worth $10,000, and this testimony was not directly controverted. Indeed, it may be said the contestants admit that the fee allowed would be reasonable but for the fact that through the negligence of the attorney in a certain law suit brought against the estate it incurred a loss of a large amount of property, and was compelled to pay $17,000, besides costs, which would have been saved to the estate if the attorney had properly discharged his duty. It was contended on behalf of the attorney that his employment and the service he rendered in the action alluded to was separate and distinct from his employment as attorney for the executors in the administration of the estate, but the court found against him on this point, and neither he nor the executor can question the ruling. We are bound to regard the service rendered in the suit as part of the service rendered in pursuance of his employment to aid the executors generally, and the fact that he did not ask for any compensation for service rendered in that case will not prevent the question of such alleged negligence from being considered in fixing his compensation as attorney for the executors.

The suit in question was brought by one P. Henry against the executors of W. H. Kruger, deceased, and also against the executors of E. J. Brickell, deceased, said Brickell having been a partner in business with Kruger, deceased, to obtain an account in regard to certain property alleged to have been held in trust by Kruger and Brickell, for judgment in the sum of $62,000, and to compel the conveyance of certain property. The defendants answered, denying the alleged rights and equities, and all indebtedness; the said attorney representing the estate of Kruger in pursuance of said employment. Judgment went against said executors for a reconveyance of the property, and for $28,000 found to be due said plaintiff on the accounting, and for costs. The executors, by their said attorney, in due time took the proper steps to move for a new trial, and said attorney duly prepared and served a statement on said motion November 21, 1893. The plaintiff in that action served his proposed amendments to said statement, November 28, 1893. On the 2d day of December, 1893, said attorney notified plaintiff's attorney in that action that the proposed amendments would not be accepted, and that the statement and proposed amendments would be presented to the judge for settlement, December 11, 1893, which was three days too late. At the time of settlement the plaintiff in that case objected to the settlement on that ground, and, when his objection was overruled, caused his objection to be certified in the statement, and, although there was an apparent failure to present the statement for settlement in time, the moving party did not cause to be inserted any saving explanation. Afterwards the supreme court, on motion of the respondent in that case, dismissed the appeal, solely for this defect. Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 39 Pac. 599. The reasoning upon this point is tersely stated in the syllabus: "Where the record shows that the proposed statement on motion for a new trial, and the proposed amendments thereto, were presented to the judge upon notice after the expiration of the ten days prescribed by law, and that the settlement was objected to by the other party, and no excuse appears in the record for the delay, the delay is fatal," etc. The court said: "Here no excuse for the delay is shown, and it can make no difference whether it was for three days, or fourteen days, or seven months." It will be seen that the charge of negligence is, first, in failing to present the proposed statement and proposed amendments to the judge for settlement within the period provided, to wit, within 10 days after receiving the proposed amendments; or, in case there was a valid excuse for the delay, in failing to have the facts constituting such excuse incorporated into the statement.

Confessedly, the statement and proposed amendments were not presented to the judge within 10 days; and confessedly, also, when they were so presented the settlement was objected to on the ground that the court had lost jurisdiction of the case, and could not then settle the statement because of such delay, and, the objection being overruled, were incorporated into the statement, which did not disclose any excuse for the delay. And it must be admitted that for one of these reasons the order for a new trial which was made, based upon such statement, was reversed.

The respondent here contends that such excuse did exist; that he handed the proposed statement and amendments to the judge in the presence of Mr. Ford, who represented the plaintiff in the action of Henry v. Merguire et al., and the judge then appointed the day for settlement, and notice was given of such appointment. This, it is contended, is equivalent to the method provided in section 650, Code Civ. Proc., which authorized him to hand the papers to the clerk for the judge, who then must appoint a day for settlement, of which the clerk must give notice. It is also contended that since the opposing attorney was present notice to him was not necessary, and this was itself a presentation to the judge for settlement. The notice actually given of the day when it would be presented for settlement is inconsistent with each contention, and when the documents were handed to the judge admittedly no notice had been served on Mr. Ford, and the attorney then testified that Mr. Ford then made objection to the proceeding, though he did not remember what specific objection it was. Certainly, then, the law was not complied with, and Mr. Ford did not consent to the day appointed.

But, if these facts constituted an excuse, they should have been stated in the statement when it was settled. The objection was made that the court had no power to settle and certify the statement because of the lapse of time, and without explanation no one could have doubted that the objection was good. The court overruled the objection, and Mr. Ford had his exceptions duly certified. Then it was plainly incumbent upon the moving party to cause the justification for the delay to be certified in the statement. This construction of the statute had been declared by this court. Higgins v. Mahoney, 50 Cal. 444; Tregambo v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 504; Connor v. Road Co., 101 Cal. 429, 35 Pac. 431.

Counsel for appellant say the point that the excuse was not incorporated in the statement was not made in the probate court. The fact was proven, and when the attorney for the executors was testifying his attention was called to it. He said: "These facts were not incorporated in the statement on motion for a new trial. Counsel did not then believe * * * that seven days was invalid when five should be required." Of course, no such objection that seven days' notice was given was ever made, but the remark shows that the point was made. But there is no such rule that points not made at the trial cannot be made here, but that certain objections to evidence or the procedure cannot be made for the first time in the appellate court. This is not an objection in this case, but an argument from the evidence that counsel was negligent. It was not necessary to show that the same argument was made below, and surely the bill of exceptions would not show this, and it may be added that appellants now assert that it was presented and fully argued in the lower court.

The degree of learning and skill, as also the degree of diligence, for which an attorney is responsible was discussed in Gambert v. Hart, 44 Cal. 552. It is said: "The true rule of liability undoubtedly is that an attorney is liable for a want of such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise." The facts in that case have a close analogy in essential matters to the facts of this case, and upon the principles there declared it cannot be doubted that actionable negligence was shown here.

But even if the negligence was not of such a nature as to be actionable, as stated on the last appeal, it should still have been considered in determining the value of the services. If because of the unskillful or negligent manner in which the service was performed it was a detriment, and not an advantage, no compensation should have been allowed. The order or decree settling the account of the executors is reversed.

MAY v. HATCHER. (S. F. 1,579.)

MORTGAGES—FINDINGS—NECESSITY—AMENDED COMPLAINT—SERVICE—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—COMMISSIONS—AFFIDAVIT—FILING—NECESSITY—NOTICE—PUBLICATION—INADEQUACY OF PRICE—SETTING ASIDE SALE.

1. Where the record did not show that findings were not waived, the fact that sufficient findings were irregularly put in the judgment, instead of in a separate document called "Findings," did not entitle a purchaser of the mortgagor's interest after foreclosure sale, and who was not a party to the record, to vacate the judgment on motion, since it was not void, and the error could be reviewed only on appeal.

2. The fact that a default judgment was entered one day too soon in foreclosure proceedings did not entitle a purchaser of a mortgagor's interest after foreclosure sale, and who was not a party to the record, to vacate the judgment on motion, since it was not void, but simply erroneous.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 729, providing that a commissioner in foreclosure proceedings must be sworn to faithfully perform his duties, the fact that no written affidavit of the commissioner was on file in the clerk's office, and that the clerk's register of actions did not show that such an affidavit had been filed, was not conclusive evidence that the commissioner was not sworn, and hence did not exclude other evidence that he was sworn, since there is no provision that the affidavit must be filed, or that it should be in writing.

4. The fact that a commissioner in foreclosure proceedings made a sale which was set aside for insufficiency of notice did not invalidate a subsequent sale of which due notice was given.

5. The fact that one publication of a sale by a commissioner under foreclosure had the date June 16th, instead of June 7th, did not vitiate the sale, where sufficient publications were made after the date was changed to June 7th.

6. Inadequacy of price alone is not sufficient to justify setting aside a sale under foreclosure on motion of the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest, after the foreclosure sale, and who was not a party to the record.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Sophia May against Michael Ryan and others. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment and sale, Sewell Hatcher appeals. Affirmed.

N. E. Wretman and Nicholas Bowden, for appellant. J. C. Black, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage executed to plaintiff by the defendant Michael Ryan. Other persons were made defendants, as claiming some interest in the property. Judgment of foreclosure was entered March 1, 1897, and the mortgaged premises were sold by a commissioner appointed for that purpose on June 7, 1897, to plaintiff. On December 4, 1897, —nine months after the entry of the judgment, and three days less than six months after the sale,—Sewell Hatcher, claiming to have purchased the interest of the mortgagor and his wife about five months after the sale, moved the court to vacate the judgment, and also to vacate the sale. The court denied the motions, and from the order denying them Hatcher appeals.

We really observe nothing in the record which would entitle the appellant to have the judgment vacated, even if the motion had been made in time; but the motion was too late, for a judgment, unless void on its face, cannot be vacated on a mere motion unless it be made at least within six months after the entry of the judgment. In the case at bar the judgment was clearly not void on its face. The main contentions of appellant on this point are: First, that the judgment is void because there were no findings; and, second, because after a certain amendment to the complaint had been served on the defendant J. H. Lyndon, who is alleged to have been the assignee in the insolvency of the defendant Michael Kane, and on the defendant Mary Kane, who is alleged to have been a subsequent judgment creditor of Michael Kane, default was entered against them by the clerk one day too soon. Lyndon and Kane had been brought into court by service of the summons and original complaint. As to the first contention, as a matter of fact there are sufficient findings, although they are irregularly put in the judgment itself, instead of being in a separate document called "Findings." But, if they cannot be considered as findings, it is sufficient to say—First, that the judgment record does not show that findings were not waived, and therefore, under any view, the judgment would not be void on its face for the reason assigned; and, second, the absence of findings would not make the judgment void, but at most would only be error reviewable on appeal.

2. Appellant is not concerned with the supposed rights of Lyndon and Kane. They did not ask to have the default set aside, nor did they make any effort to be allowed to answer the amendment; and, even as to them, what happened after the service of the summons and the original complaint, at most, "rendered the judgment erroneous, simply, not void." In re Newman's Estate, 75 Cal. 220, 16 Pac. 887.

The court did not err in denying the motion to vacate the sale. The point mostly argued by appellant for the reversal of this order is that the commissioner was not sworn to perform his duties. We need not discuss the question here whether his failure to be sworn, if such failure had been shown, would have vitiated the sale, for there was ample proof that he was sworn. Appellant's position is that the facts that no written affidavit of the commissioner was on file in the clerk's office, and that the clerk's register of actions did not show that such affidavit had been filed, are conclusive proof that no oath was taken, and that no other evidence was admissible on the subject. But this position is not tenable. The statutory provision touching the matter is merely that "the commissioner, before entering upon his duties, must be sworn to perform them faithfully." Code Civ. Proc. § 729. There is no provision that he must make a written affidavit, or that an affidavit must be filed anywhere; and there is abundant evidence in the record not only that he was sworn, but that he made a written affidavit. The fact that the commissioner made an invalid sale on May 10, 1897, which the court on plaintiff's motion set aside for insufficiency of notice, etc., did not invalidate the sale afterwards on June 7th. Nor was the latter sale vitiated by the fact that there was one publication of a notice of sale having the date June 16th, instead of June 7th, there being a sufficient publication after it was amended. Something is said in the appellant's brief about inadequacy of price, but that is not one of the grounds of the motion. The evidence introduced on the subject is exceedingly meager, and simple inadequacy of price, even if shown, is not itself sufficient ground to sustain a motion like the one here in question. There are no other points in appellant's briefs which call for special notice.

The notice of appeal from the orders contains also a notice of appeal from the judgment, but the transcript does not contain the record of that appeal, and, as we understand counsel, that appeal is not before us. Therefore this decision will not be construed as in any way affecting the appeal from the judgment. The orders appealed from are affirmed.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. CENTER et al. (S. F. 1,512.)

(Supreme Court of California, Dec. 10, 1900.)

FORMER ACTION—DECREE—REFERENCE TO OPINION—CONSTRUCTION.

In a former action brought by defendants against plaintiff to quiet title, the judgment quieted title in defendants, with a proviso that nothing in the decree should impair the rights reserved in the Van Ness ordinance to the plaintiff, over lands that had "then been occupied or set apart" for public use. The opinion of the supreme court deciding that case held that all the rights which the plaintiff had, and which could be conveyed by said ordinance, had passed to defendant's grantor at a time shortly after the passage of such ordinance. Held, that the expression "then occupied or set apart," as used in the judgment, had reference to the date of the passage of the ordinance, and not to the date of the commencement of the action to quiet title, or the decree therein.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Action by the city and county of San Francisco against John Center and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants Leroy appeal.

Platt & Bayne and E. S. Pillsbury, for appellants. James L. Gallagher, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Ejectment. Plaintiff filed its complaint in this action November 29, 1886, to recover possession of a strip of land extending from Ninth to Eighteenth street, in the city and county of San Francisco, and which was formerly Mission creek. Among the defendants, of whom there is a large number, were Eugene and Georges Leroy, who claimed ownership in and possession of a portion of the land in question, to wit, the northerly and westerly half of Mission creek, extending from Eleventh street (known as "Wood Street" on the Van Ness map) westerly and southerly to a point distant about 26 feet $4\frac{3}{4}$ inches southerly from the southerly line of Alameda street extended westerly through this land. The Leroy land embraces quite a large tract, but only the part within the creek is in question. Judgment was given in favor of plaintiff against the Leroy, except as to a small, four-sided tract of land, about 25 feet square, situate at the southwest corner of Alameda and Columbia streets, as to which the Leroy had judgment. From that portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff the Leroy have appealed, and bring the record here by bill of exceptions. No other defendants appeal.

Plaintiff claimed to be seised in fee in trust for the use of the state and for the people of the city and county of San Francisco, and it based its claim of title upon a patent issued by the United States government June 20, 1884, to plaintiff for its pueblo lands; the decree of the United States circuit court in the case of City of San Francisco v. U. S., entered May 18, 1865, confirming the claim of the city to its pueblo lands; and the act of congress approved March 8, 1866, also confirming said claim. The decree and the act of congress are printed in full in 138 U. S. 663, and Municipal Reports San Francisco, 1886-87, Append. 155. The Leroy claimed under decree of the circuit court of the United States, quieting their title against the city and county, and adjudging that they were on, and have been since, October 26, 1883, the owners in fee of the land now claimed by them. On appeal to the supreme court of the United States this decree was affirmed (City and County of San Francisco v. Leroy, 138 U. S. 656, 11 Sup. Ct. 364, 34 L. Ed. 1096), with the following modification, as shown by the certified copy of the decree: "* * * By adding the declaration that nothing therein shall be deemed to impair in any respect the rights reserved in the Van Ness ordinance to the city of San Francisco, or to its successor, the city and county of San Francisco, over lands that had then been occupied or set apart for streets, squares, and public buildings of the city, and as thus modified be affirmed." This decree is dated March 2, 1891, and was filed in the United States circuit court at San Francisco December 1, 1891.

Appellants first devote much attention to the proposition that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show that there were rights reserved to it under the Van Ness ordinance that would be impaired by the decree pleaded by appellants; they claim, second, that, if the burden was upon defendants, then they, with the assistance of plaintiff, made the proof; and, third and lastly, if any rights in the land covered by Channel street and Mission creek were reserved to the city under the Van Ness ordinance, these rights ceased to exist, because this street and the creek were abandoned by the city.

It becomes necessary to determine at the outset to what period of time the modification of the Leroy decree by the United States supreme court related. Plaintiff contends that it had reference to the date of the decree as entered in the United States circuit court, which was June 14, 1887. Defendants claim that the modification had reference to the situation as it existed when the Van Ness map was made, showing the reservations then made by the city for streets, etc., under the Van Ness ordinance. The importance of the question lies in the fact that there were other maps made and adopted by the city, subsequent to the Van Ness map, which show that reservations additional to those indicated by that map were made before the decree was entered in favor of the Leroy, and which changed the relation of certain streets to Mission creek, and changed somewhat, apparently, the course and width of Channel street. The opinion of the supreme court was written by Mr. Justice Field, and to this opinion we may look to aid us in arriving at the meaning of the formal decree as subsequently entered by the clerk of the court. It appears from the opinion that in the action brought by the Leroy, they deraigned title through William J. Shaw, who derived title through Kissling, Thorne, and Center, and one Stewart, whose several titles the court held had been fully established under the Van Ness ordinance, running back to a date contemporaneous with that ordinance; that "the title to the lands thus claimed by Kissling and by Thorne and Center, and by Stewart as a purchaser from them of four and a half acres, became, by operation of that ordinance and the confirmatory legislation mentioned, vested in those parties, and by their conveyance passed to William J. Shaw, and was by him conveyed to Eugene L. Sullivan, and thence to the plaintiffs [Leroys] in this suit." The opinion further reads: "All the right, title, and interest which the city held, and which could be conveyed under the Van Ness ordinance, had, therefore, passed to Shaw when the suit to quiet his title was commenced and carried to judgment in the district court of the Twelfth judicial district of the state, and whatever benefit Shaw had acquired by that decree in his favor inured to the benefit of his grantees; the public rights reserved by the Van Ness ordinance being necessarily excepted." The suit here referred to was begun by Shaw on March 28, 1861, and a decree was entered in his favor February 5, 1862, from which no appeal was ever taken. The opinion proceeds: "One of these [i. e. "public rights"] was a reservation, notwithstanding its grant, of lands then occupied or set apart for public squares, streets, and sites for school houses, city hall, and other buildings belonging to the corporation; and the decree in this case should have excepted from its operation lands thus reserved." After discussing the claim of Shaw in the suit above referred to, arising from a deed to him of the tide-land commissioners, the opinion continues: "There was therefore nothing in the deed of the tide-land commissioners which could by any possibility impair the right of the city to exercise the power reserved in the Van Ness ordinance over such portions of the lands conveyed to occupants under that ordinance as had been occupied or set apart for streets, squares, and public buildings of the city. Such a reservation should have been embodied in the decree in this case." The opinion concludes as follows: "The decree should therefore be modified by adding the declaration that nothing therein shall be deemed to impair in any respect the rights reserved in the Van Ness ordinance to the city of San Francisco or its successor, the city and county of San Francisco, over lands that had then been occupied or set apart for streets, squares, and public buildings of the city, and as thus modified be affirmed; and it is so ordered." We have quoted in an earlier part of this opinion the language of the decree as modified, which modification is identical with that in the concluding paragraph of the opinion of Judge Field. Having in view the facts stated by Judge Field relative to the Shaw title, which is the origin of the Leroy title, it seems quite clear to us that the modification of the Leroy decree relating to the reserved rights of the city had reference to those rights as they existed at a date certainly no later than the Van Ness map, which set forth the reservations then claimed by the city under the Van Ness ordinance. In making subsequent maps and passing subsequent ordinances the city could not destroy any rights that had attached in favor of settlers or occupants of land confirmed to them by the Van Ness ordinance and by the acts of the legislature ratifying the action taken by the city under that ordinance.

The Leroy, brought their action to quiet their title October 26, 1883, and it was still pending on appeal to the supreme court and undecided when, on November 29, 1886, the city brought this present action. If the Leroy decree had not been modified it would have been conclusively determinative of the rights of the Leroy to at least some portion of the disputed land; and being modified in the particular already noticed, and being in all other respects affirmed, the only question is as to what, if any, reservations of the land in controversy did the city make by the Van Ness map. The other maps introduced in evidence—the engineer's map, so called (adopted 1866), and the Humphreys map (adopted 1870)—are of dates subsequent to the Van Ness map, and subsequent to the inception of Shaw's title, as we understand the facts in the Leroy suit against the city. The Van Ness map must therefore govern in determining what reservations were made by the city that in any way conflict with the Leroy lands. The subsequent maps and ordinances may possibly throw some light on the Van Ness map, and aid in arriving at its meaning; but they cannot take the place of that map in the sense that by them, and not by the Van Ness map, are the rights of the present parties to be determined. The trial court evidently took into consideration not only the Van Ness map, but also the engineer's map and the Humphreys map (which latter, it is agreed, is identical with the engineer's map so far as the land in controversy is concerned), and also other facts, such as that the city had fenced the lands it now claims; that Mission creek had been filled by the city; and other facts occurring since the Van Ness ordinance was passed, and that appeared in evidence. It is also manifest that the trial court regarded the modification of the Leroy decree as relating to its date or to the beginning of their action, and that the findings of the court were more or less influenced by these later maps, and by evidence as to reservations made by the city in some degree, at least, different from those indicated by the Van Ness map. The location of Mission creek with reference to Channel, Alameda, and Columbia streets is different on the Van Ness map from its location on the Humphreys map. On the Van Ness map Mission creek is shown to run west of Columbia street, while on the Humphreys map the creek and that street are nearly coincident at and north of Alameda street for some distance. Channel street on the Humphreys map seems to occupy a different relation to the other streets named and to Mission creek from the Channel street delineated on the Van Ness map. Whether or not the city should be concluded by the Van Ness map as to the exact location thereon given of Mission creek, we at this time express no opinion. Under the view we have taken, however, as to the modification of the Leroy decree, we do not think this court should, in the present state of the evidence in this case, undertake to point out the respective rights of the plaintiff and appellants to any particular lands in controversy, or to pass upon any other questions now before the court. The judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial ordered as to appellants, to be had upon the evidence already taken and such other evidence as plaintiff or appellants, or either of them, may wish to offer, and as to all other defendants the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed and a new trial ordered as to appellants, to be had upon the evidence already taken and such other evidence as plaintiff or appellants, or either of them, may wish to offer, and as to all other defendants the judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON v. HENLEY. (S. F. 1,707.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1900.)
STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED—PARTNERSHIP.

A member of a law partnership embezzled money belonging to a client in February, 1893, the partner not knowing of or participating in the fraud; and the client brought action against the partner to recover the sum so embezzled in February, 1896. Held, that the action came within Code Civ. Proc. § 339, as being for money had and received, and, since it was not brought within two years from the time the right of action accrued, recovery was barred.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Thomas Gibson against Barclay Henley. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Henley & Costello (Crittenden Thornton, of counsel), for appellant. Samuel Knight, for respondent.

SMITH, C. The appellant, Henley, was sued as a member of the law firm of Henley & McSherry, doing business in San Francisco during the years 1892-93, and judgment recovered against him for $602.50 and costs. McSherry was made party to the complaint, but was not served. The suit was commenced February 4, 1896,—within three years, but not within two years, of the accrual of the cause of action. The defendant pleaded the two-years statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 339). The sole question involved in this appeal is as to the bar of the statute pleaded, and this again turns upon the question whether the action is to be regarded as an action for relief on the ground of fraud, or merely as an action on contract, or for money had and received. If the latter, the action is barred; otherwise not. The facts on which the question turns are as follows: Henley & McSherry and one Hart of New York were attorneys for the plaintiff in the matter of an estate in process of settlement in Brooklyn, N. Y., in which plaintiff was interested. Hart, on or about February 8, 1893, having collected the money coming to the plaintiff, transmitted to Henley & McSherry, by mail, a check for $445, payable to the order of the plaintiff. This check was received by McSherry, who, it is found, obtained and embezzled the money. The plaintiff did not learn the fact of the embezzlement of the money until June 2, 1893,—within three years, but not within two years, of the commencement of the suit, which occurred February 4, 1896. There is no allegation that the defendant, Henley, participated in or knew of, or received the benefit of, the money embezzled; indeed, it is expressly found that he did not know of it until on or about November 25, 1893. On this state of facts it is very clear that there is no cause of action for fraud against the defendant, Henley. The complaint shows a fraud committed by his partner, McSherry, but it is not pretended that Henley was in any way connected with it, otherwise than by the existence of the partnership relation. By force of this relation he became responsible for the money received by McSherry, and also for the damages caused by the fraud, if any; but he did not become guilty of the fraud, nor could he be sued directly for it. There are certain cases where all the members of a firm become participes criminis in a tort, and may be jointly sued. But this is not the case where the only liability for the tort arises out of the partnership relation. In such cases they are responsible only on the principle of agency. 1 Lindl. Partn. 147, 149, 150, et seq.; 1 Bates, Partn. §§ 467, 468, 474-478; Civ. Code, §§ 2330, 2431, 2443. Thus, e. g., where a trespass has been committed by one of the partners in the conduct of the firm business, the offending partner may be sued in trespass, or all the partners jointly in case, but not in trespass. Moreton v. Hardern, 4 Barn. & C. 223. So, in the present case, the plaintiff might have sued McSherry for the fraud, but could not have joined Henley; or he might sue both on the firm obligation,—as he has in fact done. It follows that the action was barred by the statute, and, as this appears from the specific facts found, a new trial will be unnecessary. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment on the findings for the defendant.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment on the findings for the defendant.

WHEELER v. KARNES. (S. F. 1,649.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1900.)
MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—APPEAL—BOND —SURETIES—SUFFICIENCY—EXCEPTIONS—STAY OF SALE.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 948, authorizes the appellee, on appeal from a judgment directing the sale of real estate, to except to the sufficiency of the sureties on the bond required by section 945 to be given by the appellant in order to stay proceedings, at any time within 30 days after the filing of the bond, and declares that, unless within 20 days after the appellant has been served with notice of such exceptions the sureties justify, the judgment appealed from shall be no longer stayed. Held, that where a decree of foreclosure of a real-estate mortgage was appealed from, and on June 2d appellant filed a sufficient stay bond, but a mortgage sale was had June 3d, and 13 days after the sale appellee excepted to the sureties, who failed to justify, the sale should have been vacated, as the bond operated as a stay until the expiration of the period allowed for justification.

2. That some of the sureties on a bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 945, requiring that, in order to stay proceedings on appeal from a decree foreclosing a real-estate mortgage, appellant must give an undertaking as therein prescribed, were on the bond twice, for different sums, did not vitiate it.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 945, requires that, on appeal from a decree foreclosing a real-estate mortgage, proceedings cannot be stayed unless appellant execute a bond conditioned that during the possession of the property by him he will not commit waste; that, if the decree be affirmed and the appeal dismissed, he will pay the value of the occupation of the premises until delivery thereof, and pay any deficiency arising on mortgage sale. Held, that it was not necessary that the court's order for the bond to stay proceedings on appeal from a decree of foreclosure should name the separate amounts for waste, occupation, and deficiency.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Suit by C. O. Wheeler against Mary Ellen Karnes and others to foreclose a mortgage. From an order refusing to set aside a sale of mortgaged premises under the decree of foreclosure, defendant Karnes appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Thompson and C. C. Merriam (Lloyd & Wood, of counsel), for appellant. Horace Hawes and H. H. Welch, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Judgment in the foreclosure action was entered November 19, 1896, against the appellant, Karnes, and others. On April 8, 1897, the appellant took an appeal to this court from the judgment, by giving and serving notice of appeal and filing a $300 undertaking, which appeal is still pending. 57 Pac. 893. Afterwards the commissioner appointed to sell the mortgaged premises gave notice of a sale thereof to take place June 3, 1897. On May 29, 1897, the judge of the court below made an order fixing the amount of a bond to stay proceedings, under the provisions of section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, at $3,050; and on June 2d appellant filed a stay bond in that amount, and notified the attorneys for plaintiff that such bond had been filed; and on June 3, 1897, before any attempted sale, she notified the commissioner of the filing of such bond, and that no exception to the sureties thereon had been made, and objected to and protested against any sale being made. Nevertheless the commissioner proceeded on said June 3d and made the sale. On June 16th, 13 days after the sale, plaintiff excepted to the sureties, and they failed to justify. Afterwards, in May, 1898, appellant, on due notice, moved the court to vacate the sale as void because made under the circumstances above stated, and on May 27, 1898, the motion was regularly heard and denied. From the order denying the motion this present appeal is taken.

We think that it was error to refuse to set aside the sale. The fact that after the sale there was an exception to the sureties, and they failed to justify, did not make the bond inoperative at the time the sale was made. The whole matter is one of statutory regulation, and the statute governs irrespective of equitable considerations. The provision of the statute on the subject (section 948, Code Civ. Proc.) is that the adverse party may except to the sureties at any time within 30 days after the filing of the undertaking, and that unless the sureties, or other sureties, justify within 20 days thereafter, "execution of the judgment, order or decree appealed from is no longer stayed." But the execution is stayed until the expiration of the time allowed for the justification, and therefore in the case at bar, as the stay was operative when the sale was made, the latter was unauthorized and invalid. Of course, some injustice might be done a judgment creditor by the filing of a stay bond with sureties not having sufficient pecuniary ability, but the legislature has not made provision for such contingency. See Duncan v. Times-Mirror Co., 109 Cal. 605, 42 Pac. 147. At the worst the judgment creditor would only suffer some delay through the necessity of postponing the sale until the time had arrived for the justification of the sureties.

The stay bond was sufficient in form and amount. The fact that some of the sureties are on it twice, for different sums, does not vitiate it, and the affidavits accompanying the undertaking were clearly sufficient.

The order of the judge fixing the amount of the stay bond was proper and sufficient in form. Boob v. Hall, 105 Cal. 413, 38 Pac. 977. It was not necessary for the judge to name in the order separate amounts for waste, occupation, and deficiency. It was sufficient to name the whole amount which in his judgment would be necessary to meet the requirements of section 495, although the undertaking itself must contain covenants for each of the matters covered by that section. The order appealed from is reversed.

NICOLL v. WELDON et al. (L. A. 779.)

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—TERMS OF DEFAULT—INJUNCTION.

1. An order setting aside a default for excusable negligence and inadvertence, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, will not be reversed on appeal unless the trial court is clearly shown to have abused its discretion.

2. The delay of a party in making application to have a default set aside for inadvertence and excusable neglect is to be considered by the trial court in determining whether the default shall be set aside.

3. Where the sum which the court requires the defendant to pay to the plaintiff, as terms on which a default will be set aside, is not shown to be inadequate, it will be sustained on appeal.

4. Where an interlocutory injunction granted in a suit to obtain a perpetual injunction is made perpetual by a decree entered by default, the interlocutory injunction will remain in full force on the default being set aside.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Suit by one Nicoll against one Weldon and others. From an order setting aside a judgment by default, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. Brundage, for appellant. Alvin Fay, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. After judgment had been entered against the respondents in this action upon their default, they made application to the court to have the judgment set aside and leave granted them to answer, upon the ground that their default and the judgment entered thereon was taken against them through inadvertence and excusable neglect, and in support of their motion presented affidavits setting forth the facts upon which they relied. At the hearing of the motion no counter affidavits were filed, and the court granted their motion upon the condition that they pay into court for the use of the plaintiff the sum of $25. From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

The granting or denying a motion to set aside the default of a defendant is so largely a matter of discretion with the trial court that, unless it is clearly made to appear that there has been an abuse of this discretion, this court declines to set aside its order. Especially are we indisposed to review its action when it has set aside the default, and it does not appear that the plaintiff has sustained any prejudice thereby. This discretion of the court is best exercised when it tends to bring about a judgment upon the merits of the controversy between the parties. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc., is a remedial provision, and is to be liberally construed, so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits, and to give to the party claiming in good faith to have a substantial defense to the action an opportunity to present it. Buell v. Emerich, 85 Cal. 116, 24 Pac. 644; Harbaugh v. Water Co., 109 Cal. 70, 41 Pac. 792; Melde v. Reynolds (Cal.) 52 Pac. 491. It is for this reason that we more readily listen to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default than where the motion has been granted, since in such case the defendant may be deprived of a substantial right, whereas it may be assumed, if nothing to the contrary is shown, that the plaintiff will be able at any time to establish his cause of action. If, for any reason, he will be unable to do so, that fact should be made to appear; but, if he is merely subjected to delay or inconvenience by having the default set aside, he can be compensated therefor by the terms which the court will impose as the condition of granting the motion.

In the present case the court was satisfied from the evidence presented to it that the neglect of the defendants was excusable, and we see no reason for questioning its conclusion in that respect. When this fact had been determined by the court, it was its duty to grant the motion upon such terms as it should deem to be just. The delay in making the application after the judgment had been rendered was a matter to be considered by that court in determining whether to grant the relief, and the terms which it imposed as a condition of granting the motion must, in the absence of any contrary showing, be held to be ample compensation to the plaintiff. It does not appear in the present case that the plaintiff will be materially, if at all, injured by the delay. He seeks by the action an injunction against the defendants for doing certain acts, and at the commencement of the action obtained a preliminary injunction against them. The judgment obtained by him, and the writ of injunction issued thereon, had the effect merely to make permanent the previous restraining order; and the preliminary injunction is not impaired, nor are the defendants released from its effect, by setting aside the final judgment. The order is affirmed.

HAWK v. BARTON. (Sac. 736.)

LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS—ACTION ON AGREEMENT TO PAY JUDGMENT.

1. An action in 1896, on an agreement in 1893 to pay a certain judgment recovered in 1890, is not barred by the five-years limitations prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 336, providing that action on a judgment must be commenced within five years, since such action rests on the agreement, and not on the judgment.

2. Where a third person has agreed with a judgment debtor to pay the judgment, and the creditor holds both the judgment and the agreement, he is not bound to proceed first against the judgment debtor, but may sue on the agreement, as the latter is not merely a contract of indemnity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Matt F. Johnson, Judge.

Action by E. L. Hawk against O. L. Barton. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

White & Seymour, for appellant. A. J. Bruner, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action on a contract. Defendant demurred to the complaint for insufficiency of facts, and also for the reason that the action is barred by section 336, Code Civ. Proc. Defendant had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals. The complaint alleges that on May 12, 1890, one Matthew Lennox obtained a deficiency judgment for the sum of $628.66, arising out of a foreclosure suit, against one W. P. Harlow, and that the said judgment is unsatisfied, unpaid, and unreleased; that on May 16, 1893, defendant herein entered into a written contract with Harlow, which recites that defendant on December 12, 1892, had agreed to purchase a certain mine known as the "Harlow Mine," situated in Placer county, for the consideration of $15,000, and that since said contract of purchase, to wit, on said May 16, 1893, Harlow had delivered to defendant a deed to said mine, duly executed and acknowledged. The contract then reads: "Now, as part of the consideration for said deed, the undersigned agrees and binds himself as follows to the said W. P. Harlow: First, to pay and satisfy a certain judgment in favor of Matthew Lennox against W. P. Harlow for the sum of six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and sixty-six cents, said judgment in superior court of El Dorado county, dated May 12, 1890." The contract then sets forth certain other payments agreed to be made by defendant, not necessary to be stated here. The contract is signed, "O. L. Barton." Harlow assigned this contract to plaintiff, December 12, 1895. The complaint also avers that Lennox assigned his interest in the judgment to plaintiff on July 7, 1896, and it is alleged that no part of the judgment has been paid, but the whole thereof is due and unpaid; that defendant was notified by plaintiff of said assignments before this action was commenced and demand made upon him to pay and satisfy said judgment, but that defendant refused, and still refuses, to pay the same or any part thereof. There is no brief for respondent, and we are not advised as to the grounds on which the demurrer was sustained. The complaint was filed October 12, 1896, less than four years from the date of the agreement of defendant to pay the judgment. The five-years statute (section 336) relates to judgments, and we suppose defendant's notion was that the action rested on the judgment, and not on the contract. In this we think he erred. The action was founded on a written contract, and was not barred. Code Civ. Proc. § 337. We can only surmise the remaining ground upon which the demurrer was sustained, namely, that the contract was merely one of indemnity. But by its terms it was plainly an agreement to pay and satisfy a certain judgment for a certain sum of money, the full consideration for which defendant had received. Plaintiff is the owner and holder of both the judgment against Harlow and the agreement of Barton to pay it. Plaintiff may look to defendant, whose performance would have the effect to discharge the judgment. He is not bound to look first or at all to Harlow, the judgment debtor; for he holds Barton's written agreement, executed for a good and valuable consideration, to pay this judgment. Whether Barton can by proper plea show that he is discharged from liability on his contract for the reason that the judgment against Harlow was barred when assigned to plaintiff is a question not raised by the demurrer, since the action is on Barton's contract, and not on the Lennox-Harlow judgment, and the only statute pleaded is that relating to judgments. We advise that the judgment be reversed.

DIVORCE—CRUELTY—MENTAL SUFFERING—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. Whether conduct alleged in the complaint causes such grievous mental anguish as to constitute a ground for divorce is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from the testimony.

2. Where the evidence before the court below is not in the record, and there are no findings of fact, it must be assumed, in support of a judgment for divorce, that the evidence was sufficient to support the allegations of the complaint.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Bill for divorce by W. T. Curl against Ellen J. Curl. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter Bordwell, for appellant. Diehl & Chambers, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant for a divorce, and set forth in his complaint certain conduct by her which he alleged had caused him great suffering and grievous mental anguish. The conduct with which the defendant was thus charged was that she had at a certain date clandestinely visited the house and home of another man during the absence of his family, and had secretly remained there with him for more than one hour, and had at divers other times secretly and clandestinely met him, and in company with him gone to places unknown to the plaintiff, and had remained away for several hours, and that he had at divers times visited the home of the plaintiff and defendant during the absence of the plaintiff, and while the defendant was alone, and upon each of said occasions had remained in said house in company with the defendant alone for several hours. The defendant made no answer to the complaint, but suffered default, and, after hearing proofs of the matters alleged, the court granted the divorce. The present appeal is taken from this judgment, without any bill of exceptions.

Whether the conduct of the defendant, as above set forth in the complaint, caused the plaintiff grievous mental anguish, was a question of fact to be determined by the court from the testimony before it at the hearing. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660; Fleming v. Fleming, 95 Cal. 430, 30 Pac. 566; Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 52 Pac. 298. The evidence before the trial court is not before us, and, as there are no findings of fact, it must be assumed in support of the judgment that the evidence was sufficient to support the allegations of the complaint, and that the court found therefrom that the conduct of the defendant had caused the plaintiff grievous mental anguish. If so, she was guilty

JURY—COURT RULES—COMPLIANCE.

Where a party fails to comply with a rule of the trial court requiring a party demanding a jury to deposit the fees necessary therefor before the commencement of the trial, the denial of a jury trial is not error.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Joseph Naphtaly and another against Stefano Rovegno and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James A. Devoto, for appellants. Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action for a partition of certain described land. The defendants Rosa Rovegno and Giacomo Rovegno appeal from an order denying their motions for a new trial. The only point which they insist on for a reversal of the order is that the court below erred in denying their demand for a jury. Whether or not certain issues in the case were of such a character as to give to appellants the general right to have them tried before a jury is a question not necessary to be here determined; for we think that the court, for specific reasons hereinafter mentioned, did not err in refusing the demand. The case was tried on the 20th of October, 1896, but it had been on the trial calendar several weeks prior to that time, marked as a "court" case, as distinguished from a "jury" case, in accordance with the custom of the court. This fact was well known to the parties, and appellants never asked to have it changed from "court" to "jury," and had not demanded a jury until the said 30th of October. On the latter day, when the case came on regularly to be tried, one of the defendants (Stefano Rovegno) moved for a continuance, and, the motion having been denied, demanded a jury, and the demand was denied. Then these appellants, who had not joined in the motion for a continuance, also demanded a jury, and their demand was refused. On September 20th the case had been called for trial, and appellants had answered "Ready" without any intimation that they desired a jury; but, owing to the number of cases before it on the calendar, it was not reached until October 20th, at which time there was no jury in attendance. The record at this stage merely shows the naked facts that appellants made a demand for a jury, and that the court denied it. Nothing further appears. But in another part of the record it is shown that there was a rule of court providing that "a party demanding a jury shall before the commencement of the trial deposit with the clerk of the court the fees necessary therefor,"—specifying the amount; and appellants did not make nor offer to make such deposit. In Adams v. Crawford, 116 Cal. 495, 48 Pac. 488, it was held that such a rule is reasonable, and must be complied with. Under these circumstances it does not appear that the court erred in denying the demand for a jury, and such denial does not, therefore, warrant a new trial. The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MACHIADO. (Cr. 609.)

LARCENY—INDICTMENT—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—IMPEACHMENT—INSTRUCTION.

1. An indictment sufficiently describes the stolen property as "one cow, the same being the property then and there of H."

2. In a criminal case, refusal to charge that the jury have a right to consider that innocent men have been convicted, and to consider the danger of convicting an innocent man in weighing the evidence whether there is reasonable doubt as to his guilt, is proper.

3. In a prosecution for larceny of a cow a witness had testified to finding on the premises of accused a "slunk" calf,—that is, one that had been taken from its mother,—and that it had been taken from the stolen cow, to which no objection nor motion to strike out was made. Held, that a question asking for the appearance of the calf as to when it had been taken from its mother, and his answer giving the facts on which his conclusion was based, were not objectionable as assuming that the calf had been taken from "a" cow; not "the" cow,—that is, from the stolen cow.

4. Where a witness, in a prosecution for the larceny of a cow, had testified in reference to a hide found on the premises of accused, but had not testified that any part of a brand on it was indistinguishable, a question, on cross-examination, asking what part of the brand was indistinguishable, was properly excluded.

5. A question to a witness, "Now, when you went to the butcher shop or slaughter house for the first time, you didn't go in?" was properly excluded for uncertainty, as it could not be understood whether it referred to the butcher shop or the slaughter house.

6. Where, in a prosecution for the larceny of a cow, a witness testified, without objection, to the finding of the carcasses of two calves in a certain locality, a question calling for their condition, and the answer to the effect that they were very much decomposed, which was favorable to accused as showing that they could not have come from the stolen cow, were properly admitted.

7. Admission of testimony as to statements of a third person to one accused of a crime, though not accompanied with proof of the conduct of accused, was not error, where accused did not move to strike it out.

8. In a larceny prosecution, a witness testifying that the stolen property belonged to one person cannot be impeached by showing that in another case he had testified that it belonged to another.

9. In a criminal case, a question of one witness as to declarations of another, who was not himself questioned in relation thereto, was properly stricken out.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

John Machado was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Grave & Graves, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for respondent.

SMITH, C. The defendant was indicted with another for the crime of grand larceny. The property stolen is described as "one cow, the same being the property then and there of Hathaway and Branch," etc. The indictment was demurred to on the ground of the insufficiency of this description. The description, I think, was sufficiently certain. 12 Enc. Pl. & Prac. pp. 977, 983, et seq.; People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 355, affirmed in People v. Ah Woo, 28 Cal. 211; People v. Stanford, 64 Cal. 27, 28 Pac. 106.

It is claimed the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction: "The jury have a right to consider that innocent men have been convicted, and to consider the danger of convicting an innocent man in weighing the evidence to determine whether there is reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt." The instruction is substantially similar to an instruction refused in People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 185, 222, 48 Pac. 75, and comes within the ruling in that case.

Objections are made to numerous rulings of the court on the evidence, but none of them are well taken. The witness Avila had testified, without objection, as to finding on the premises of defendant what he called "a 'slunk' calf,—that is, a calf that had been taken from the cow,"—and was asked, "What was the appearance of the calf, when you saw it, as to when it had been taken from the cow?" The question, and also the answer, which simply gave the facts on which the witness' conclusion was based, were proper. It may be added that the objection was that the question assumed that the calf "had been taken from 'a' cow"; not "taken from 'the' cow,"—i. e. from "the stolen cow," as stated in the brief. The witness had testified some time before that the calf was taken from the stolen cow, giving his reasons; but no objection was made, nor was there any motion to strike out. The question to Avila, referring to the brand on the hide found on defendant's premises, and asking, in effect, which part of it was indistinguishable, was properly excluded. The witness had not testified that any part of it was indistinguishable. So, also, the question, "Now, when you went to the butcher shop or slaughter house for the first time, you didn't go in?" was properly excluded for uncertainty; i. e. because it could not be understood whether it referred to the butcher shop or the slaughter house. The rulings of the court with reference to the testimony of the witness Cook were also unobjectionable. There was no objection to his testimony that he had found the carcasses of two calves in the creek south of the slaughter house. That evidence had been given without objection. The objection was to the question, "What was the condition of those two carcasses?" and the answer, which was that "they were very much decomposed," was favorable to the defendant as showing that they could not have come from the stolen cow. Nor was it error to allow the question as to what was said by Martinez to the defendant on the occasion referred to in the question. The rule is that such evidence is proper, but must be accompanied with proof of the conduct of the accused, in default of which it may be stricken out. People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697; People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 513, 37 Pac. 512. The prosecution did not offer the additional proof, but there was no motion to strike out. Indeed, the answer could not have had any influence on the minds of the jury, and, if erroneous, would have been harmless. The questions asked this witness with a view of impeaching him were inadmissible. Most of them seem to have been designed to bring out the fact that in a criminal complaint made by the witness against one Espinoza he had sworn that the cow in question was the property of Avila. But the witness had not testified otherwise in this case. The evidence was clearly inadmissible. The court did not err in striking out the testimony of Silvers as to declarations of Avila. Avila had not been questioned as to such declaration. The same statement was afterwards repeated by the witness without objection on the part of the prosecution. The question of the prosecution to the same witness, objected to by defendant, was not improper in cross-examination, and the answer could not possibly have affected the result one way or the other. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

HARMLESS ERROR—SUSTAINING DEMURRER TO CROSS COMPLAINT — CHATTEL MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE — DECREE — SALE — ORDER FOR IMMEDIATE POSSESSION.

1. As by Code Civ. Proc. § 462, new matter contained in the answer is deemed controverted by plaintiff, it presents an issue substantially the same as would be presented by an answer to a cross complaint alleging the same matter; and in such a case, where findings were waived in a trial to the court, the presumption being that it found on all matters of fact in issue necessary to support the judgment for plaintiff, and hence found against defendant as to the new matter alleged in the answer, error, if any, in sustaining a demurrer to the cross complaint alleging such new matter, was harmless.

2. A decree on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage properly ordered the commissioner appointed by consent of counsel to execute the same to take immediate possession of the incumbered property for the purpose of the sale, since that is made necessary by Code Civ. Proc. § 698, providing that, "the officer making the sale must deliver the property to the purchaser."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; George H. Bahrs, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Investment Company, a corporation, against Anna Ross. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Shay, for appellant. J. H. Long, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The action is one to foreclose a chattel mortgage. Judgment went for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals upon the judgment roll. The complaint is in the usual form. The answer admits the execution of the note and mortgage, but avers that at the time of its execution it was agreed and understood that the plaintiff would not seek to foreclose so long as defendant paid the interest; that defendant had tendered the interest to plaintiff, who had refused to receive it. By way of cross complaint the defendant set up the same matter of the parol agreement made at the time of giving the note and mortgage, as stated in the answer, and asks that said note and mortgage be reformed according to said parol agreement. The demurrer to the cross complaint was sustained, and this is urged as one of the errors on appeal. The new matter contained in the answer in reference to the parol agreement between the parties at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage is deemed in law controverted by the opposite party. Code Civ. Proc. § 462. An issue was therefore presented substantially the same as would have been presented by an answer to the cross complaint, had the same been allowed to stand. At the trial findings were waived, but it will be presumed that the court found upon all the matters of fact in issue necessary to support the judgment, and therefore found against the defendant as to the alleged parol agreement. Blanc v. Mining Co., 95 Cal. 524, 30 Pac. 765; Bank v. Kowalsky, 105 Cal. 42, 38 Pac. 517. Assuming, therefore, that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the cross complaint,—which, however, it is not necessary to decide,—the error would be altogether harmless, and hence no ground for reversal. Blakely v. Blakely, 89 Cal. 325, 26 Pac. 1072; Duffy v. Duffy, 104 Cal. 602, 38 Pac. 443.

In the decree of foreclosure one Kerrigan, by consent of counsel, was appointed a commissioner for the purpose of carrying out and executing said decree. And it was further ordered that said commissioner take immediately possession of the incumbered property, and proceed to sell the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to satisfy the judgment and costs. The appellant attacks this portion of the decree directing the commissioner to take possession of the property as being without authority of law. There is nothing in this contention. The commissioner is simply a substitute for the sheriff, and was appointed by the consent of the appellant; and he must make the sale in like manner as the sheriff would be required to do. The property here must be taken into possession, for, being capable of manual delivery, "the officer making the sale must deliver to the purchaser the property." Code Civ. Proc. § 698. Judgment affirmed.

Action by the Bank of Ukiah against John S. Reed and others. From an order denying a motion to vacate and set aside their default and the judgment thereon, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

HARRISON, J. After judgment had been entered against the appellants upon their default, they moved the court to vacate and set aside their default and the judgment thereon, and from the order refusing their motion the present appeal has been taken. The complaint was filed January 21, 1896, and, service of the summons issued thereon having been had upon the defendant, John S. Reed, a demurrer to the complaint was filed on his behalf February 1, 1896. Service was made upon the defendant Anna M. Reed March 11, 1896. On that day, at the request of the defendants, an interview was had between them and the directors of the plaintiff, at the banking house of the latter, at which it was agreed on the part of the defendants that the demurrer of the defendant John S. Reed should be withdrawn, and that Mrs. Reed should make default in the suit, and that upon payment by the defendants of $600, on or before July 15, 1896, the plaintiff would not take judgment until January 2, 1897. Mrs. Reed thereupon appeared in the action, and filed her consent that default be taken against her. A stipulation was also filed by John S. Reed consenting that his demurrer be withdrawn and his default entered. April 27, 1896, the plaintiff caused the defaults of the defendants to be entered. The defendants did not pay the $600, and on September 18, 1897, judgment was entered in the action for the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property. September 29, 1897, the defendants moved to set aside and vacate the default and judgment, upon the ground that they were entered through mistake and inadvertence on their part, and presented evidence in support of their motion. The court, after hearing the same, denied the motion, and the present appeal is taken from that order.

In the affidavits presented by the defendants in support of their motion they set forth, as the grounds upon which they claim the relief, that at the time they agreed to withdraw the demurrer, and consented that default might be entered against them, the attorney for the plaintiff agreed with them that no further action should be taken in the case without giving them previous notice thereof; and, further, that after said agreement had been made the president of the plaintiff agreed with them, in substance, that no judgment should be taken against them until after the year 1897, and that they might have the whole of that year in which to pay their indebtedness, and that their failure to appear or take any steps in the suit had been by reason of their reliance upon these agreements. At the hearing upon the motion there was presented on behalf of the plaintiff a written memorandum, in which was expressed the consent of the defendants that their defaults be entered, and the agreement on the part of the plaintiff not to take judgment until January 2, 1897. It was also shown that at the interview between the defendants and the directors, at which the agreement was made, its terms were openly stated and discussed, and that, after the memorandum had been prepared, it was read to the defendants, and its terms assented to by them, and that a copy of it was taken by Mrs. Reed. Affidavits by directors who were present at the meeting were also presented, in which they stated that no agreement was made of any extensions of time, except as stated in said memorandum, and that nothing was said at the meeting about giving further notice of any steps to take judgment. The attorney for the plaintiff was also present at that interview, and testified at the hearing of this motion that neither at that time, nor at any other time, did he agree to any extension of time beyond the 2d day of January, 1897, or to give to the defendants any notice of any further steps to be taken in the suit. The president of the bank testified that he never told the defendants, or either of them, that they could have all of the year 1897 in which to pay their indebtedness, or agreed with them, or either of them, to give to them any time beyond that expressed in the memorandum. Upon the conflict of evidence thus presented, it must be assumed that in denying the defendants' motion the superior court determined in favor of the plaintiff. In the face of the evidence contained in the written memorandum the burden was upon the defendants to show that they were entitled to any further notice before the entry of judgment, as well as to additional time beyond the 2d day of January, 1897, before judgment should be entered against them. We cannot say, from an examination of the evidence presented to the superior court, that its determination was erroneous, or that it abused its discretion in denying the motion of the defendants. The order is affirmed.

McINTYRE v. HAUSER. (L. A. 757.)

CHATTEL MORTGAGES — SALE — ASSENT OF MORTGAGEE — ASSIGNMENT OF PRICE — PLEADING — AMBIGUITY — CONSTRUCTION — DEBT — EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT — ESSENTIALS — GARNISHMENT.

1. In an action by a judgment creditor of B. to recover the amount of his debt, for which defendant had been garnished, the complaint alleged that B., by written instrument, had sold defendant certain cattle on which there was a chattel mortgage to others; that the mortgagees, by written statement attached to the contract of sale, consented thereto on condition that the proceeds of the sale be paid to them; and that defendant, in spite of plaintiff's garnishment, paid the money to the mortgagees. Held, that a demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, since the complaint must be construed to allege a contract requiring the money arising from the sale to be paid to the mortgagees by defendant, in which case it was not subject to garnishment by a creditor of B.

2. Where the owner of cattle subject to a chattel mortgage sold them by written contract, and the mortgagees, by written instrument attached thereto, consented to the sale on condition that the purchaser pay the money arising from the sale to them, though the purchaser knew nothing of the conditional assent, the transaction was an equitable assignment to the mortgagees of the vendor's claim to the purchase money.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Allen McIntyre against Julius Hauser to recover the amount of a debt owed to plaintiff by James Brown, for which defendant had been garnished. From a judgment for defendant on demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Leonard & Morris (H. Goodcell, of counsel), for appellant. Isidore B. Dockweiler, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. In this action a general and special demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment went against him, and this appeal is taken therefrom. The sufficiency of the complaint is the question before the court. In passing upon this question all ambiguities and uncertainties found in the pleading will be construed against the pleader. The facts are these: James Brown owned a herd of cattle upon which third parties held a chattel mortgage. Brown sold these cattle to the defendant, the sale being evidenced by a contract in writing. To this contract was appended a written statement to the effect that the cattle were mortgaged to these third parties (naming them) to secure the payment of an indebtedness owing to them by Brown, and it was further stated by the complaint that "they approved and consented to such sale to said defendant, provided the money derived therefrom was paid to them; which said statement was signed by them." In view of what has been said relating to the construction which should be given ambiguities appearing upon the face of the complaint, the last allegation of the pleading quoted will be construed to the effect that the mortgagees consented to the sale provided the money derived therefrom was paid to them by Hauser, the purchaser of the cattle. Especially must this construction of the pleading be maintained when we find that a special demurrer was directly pointed to this ambiguity. The further facts, as disclosed by the complaint, are these: Before the purchase price was paid, this plaintiff, a judgment creditor of Brown, garnished the money in the hands of Hauser. Hauser, regardless of the garnishment, paid the money to the mortgagees, and he is now sued by the judgment creditor for the amount. Upon the foregoing state of facts the question is presented, to whom did Hauser owe the money at the date of the garnishment? If he owed it to Brown, then he is liable in this action. If he owed it to the mortgagees, he is not liable. There can be but one answer to this question. If the contract of sale, taken in connection with the consent to the sale by the mortgagees, be construed as a tripartite agreement,—which construction the allegation of the pleading would fairly justify,—then it is manifest the money was owing to the mortgagees; and a direct promise upon the part of Hauser to pay it to them formed a part of the contract. This character of transaction would constitute a novation pure and simple. But, even eliminating from the agreement any question of Hauser's promise to pay to the mortgagees the proceeds derived from the sale of the cattle, still by every fair construction of the pleading the fact remains that the understanding between Brown and the mortgagees was that the money should be paid by Hauser to them. Certainly there was ample consideration for such an agreement, and that agreement constituted an equitable assignment by Brown to them of the money due from Hauser. The fact that this plaintiff knew nothing of the transaction is immaterial, and likewise it is immaterial if Hauser knew nothing of it. If the mortgagees could have sued Hauser for the money, and recovered, then he owed Brown nothing, and this plaintiff secured no rights by his garnishment. The moment the sale was made of the cattle, the amount due from Hauser became a chose in action, and, of course, was assignable by Brown. It is elementary that an assignment of a chose in action takes precedence over a subsequent garnishment (Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 38), and as to the particular facts which constitute an equitable assignment it is only necessary to refer to the early case of Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 403.

There is no question in this case as to the lien of the mortgages attaching to the proceeds of the sale of the cattle. Neither is the conclusion to which we have arrived opposed to the decision in Maier v. Freeman, 112 Cal. 8, 44 Pac. 357. The facts of the two cases are widely variant. In that case the sheep had not been sold at the time the agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee was made; and, in addition to that important fact, there the mortgagor was to receive the proceeds of the sale of the sheep. Here neither of these controlling circumstances is presented. In order to constitute an equitable assignment of a debt, no express words to that effect are necessary. If, from the entire transaction, it clearly appears that the intention of the parties was to pass title to the chose in action, then an assignment will be held to have taken place. There is no question of fraud involved, and the intention of the parties to clothe the mortgagees with title to the claim against Hauser is made out from the pleading. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

PORTLAND CRACKER CO. v. MURPHY.
(S. F. 1,637.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1900.)
JUDGMENTS—CONFORMITY TO VERDICT—VERDICT—DISREGARD OF INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The complaint in an action for the recovery of money alleged that the money was embezzled by defendant while acting as plaintiff's agent, and demanded judgment for the imprisonment of defendant until the money judgment demanded should be paid. The jury found a general verdict for plaintiff on the issue of the money demand, but found for defendant on a special issue submitting the question of embezzlement. Held, that the special and general verdicts were consistent. It was, therefore, proper to enter a money judgment in favor of plaintiff on the general verdict.

2. In an action for the recovery of money alleged to have been embezzled by defendant while acting as plaintiff's agent, the court charged, in effect, that, if plaintiff failed to prove the fraudulent appropriation, the verdict should be for defendant on that issue. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff on the money demand and for defendant on the issue as to fraudulent appropriation was not contrary to the instructions.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by the Portland Cracker Company against A. H. Murphy. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Grove L. Johnson, John H. Hansen, and Garret W. McEnerney, for appellant. Charles H. Jackson, J. F. Riley, and Thornton & Merzbach, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The complaint alleges that the defendant embezzled and fraudulently misapplied and converted to his own use the sum of $1,271.94, which had come into his hands in the course of his employment as the agent and clerk of the plaintiff, and the complaint prays that judgment against the defendant may be had in said sum, and for costs of suit, and that the defendant be arrested and held to bail; that judgment may be entered against the person of said defendant that he be imprisoned until the payment of said sum; and for further relief. Upon the issuance of the summons plaintiff applied for and obtained an order for the arrest of the defendant under section 479, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc. The necessary affidavit and undertaking being furnished, the order for arrest was made, and the defendant was thereupon arrested, but was released on the same day upon giving an undertaking as required by section 487, Id. The answer denies that the defendant embezzled, fraudulently or otherwise misapplied, or converted to his own use, the sum of $1,271.94, or any other sum, which had come into his hands in the course of his employment as the agent or clerk of the plaintiff, or at all. Upon the issues presented the case was tried by a jury, and a general verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $750, and also found on the special issue submitted, to wit: "Did the defendant fraudulently appropriate the money of the plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint? Answer. No." Upon the coming in of the verdict the defendant moved the court to enter judgment in his favor upon the ground that the special issue controlled, and that the defendant was entitled to a judgment thereon. The court denied defendant's motion, and entered a money judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the general verdict.

The defendant appeals from the judgment so entered upon a bill of exceptions, and relies for a reversal upon two alleged errors: (1) That upon the verdict the judgment should have been for the defendant; (2) that the verdict is contrary to law, in this: that it is contrary to the instructions of the court. The theory of the defendant is that, inasmuch as the plaintiff alleged that the money had been embezzled and fraudulently appropriated, he cannot recover at all, unless the issue upon such allegation is found in its favor. In this appellant is clearly mistaken. The action is for the recovery of money in the hands of the defendant belonging to the plaintiff, and whether that money had been embezzled or fraudulently appropriated would not defeat the recovery of a simple money judgment for the amount of money in the hands of the defendant due the plaintiff; but, unless the issue in reference to embezzlement or fraudulent appropriation were found in favor of the plaintiff, it could not recover a judgment for the imprisonment of the defendant until the money found due should be paid, as in this state no person can be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud. Payne v. Elliot, 54 Cal. 339, was an action for the fraudulent conversion of mining stock. The plaintiff had judgment for the amount of the mining stock so converted, and a further judgment that the plaintiff was entitled to an order of arrest against the defendant until the same should be paid. On appeal it was held "that the court below did not err in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, or in rendering judgment for the plaintiff for the value of the stock and interest thereon from the time of the conversion until the time of the trial, but that the judgment for fraud exceeded the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled by his complaint"; that the averments thereof were not sufficient to support that portion of the judgment. The court below was therefore directed to strike from the judgment the portion in reference to the arrest of the defendant, and, thus modified, the judgment was affirmed. In Kullmann v. Grenebaum, 84 Cal. 98, 24 Pac. 49, the plaintiff had a money judgment in the court below, and appealed for the purpose of having the judgment modified by directing the court below to enter judgment in accordance with the facts found by the jury adjudging the defendants guilty of fraud, and directing process to issue against the person according to law. The court says: "This we decline to do, for the reason that the complaint sets up no fraud by defendants of which plaintiff can complain. * * * It may be conceded that the court was bound to enter judgment on the verdict of the jury, but, under the state of facts above pointed out, the court did not err in disregarding the verdict of the jury in respect of fraud;" and affirmed the judgment. Obersteller v. Assurance Co., 96 Cal. 645, 31 Pac. 587, is an appeal from a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant, in an action upon a policy of insurance. The answer of the defendant charged fraud on the part of the plaintiff in procuring the policy.

In that case there was a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $500, and also a special verdict, and upon the entry of the general and special verdicts defendant moved the court for a judgment for the defendant on the ground that the verdict found fraud upon the part of the plaintiff, which motion was denied; and the court, in its opinion, says: "The Code provides, 'Where a special finding of facts is inconsistent with the general verdict the former controls the latter, and the court must give judgment accordingly.' Code Civ. Proc. § 625. This proceeding is not authorized in any other case, and the general and special verdicts in this case are entirely consistent. The special verdict finds the total value of the property insured and destroyed to be the sum of five hundred dollars, and the general verdict is for that sum. If, in their special verdict, the jury had found the value of the property to be less than five hundred dollars, and had rendered a general verdict for that or a greater sum, it would as clearly be within the provision above quoted as it now as clearly is not. All that can now be said is that the jury found that plaintiff's loss was not so great as he represented it to be. That was favorable to the defendant. We think that finding was not conclusively a finding of fraud on the part of the plaintiff. Standing alone, it shows that he overestimated his property. Whether or not that vitiated the policy of insurance was a question not involved in the motion for judgment for the defendant upon the verdict. That motion, as we have before stated, could not be granted on any other ground than the one specified in the Code, viz. inconsistency between the general and special verdicts. The motion was properly denied." In this case the special verdict was not inconsistent with the general verdict. The complaint set forth a cause of action for a money demand, and also set forth facts which, if proven, would have justified a judgment for the arrest and detention of the defendant until the money judgment should be paid. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff on the issue of the money demand, although not to the amount claimed, and found in favor of the defendant on the issue of the embezzlement and fraudulent appropriation of the money. Clearly, when the defendant had money in his hands belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was entitled to a money judgment, although the defendant may not have been guilty of embezzlement or fraudulent appropriation. And such was the judgment entered in this case.

The appellant contends that the verdict is contrary to law, in that it is contrary to the following instruction: "The plaintiff has the burden of proving the fraudulent appropriation of the money by the defendant while acting as its agent, and the defendant is not required to prove that he did not make such appropriation. If the plaintiff has proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant did make such fraudulent approprition, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff, not exceeding the amount claimed by it in its complaint. On the other hand, if the plaintiff has failed to do this, your verdict must be for the defendant." But, when this instruction is taken in connection with the other instructions, it will be manifest that the meaning of the court was that, if the plaintiff failed to prove the fraudulent appropriation, the verdict should be for the defendant on that issue. In the other instructions the court says: "Should you find a verdict for the plaintiff, you must ascertain the amount of money which the defendant has fraudulently appropriated, and on this amount the plaintiff is entitled to interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the time of the conversion fixed in the complaint, to wit, February 12, 1896, up to the present time. Should you find a verdict for the plaintiff, you are requested to answer the following interrogatory: 'Did the defendant fraudulently appropriate the money of the plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint?' This interrogatory need not be answered should you find a verdict for the defendant." In other words, in order to find a verdict for the defendant, they would have to find that he had no money in his hands, either fraudulently or otherwise, belonging to the plaintiff; but they could find for the plaintiff on the money demand, and also find for the defendant that the money had not been fraudulently appropriated,—that is to say, simply a finding for the plaintiff as on a demand for money had and received by defendant to the use of the plaintiff. Judgment affirmed.

SALES—AGENCY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—APPEAL—JUDGMENT.

1. Where the issue was whether certain cattle purchased by defendant's superintendent had been purchased for defendant or by the superintendent individually, and the evidence was conflicting, and it could not be said that there was not substantial evidence to sustain a verdict in favor of plaintiff finding that the purchase was for defendant, the judgment based thereon would not be disturbed on appeal.

2. On an issue whether cattle purchased by the superintendent of a corporation had been purchased for the corporation or by him individually, that a note in part payment was signed by the superintendent individually was not conclusive as showing the sale to have been to him.

3. On an issue whether cattle purchased by the superintendent of a corporation had been purchased by him individually or for the corporation, evidence that the superintendent had made a similar purchase from other persons on behalf of the corporation was admissible.

4. On an issue whether cattle purchased by the superintendent of a corporation had been purchased for the corporation or by the superintendent for himself, if it was error to allow the seller of the cattle to read in evidence entries from a book kept by the superintendent, consisting of entries of account between himself and the corporation, the same was not prejudicial, the items of any significance being included in reports sent by the superintendent to the corporation.

5. Where the court charged that, if the jury found for plaintiff in any amount, they should add interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and the verdict was for a certain sum, with interest at ".07 per cent.," a judgment entered for the principal sum and interest at 7 per cent. was not erroneous on the ground that ".07" did not mean 7 per cent., since it was clearly a clerical error.

Action by the Lake Shore Cattle Company against the Modoc Land & Live-Stock Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Spencer & Raker and Clarence A. Raker, for appellant. G. F. Harris, H. L. Sprague, J. T. Richards, and E. C. Bonner, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to recover $4,800 and interest, balance due on an alleged sale of cattle by plaintiff to defendant, made November 6, 1892. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for the amount claimed, and judgment was rendered accordingly. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The transcript presents a dreary mass of matter covering over 800 printed pages, and should not have occupied more than one-fourth of that amount of space. It might be somewhat justly characterized by the comparison of "two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff," which Bassanio uses to illustrate the "reasons" of Gratiano. A good deal of the testimony of witnesses is given at length by question and answer. Many questions substantially the same are asked over and over again; and a very large part of the transcript is taken up with objections of counsel, the same objections being repeated many times. Under the head of "Errors of Law Occurring at the Trial" there are 499 separate specifications covering 126 pages; to the points that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and that it is against law, there are many other specifications; and there are, in addition, about 40 exceptions to the giving and refusing of instructions. Most, although not quite all, of these exceptions and specifications are mentioned in appellant's briefs, the briefs themselves covering over 200 printed pages. It is, therefore, entirely impracticable to undertake to notice appellant's points in detail. The respondent and appellant are corporations. It is averred in the complaint that the appellant, acting by and through its agent, W. H. Nelson, bought the cattle in question of respondent; and it is not disputed that one C. E. Crowder, superintendent of respondent, sold the cattle at the time mentioned in the complaint to said Nelson, who was then superintendent of the appellant. The number of cattle sold, the price, and the facts that about one-third of the purchase price was paid at the time, and that $4,800 was the balance remaining unpaid, are all admitted, or proved beyond question. The real merits of the case are involved in the question whether or not the purchase was made by Nelson as agent of and for the corporation appellant. Appellant contends that Nelson made the purchase entirely for himself individually; that he was not either the actual or ostensible agent of appellant for the purpose of making such purchase; and that, therefore, appellant was not bound by the transaction. Respondent contends that he was appellant's actual agent; and, moreover, that, whatever may have been the private understanding between him and appellant, the latter, by its acts, clothed him with ostensible authority upon which respondent had the right to rely. As to this question the evidence was conflicting. The headquarters of appellant was in the city of San Francisco, while its main business was carried on in Modoc county, several hundred miles distant from said city. Its business is described in its charter as "the dealing in, buying and selling, management and disposition of land and live stock, and everything pertaining thereto in all respects." It was incorporated in 1886, and a few months afterwards Nelson, as the minute book of the directors shows, was elected vice president and superintendent, and as such he was "authorized to sign checks, and make and sign contracts necessary for the proper performance of the business of the corporation." He was the only member of the corporation who lived in Modoc county; and from December, 1886, to April, 1893, during which period the sale here involved occurred, he was superintendent, and attended to all the business of appellant in that county. The appellant had a large tract of land in Modoc county, and raised and bought and sold cattle there, and the business was done entirely by and through Nelson, who was the only agent or representative of the appellant in that region of the country. These general facts were themselves strong evidence to the point that appellant had intrusted Nelson with all business in that remote country, and clothed him with authority to do all acts necessary to its transaction. We will not undertake to here review the evidence. It was "conflicting" within the rule so often stated, and it cannot be said that there was no substantial evidence to sustain the verdict. The fact so much relied on by appellant, that Nelson signed his individual name to the note given for the balance of the purchase price, is merely a circumstance more or less favorable to appellant's contention.

It is not by any means conclusive of the issue.

Many of appellant's objections were to evidence introduced by respondent to show that Nelson had made similar purchases of other persons, and we think that such evidence was entirely proper. There were also many objections to the testimony of Nelson upon the ground that he should not be allowed to testify as to his agency and his acts in purchasing the cattle for appellant. These objections were apparently on the theory that his declarations as to agency were not admissible; but he was present on the witness stand, testifying to the matters objected to, and we see no ground for rejecting his testimony. We see no point in the objections made to the introduction of the books of the appellant. They were produced in court by appellant as appellant's books in response to a demand made for their production. We have no doubt that appellant's objections to evidence introduced by respondent were properly overruled, except, perhaps, in one instance. Nelson himself kept a book in which he, as superintendent, made entries of items of account between him and appellant; and respondent was allowed, over appellant's objections, to read certain entries from that book. The point that this was error is not very strongly urged by appellant in the briefs; still it is made. Whether or not the entries in this book were strictly admissible under the general law as to books of account is a somewhat doubtful question; but we do not deem it necessary to definitely determine it, because most of the items of any considerable significance which were introduced in evidence were included in reports sent by Nelson, as superintendent, to the appellant, and the others were of too little importance to be prejudicial, or to warrant a reversal.

We see no error in the instructions given at the request of respondent. As to the instructions asked by appellant, the court gave the first 25 instructions asked, many of which are quite elaborate; and gave also 3 others with slight modifications. It would seem that these numerous instructions ought to include all that counsel could reasonably ask on one side of the case; and we think that they do. The instructions given presented the law of the case fairly and correctly to the jury, and sufficiently include whatever was correct in the instructions refused; and we do not think that any error was committed in the matter of giving and refusing instructions.

The court instructed the jury that, if they found for plaintiff in any amount, they should add to such amount interest from the time it became due until the date of the verdict "at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, simple interest"; and the verdict was for $4,800, "with interest at .07 per cent. per annum from November 6, 1892," until the date of the verdict. Judgment was entered for $4,800, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, and counsel for appellant strenuously contend that this was error, because ".07 per cent." does not mean "seven per cent." It is sufficient to say that the expression ".07" was clearly a clerical error, and must be construed as an intended compliance with the instructions of the court.

We have noticed the prominent facts of the case, and we deem it enough to say in conclusion that the record presents no ground for reversal of the judgment or of the order denying a new trial. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CORPORATIONS — CREDITORS AS STOCKHOLDERS — UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS — CONTRIBUTION — STIPULATION — ESTOPPEL — APPEAL.

1. A judgment creditor of a corporation sued to enforce unpaid balances on stock subscriptions of 15 stockholders. One of the defendants was also a judgment creditor of the corporation, but the action was dismissed as to him, and he became plaintiff by the court's order. The corporation owed no other debts. The original plaintiff's claim was paid by the 14 remaining defendants, under a stipulation in which none of the other plaintiff's rights were relinquished, and the court gave the 14 defendants a several judgment against such plaintiff by way of contribution, ignoring the fact that he was also a creditor of the corporation. Held, that such plaintiff was entitled to have the amount of his proportionate liability to the corporation on both claims deducted from his own claim, and the balance due him apportioned against the 14 defendants.

2. Where a creditor has the right to be subrogated to the rights of a corporation to claim unpaid balances due on shares, he does not lose that right by reason of the fact that he is a stockholder.

3. Where plaintiff's attorney entered into a stipulation with defendants solely on behalf of a co-plaintiff, reserving all plaintiff's rights, the fact that the attorney was also attorney for plaintiff did not render the agreement binding on plaintiff.

4. Where a subscriber for corporate stock sought to enforce subscriptions made under the same circumstances as his own, he could not repudiate his liability thereon under Civ. Code, § 359, providing that no corporation shall issue stock except for money paid, labor done, or property received.

5. Where stockholders agreed that shares should be deemed fully paid by payment of a stated amount less than the par value, a creditor, who was also a stockholder, could not compel the payment of the par value of shares owned by other stockholders, the creditor being a party to the agreement.

Action by Thomas Richardson and V. L. Fortin against the Chicago Packing & Provision Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying Wm. H. Jordan (H. M. Barstow, of counsel), for appellant. Edw. C. Robinson, B. McFadden, and Fitzgerald & Abbott, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover from the stockholders of defendant corporation the unpaid balance of their subscriptions. Defendants had judgment, from which, and from an order denying his motion for new trial, plaintiff V. L. Fortin appeals.

The action was originally brought by plaintiff Richardson, as a judgment creditor of defendant corporation, against 17 defendants, among them Fortin; but the action was dismissed as to him, and he became, by order of the court, a co-plaintiff. Judgment was afterwards entered by stipulation in favor of Richardson against the defendants severally excepting Lieb and Buttenbach (as to whom the action had been dismissed), and Fortin became the sole plaintiff, whose complaint was similar to that of Richardson. After Fortin had filed his complaint as co-plaintiff, the defendants obtained leave of court to file and did file a cross bill with the object of bringing in some 41 parties as co-defendants, who, it was alleged, were subscribers to the capital stock of defendant corporation, but had not been made defendants at the commencement of the action. The prayer of this cross complaint was that the persons named therein as co-defendants "be compelled to pay to these defendants filing this cross complaint, by way of contribution, such proportion of any judgment or judgments in favor of said Thomas Richardson or said V. L. Fortin which have been or may be recovered in this action as may be just and equitable in the action," and for further relief, etc. This cross complaint was served on 30-odd of such new parties, 3 of whom defaulted; the others answered severally. Fortin's complaint was answered by the original defendants, but the cross bill of the 14 defendants was not served on Fortin, nor was it answered by him.

The court found the number of shares subscribed by each of the 14 original defendants (the action having been dismissed as to defendants Fortin, Lieb, and Buttenbach); that said defendants had subscribed to the stock with the agreement among all the said original 17, including Fortin, with the corporation, that each of them should be liable to pay $50 per share, and no more, on shares of the par value of $100, and that said subscribed shares should be deemed fully paid up when said $50 per share had been paid thereon; that said agreement was well known to Fortin at the time he became a creditor of the corporation for the goods and merchandise and labor, the subject of his action, and that Fortin was himself a subscriber to 50 shares of said stock under said agreement; that there were 7 original corporators and promoters of the corporation, who are among the said 14 defendants, and were the directors and the only subscribers at that time; and "it was then unanimously agreed between and among themselves that it was for the best interests of the corporation to sell and dispose of the first half of the capital stock, to wit, 2,500 shares, at the price of $50 per share, for the purpose of raising working capital to start and carry on the business of the corporation"; and it was likewise so agreed that the said 7 original corporators should be required to pay $50 per share on their subscribed stock, and no more, and that, such payment being made, their shares should be deemed fully paid up, "and that all persons who should thereafter subscribe for said capital stock, until one-half thereof should be taken, should be required to pay the same price, to wit, $50 per share, and no more"; and it is found that Fortin had knowledge of this agreement when he became creditor of the corporation; that subscription books were opened by the said 7 directors (they being then the only subscribers), in which books such limitation of liability was stated, and all subscriptions to stock thereafter made by said 14 defendants and all others "were made in said books upon said terms"; that "said agreement among and by said directors was not evidenced by any formal resolution of the board of directors or the stockholders theretofore or at that time passed or entered in the records of the corporation, but was unanimously agreed to by said 7 directors and only stockholders, and on March 26, 1888, was ratified by resolution duly passed by the board of directors and entered upon the minutes of said board of directors"; that Fortin subscribed to 50 shares of said stock on February 9, 1888, upon the same terms as did the defendants; that all these agreements and the said subscriptions of stock thereunder "were each and all made openly and in good faith, and for the purpose of raising money to fairly launch a new and struggling enterprise, and not for the purpose of defrauding the corporation or its stockholders or creditors"; that $50 per share was the full value of said stock, and all that the subscribers were willing to subscribe therefor or become liable thereon; that all the subscribers to stock, of whom there were many besides the said 14 defendants and said plaintiff Fortin, received their stock under this agreement, and said Fortin "had full notice and knowledge of that fact before he sold and delivered, or agreed to sell or deliver, any part of the goods * * * for which he is seeking to recover in this action." The court then finds the sums subscribed by each of the 14 defendants and the amount each has paid thereon, and that Fortin has paid nothing on the 50 shares subscribed for by him; that the last meeting of the board was held April 4, 1888, since which time "it has ceased to meet and has not discharged any of the duties of a board of directors of said corporation; that on or about the — day of May, 1888, the defendant corporation ceased to exercise its corporate franchise, and then or thereabouts abandoned its corporate franchise, and ever since has failed and ceased to act as a corporation; that said corporation has no property or assets save and except its equitable asset represented by the unpaid subscriptions of the various subscribers to its capital stock, and has and had, at the time this action was commenced, no creditors save and except Thomas Richardson and V. L. Fortin, the plaintiffs herein." The court found that the judgment entered in favor of plaintiff Richardson was for $6,074.60, in pursuance of a stipulation entered into by said 14 defendants, and each was to pay and did pay his pro rata share thereof; and that said 14 defendants were indebted to the corporation for subscriptions to its stock the sum of $7,250, and no more; that they paid upon their subscriptions $7,275, including said Richardson judgment, in paying which some subscribers paid slightly more than their proportion, and others paid slightly less, the total overpayments being $100, and the underpayments $75.40, and that said defendants are indebted to the corporation for this latter amount, and no more. The court found that Fortin was indebted to the corporation for the unpaid subscription for 50 shares of stock, or $2,500, and that the judgment held by him against the corporation for which he sued was $6,514, entered on September 24, 1888, with interest at 7 per cent. from that date; that he realized thereon, through an execution duly issued, and sale of certain property of the corporation, a certain sum, leaving still due a deficiency of $4,992.50, which was docketed November 28, 1888, and is still unsatisfied.

As conclusions of law the court found, in effect: That the said 14 defendants were liable to the corporation only for any unpaid balance of $50 on each share subscribed for by them respectively; that, as Fortin had knowledge of the agreements herein stated before he sold or delivered the goods sued for, he has no greater rights against said defendants than against the corporation itself, and that Fortin is equally bound by said $50 per share agreements, and can exact no more than $50 per share on defendant's subscriptions; that the unpaid balance thereof is $75.40, and no more; that Fortin, "being an unpaid subscriber at the time these 14 defendants paid the Richardson judgment, is liable to said 14 defendants, by way of contribution, for his just proportion of said Richardson judgment, * * * and his proportion is $1,482, with interest * * *; making * * * $1,793.82." Decree was accordingly entered in favor of the 14 defendants severally against Fortin in sums varying according to their respective payments on the Richardson judgment. The stipulation to pay Richardson was signed by counsel for the 14 defendants, and at the time the attorney of Richardson was the attorney of Fortin, and it was stipulated that the Richardson "judgment shall in no respect affect the right of plaintiff V. L. Fortin to judgment, and shall not be an adjudication of any point or matter either against or in favor of said V. L. Fortin." The court made no findings as to the 30-odd new defendants, who were made parties to the action by the cross complaint of the 14 original defendants. Appellant contends that the decision is against law in the following particulars: (1) In failing to determine the issues arising upon the cross complaint of the 14 original defendants, and the answers thereto; (2) in adjudging Fortin indebted to these 14 defendants by virtue of his stock subscription; (3) in failing to adjudge Fortin entitled to recover the sum found due him on his judgment against the corporation; and (4) in deciding that the sum of $50 per share constituted the entire subscription liability of each defendant.

1. Assuming the validity of the agreement under which the stock was issued, and that it was binding on the stockholders who received shares under it, as between themselves, and that upon payment of 50 per cent. by a stockholder his liability to the corporation was fully discharged, did the payment to Richardson have the effect found by the court? Richardson and Fortin were both creditors, the latter being also a stockholder. The findings show that the total indebtedness of the corporation was made up of the two judgments held by Richardson and Fortin, respectively; the total debt was the sum of these two judgments; the 14 defendants and plaintiff Fortin, as stockholders, were respectively liable to the corporation to the extent of any unpaid balance of their stock, and the creditors were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the corporation. But the court treated the payment of Richardson's judgment by the 14 defendants not only as discharging them from liability to Fortin as a creditor, but as giving them a right to a several judgment against Fortin by way of contribution, entirely ignoring the fact that Fortin was a creditor of, as well as debtor to, the corporation. Fortin could not complain if he had agreed that these defendants might pay Richardson in full, and thus discharge their liability to the corporation. The stipulation, however, under which the 14 defendants paid the Richardson judgment expressly reserved to Fortin all rights in the pending action, and under that stipulation these defendants could not deprive Fortin of his right to contribution as a stockholder or his right as a creditor of the corporation. When the 14 defendants paid Richardson, it was subject to an equitable adjustment of their and Fortin's rights as stockholders and Fortin's rights as a creditor, as shown by the pleadings and evidence,

Simply stated: The 14 defendants and Fortin were liable for the two judgments sued upon, within the limit of $50 per share, to the extent of the unpaid balance of their subscribed stock. A judgment could not be entered against Fortin in his own favor, as he was plaintiff; but the proportionate amount due from him on both claims sued upon should have been deducted from the amount due him on his judgment, and he should have had a several judgment against each of the 14 defendants for his proportionate share of the indebtedness of the corporation to him. In other words, Fortin should be treated as both creditor and debtor, and in arriving at what should be paid him there should be first deducted from his claim the amount of his proportionate liability to the corporation on both claims, and the balance should be apportioned among the said 14 defendants, and judgment entered accordingly. The right of the creditors to be subrogated to the corporation to the extent of claiming any unpaid balance due from the stockholder to the corporation is too well settled to require any citation of authorities, and a creditor does not lose this right by being a stockholder. He may be postponed to other creditors not stockholders, but the principle does not apply here, as the only other creditor was fully paid. This principle admitted, it seems to us too plain to require argument that the trial court erred in ignoring Fortin's relation as a creditor. If the 14 original defendants chose voluntarily to pay Richardson, stipulating that Fortin's rights should be unaffected thereby, we do not see upon what principle Fortin can be made to suffer. The claim that Fortin is estopped because his attorney was Richardson's attorney is not tenable. The attorney did not stipulate for Fortin, and, besides, if he had, Fortin was fully protected by the terms of the stipulation. It was held in Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 72, 59 Pac. 319, that when the corporation is insolvent (as is the case here) the creditors cannot take upon themselves the authority of the corporation, and pay the subscription to one creditor to the injury of the other creditors. This was, in effect, what these 14 defendants did. They undertook to relieve themselves by paying their entire subscription to one creditor,—Richardson,—wholly disregarding the rights of the remaining creditor, Fortin.

2. In the cross bill filed with the answers of the 14 original defendants certain 30-odd other stockholders were brought into the action, and most of them were served, and appeared by answer; and it was alleged in the cross bill that they were solvent, and able to contribute their share of any judgment rendered. This cross bill was not served on Fortin, the co-plaintiff, nor was it answered by him. But he claims that the parties were before the court, and the issues presented by their pleadings were there also; and that, as the avowed object of the pleadings was to have an adjudication of the liability of these new parties, and to compel them to bear their just proportion of any relief to which the original complainant should be found to be entitled, the court should have found upon these issues. The 14 defendants having, as they supposed, fully discharged their liability by paying Richardson (in which they each paid substantially 50 per cent. of their corporate liability), and the court having so regarded their payment, it became a matter of indifference to them, and apparently so to the court, what was done with these new parties; and the trial court therefore cut the case in the middle at this point, and made no findings as to them, thus in effect increasing the burden of the original 14 defendants and Fortin also. These 14 defendants do not appeal, and cannot complain; but Fortin complains, and now insists that he should have had the benefit of findings, and, if these additional parties were in fact stockholders, and still owed the corporation as subscribers to its stock, they should have been made to share his burden. The question need not be decided, since the case must be remanded, and plaintiff Fortin can, if he wishes, easily remove all question by an appropriate pleading, or by obtaining the proper order of the court.

3. Appellant makes the point that, as the court found that he has never paid anything to the corporation for his shares, the stock was, therefore, void, and he was not liable thereon. Appellant relies on section 359, Civ. Code, which provides that "no corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received." The court did not find that Fortin was to receive these shares as a gratuity. It found that he, as did all other stockholders, subscribed for certain shares, and agreed to pay therefor $50 per share, but had not paid. He became creditor of the corporation beyond the amount he owed it as a subscriber, about the time he subscribed, and it may have been for this reason that he was not called upon to pay at the time he subscribed, or at all. Whatever the reason was, he entered into the agreement with his fellow stockholders, and he furnished merchandise and labor to the corporation with knowledge of the agreement, and became indebted to the corporation for his shares as the others did. Under the circumstances he cannot be heard to question his liability as one of the original promoters of the enterprise which the corporation was formed to carry out. Fortin is in the same position as the stockholders whom he sues. They had not paid, nor had he. To obtain a judgment against them, he assumes that they are liable on their subscriptions, but for his subscription, made under the same circumstances as theirs, he is not liable. If the position be sound, he is "hoist with his own petard," and they, too, must escape liability. But we do not decide how far a promise to pay in the future for shares delivered will be regarded as "money paid, labor done, or property actually received." Respondents contend, and with reason, that a promise to pay may be enforced, and is property; that, for example, a promissory note given in good faith by a solvent subscriber in payment of his subscription is "property actually received." The question does not necessarily arise. Appellant is in no position to repudiate his obligation to the corporation. The law on the point, as upon other questions in this case, will be found in a learned note to Thompson v. Bank (Nev.) 3 Am. St. Rep. 797 (s. c. 7 Pac. 68).

4. It is not necessary to pass upon the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment. The errors complained of are reviewable on the appeal from the order, and hence the alleged defective appeal from the judgment is immaterial. Nor is it necessary to decide whether an agreement may be made among all the stockholders that the shares shall be deemed fully paid by payment of an agreed amount less than the par value. Such an agreement has been held to be good among the stockholders under circumstances when not conclusive as to creditors. See Thompson v. Bank, supra, note. Appellant, as a stockholder, was party to the agreement in the present case, and cannot avoid its consequences as a creditor. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SAN MATEO COUNTY v. COBURN. (S. F. 1,450.)¹

COUNTY HIGHWAY—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—DECISION OF COUNTY BOARD—COLLATERAL ATTACK—COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—APPEAL—REVERSAL OF DECREE—EFFECT ON ORDER FOR POSSESSION.

1. The necessity, location, and extent of a public highway are matters of a political or legislative character, and the legislature, by Pol. Code, § 2681 et seq., having vested in county boards of supervisors power to determine such questions, the decision of a county board proceeding in accordance therewith is not subject to collateral attack; and in a subsequent proceeding by the public to condemn a right of way for a public road the court cannot review the action of the board in determining these questions, notwithstanding section 2690 provides that the suit for condemnation "shall be determined by the court or jury in accordance with the rights of the respective parties, as shown in court independent of such proceedings before said board."

2. A county being a political and not a municipal corporation, it cannot appropriate a right of way to its use until full compensation has been first made in money, or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit, as required by Const. art. 1, § 14, in relation to such appropriations by corporations other than municipal.

3. As a final decree of condemnation can be made only after full compensation has been made to the owner, or ascertained and paid into court for him, an order for possession, being founded on the decree, must fall with the reversal thereof for inadequacy of the compensation made.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; George H. Buck, Judge.

Proceedings by the county of San Mateo against Loren Coburn to condemn land for a public road. From a decree confirming the amount of damage awarded him by the county board, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order permitting plaintiff to enter into possession of the land, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Joseph H. Skirm, for appellant. Henry W. Walker and Geo. C. Ross, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff seeks to acquire by condemnation a right of way over certain lands of the defendant for a public road. It is shown by the complaint that a sufficient petition for laying out a public road was presented to the board of supervisors of the plaintiff, and that viewers were thereupon appointed, and that their report was afterwards approved by the board, and the amount of damage that would be sustained by the defendant was ascertained and declared, and by order awarded to him; that the amount so awarded was set apart for him in the county treasury, and notice thereof given to him, and that he did not accept the same within 10 days thereafter; that thereupon the board of supervisors by an order directed that proceedings be instituted by the district attorney to procure the right of way under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant, in his answer, denied the necessity of a right of way over his lands for any public use, or that the laying out or opening of a public road on said lands is a public necessity, and, in addition thereto, claimed that he would sustain damage much greater in amount than had been awarded by the supervisors. The cause was tried by the court, and findings made in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and that the value of the land taken for the road and the improvements thereon was $800. The court also found that the benefits which the defendant would receive from the opening of the road would be equal to the damage occasioned thereby to his remaining land. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the defendant for $800, and for the condemnation of a right of way over his lands as set forth in the complaint. The plaintiff paid into court for the use of the defendant the amount of the judgment, and the court thereupon entered its judgment of final condemnation of said land for the purposes of a public highway. Defendant gave notice of a motion for a new trial, and while said motion was pending the court, upon motion of the plaintiff, made an order that, upon the payment into court of a further sum of money as a fund to compensate the defendant, the plaintiff might take possession and use the land so condemned until the final adjudication of the controversy. The defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and he has appealed from this order, and also from the decree of confirmation, and from the order permitting the plaintiff to enter into possession of the land. At the trial, when the plaintiff rested its case, the defendant moved to dismiss the proceeding upon the ground that no evidence had been offered tending to show that the use for which the condemnation of his land was sought was a public use. The court denied this motion, and afterwards excluded evidence of that character offered by the defendant, and ruled that the only issue to be tried was the value of the lands to be condemned. These rulings are now assigned as error.

1. The right of the state to appropriate private property for public use is an element of sovereignty, and in section 14 of article 1 of the constitution the people of this state have limited this right by declaring the conditions upon which alone it may be exercised. It is the function of the legislative department to determine in the first instance what shall constitute a public use, and whether any private property shall be taken for such use, as well as the extent to which such property may be taken; and in section 1237 et seq., Code Civ. Proc., the legislature has enumerated certain public uses for which the state may exercise its eminent domain, as well as the manner and extent of its exercise for those uses. It is not to be held, however, that the mere declaration by the legislature that the object for which private property may be taken is a public use will preclude the owner from contesting the right to deprive him of his property. If it is sought to condemn the property for a use which is evidently private, or to accomplish some purpose which is not of a public character, courts will disregard the legislative declaration that such use is public. The declaration by the legislature is entitled to great consideration, and if the purpose for which the condemnation is sought is clearly for a public use, or one which in ordinary acceptance or experience expresses a public use, it will be conclusive upon the judiciary. Stockton & V. R. Co. v. Common Council of City of Stockton, 41 Cal. 175. But, if it is clear that it is for a private purpose, the legislative declaration will be of no avail. Consolidated Channel Co. v. Central Pac. R. Co., 51 Cal. 269. So, too, if it can be shown by extrinsic evidence that the end sought to be accomplished is not of a public character, but is solely for private purposes, the condemnation will be denied, as being in excess of the legislative power. In re Niagara Falls & W. Ry. Co., 108 N. Y. 375, 15 N. E. 429. As was said by the court in this case: "It is difficult to make an exact definition of a public use. It is easier to define it by negation than by affirmation." And in another portion of the same opinion: "The general principle is now well settled that, when the uses are in fact public, the necessity or expediency of taking private property for such uses by the exercise of the power of eminent domain, the instrumentalities to be used, and the extent to which such right shall be delegated, are questions appertaining to the political and legislative branches of the government, while, on the other hand, the question whether the uses are in fact public, so as to justify the taking in invitum of private property therefor, is a judicial question, to be determined by the courts." See, also, Lewis, Em. Dom. § 158. There is no room in the present case for any question as to the character of the use for which the condemnation of the land is sought. It needs no argument to show that a highway or public road is a public use. See Lewis, Em. Dom. § 166. If it would be claimed otherwise in any particular case, or that the road is in fact for a private use, the burden of showing such fact rests upon the contestant. Whether a public highway is demanded in any particular region, as well as its location and extent, are also matters of a political or legislative character. Wulzen v. Board, 101 Cal. 15, 35 Pac. 353; Siskiyou Co. v. Gamlich, 110 Cal. 94, 42 Pac. 468; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 238, 239. In the Political Code of this state (section 2681 et seq.) the legislature has established a tribunal for determining these questions, and has provided for notice to all persons interested therein, and given them an opportunity to be heard. If this tribunal proceeded in accordance with the provisions of these sections, it acquired jurisdiction to determine these questions, and its determination is not subject to collateral attack. In a proceeding thereafter by the public to condemn a right of way for this public road, the court is not authorized to review the action of the board of supervisors in determining these questions. The provision in section 2690, Pol. Code, that the suit for condemnation "shall be determined by the court or jury in accordance with the rights of the respective parties, as shown in court independent of said proceedings before said board," is not to be construed as authorizing the court to review the determination of the board of supervisors as to the proper location of the highway, or the propriety or necessity of establishing it. The clause is not without ambiguity, but full effect is given to its provisions by holding that, after the suit for condemnation has been brought, the court, in determining the rights of the parties thereto, shall disregard any "informalities" which may have occurred in the proceedings before the board. If it had been the intention of the legislature to establish a different rule upon this subject from that which had previously existed, it is reasonable to suppose that it would have expressed such intention distinctly and in unambiguous terms.

2. The court, however, erred in failing to determine the amount of damages that the opening of the road would cause to the lands of the defendant not taken for the road. The defendant testified that damage would be caused to the remainder of his lands by such opening, and the finding of the court that the benefits which the other portion of his lands would receive from the opening of the road are equal to the damages occasioned by its severance implies that some damage would be caused thereby. Const. art. 1, § 14, declares that "no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into court for the owner irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation." It is unnecessary to determine whether a county is a "corporation," within the meaning of this clause, since, if this be conceded, it is a corporation "other than municipal." A county is a governmental agency or political subdivision of the state, organized for purposes of exercising some functions of the state government, whereas a municipal corporation is an incorporation of the inhabitants of a specified region for purposes of local government. It was held in People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, that under the constitution of this state a county is not a municipal corporation, but, if it may be regarded as a corporation at all, it is but a "political corporation." See, also, People v. Sacramento Co., 45 Cal. 695; State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458; Sharp v. Contra Costa Co., 34 Cal. 284; Askew v. Hale Co., 54 Ala. 639; Commissioners v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Woods v. Colfax Co., 10 Neb. 554, 7 N. W. 269; Stermer v. Board, 5 Colo. App. 379, 38 Pac. 839; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22.

3. As the error of the court in determining the amount of damages necessitates a reversal of the judgment, the order permitting the plaintiff to take possession of the land sought to be condemned must also be reversed. A final decree of condemnation can be made only after full compensation has been made to the owner, or ascertained and paid into court for him; and, as the order for possession pending the appeal must have this final decree for its foundation, it must fall with the reversal of the decree. The judgments and the orders appealed from are reversed.

MURPHY v. MADDEN, Treasurer. (Sac. 673.)

CRIMINAL LAW—WITNESSES—FEES.

Pen. Code, § 1329, declares that when a person attends the trial of a criminal case as a witness, on a subpoena, and he has come from without the county, or is unable to pay the expenses of such attendance, the court may direct, by an order on its minutes, that an order be drawn on the county treasurer in favor of the witness for a reasonable sum. St. 1895, p. 267, determines the fees of witnesses, but makes no provision as to the enforcement of payment. Held, that where petitioner attended as a witness in a criminal case, on a subpoena, and the judge made an order in writing, but not entered on the minutes, that a warrant be drawn on the treasurer for a certain sum in favor of the "above-named witness" (no name being given), and subsequently a succeeding justice made an order on the minutes, termed a "nunc pro tunc order," that a warrant be drawn for the witness, and that such order operate as if made on the date of the former, it was proper for the county treasurer to refuse payment, since the first order was ineffectual, and the nunc pro tunc order had no valid prior order to rest on, and was void.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Petition by John Murphy for mandamus against John Madden, treasurer of Modoc county, to compel the payment of a warrant drawn on him by the county auditor. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. F. Harris, for appellant. John E. Raker and E. C. Bonner, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal is from a judgment in the superior court denying a writ of mandate to the county treasurer. The judgment was upon demurrer, the plaintiff declining to amend. The petition shows that petitioner attended as a witness in the trial of a criminal case, in obedience to a subpoena, for seven days, and, to attend, traveled one mile. Judge Clafin, who presided at the trial, made an order in writing, but which was not entered in the minutes of the court, as follows, after the title of the cause: "The auditor of Modoc county, California, is directed to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of said county in favor of the above-named witness, payable out of the general fund of the county, for ten dollars and sixty cents. Witness my hand this 19th day of December, 1896. C. L. Clafin, Judge of Superior Court." Thereafter, March 8, 1897, upon a showing, the superior court made what is called an "order nunc pro tunc." That was after the term of Judge Clafin had expired, and Hon. J. W. Harrington was superior judge. In this order, inter alia, it is recited that it appeared that the plaintiff, in obedience to a subpoena, actually attended as a witness in the trial of a criminal case, and that the amount allowed was necessary for the expenses of the witness, and is not in excess of $1.50 per day, and 10 cents per mile for travel, and the auditor was ordered to draw his warrant for the amount. The former order made by Judge Clafin is then described as being for the same amount, and the order then proceeds as follows: "It is ordered that this order be entered as of the same date, to wit, 19th day of December, A. D. 1896, and be and operate as fully in particular as if said order had been made and entered by the Honorable Clafin on said date in the minutes of the court." Prior to this so-called nunc pro tunc order, to wit, December 19, 1896, the auditor had issued a warrant to petitioner for the amount. On the 8th day of March, 1897, after the nunc pro tunc order had been made, this warrant was presented to the treasurer, who refused to pay the same, and thereupon this proceeding was inaugurated.

The order made by Judge Clafin is ineffectual from any point of view. It is in favor of no one, and does not authorize the auditor to draw his warrant for any person. The recital is, "in favor of the above-named witness," but no person is named. It could have no validity under section 1329 of the Penal Code, for the further reason that it was not made by the court and entered in the minutes of the court. Counsel contends that it is, or may be, an ex parte order, and as such might have been made in chambers. But, conceding it to be an ex parte order, still this would not follow; for it is expressly provided in section 1329, Id., as to this order, that it must be, "if the attendance of the witness be upon a trial," by the court, and by order entered upon its minutes; in other cases, by the judge, by written order. The statute itself discriminates between the "court" and the "judge," and provides that in one case the court must act, and in the other the judge may. Whatever is done by the court is also done by the judge, as an essential constituent of the court, but the converse is not true. The order made by Judge Harrington was evidently intended to be a compliance with the act to establish fees, passed in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 267), and counsel on both sides seem to so consider it. Supposing that act to apply,—a proposition which is seriously contested,—it simply determines fees which certain persons, officers, witnesses, and others, are entitled to charge, but declares nothing as to who shall pay, or in what mode payment can be enforced. Counsel for appellant contends that section 1329 of the Penal Code provides the mode in which witnesses in criminal cases are to be paid. I am unable to agree with counsel in this contention. Section 1329 provides only for the special cases of witnesses from without the county, and those too poor to pay the expense of attendance. As to neither class does it provide compensation or anything in the nature of fees, and, as to the poor, it simply furnishes the court with the means of procuring the attendance of the witnesses. There being no mode provided for the payment of these fees, supposing they constitute a valid charge against the county,—which we do not determine,—they are to be submitted to the board of supervisors as other claims against the county are submitted.

We have not found it necessary to determine whether the successor of Judge Clafin could pass upon the claim of the witness under the fee bill of 1895. If the court had made a valid order, which for some reason was not entered in the minutes, no doubt this order so made, or another to the same precise effect, could have been subsequently entered as of the date the first order was made; but as the court in December, 1896, failed to make an order in the matter, the so-called nunc pro tunc order made by Judge Harrington must be sustained, if at all, as an order made in the first instance. Nor do we find it necessary to decide whether Modoc county has a special fee bill. The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: McFARLAND, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur. I wish to add to what is said by Justice TEMPLE that, although there is no law which authorizes a court or judge to make an order for the payment of any claim of a witness, except in the cases specified in section 1329 of the Penal Code, I still think that all fees claimed under the act of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 273) must be audited by the court before any claim therefor can be allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors.

THOMPSON et al. v. STAACKE et al. (S. F. 2,301.)¹

BANK OF CALIFORNIA v. SAME.

EXECUTOR'S ACCOUNTS — ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW—OBJECTION TO ACCOUNT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where an executor is ordered by the court to pay a certain monthly allowance to the widow of testator, and creditors of the estate do not appeal from the order, which is not void on its face, or ask that it be set aside, they cannot object to the allowance of the executor's account, showing such payments, on the ground that the estate was insolvent when the order was made.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Objection by Louisa J. Thompson and others to the final account of George Staacke as executor of the estate of Thomas Bell, and objection of the Bank of California to the same. From an order allowing the account, the objectors appeal. Affirmed.

A. N. Drown, Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, Garret W. McEnerney, Wm. B. Bosley, John S. Drum, Maurice V. Samuels, and James M. Allen (J. F. Leicester, of counsel), for appellants. Sidney V. Smith, T. Z. Blakeman, and Brewton A. Hayne, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Thomas Bell died testate in the city and county of San Francisco. Subsequent to the issuance of letters testamentary, and prior to the return of the inventory and appraisement, the court made an order for a family allowance of $2,000 per month; this allowance to continue until the further order of the court. The administration of the estate proceeded on its course, and nearly three years later two creditors of the estate filed a petition asking that the order for a family allowance previously made be modified. Theresa Bell, the widow of Thomas Bell, deceased, contested the application, and upon the hearing the original order was modified to the extent that the allowance was fixed at $1,500 per month, commencing at that date. The administration still continuing, about three years later the order of family allowance, at the instance of the same creditors, after a hearing and contest upon the part of the widow, was again modified, being fixed upon that hearing at the amount of $100 per month. Under these various orders of family allowance more than $80,000 has been paid by the executors to the widow, and much the greater portion of this amount has been allowed and settled in the accounts rendered by the executors to the court. But upon the hearing of the last account rendered by the sole executor, Staacke, creditors appeared and objected to those items of the account consisting of various sums of money paid by the executor to the widow under the two later orders of family allowance, and these creditors based their objections upon the ground that the two aforesaid orders were void by reason of the fact that the estate was insolvent when they were made. At the hearing of the account they offered evidence tending to show the insolvency of the estate at that time, and this evidence was rejected. The sums paid to the widow to which objections were made were allowed by the court, and this appeal is taken by the creditors from the order settling the account.

This court will not concern itself as to whether or not the original order for a family allowance became void ipso facto either upon the return of the inventory, or expired by mere lapse of time upon the expiration of one year from its date, by reason of insolvency coming upon the estate. The moneys here involved are moneys expended under the subsequent orders, and our attention will be directed to these orders alone; for, if the original order was void at the time the later orders were made, and therefore not susceptible of modification, then the second order made was a new and independent order, and must look to itself for sufficient strength to stand alone. Had the court power to make the second order? Or, bringing the question directly home, upon the hearing of an account of the executor may the creditors object to the allowance of moneys paid out under this order? We are entirely satisfied the creditors cannot successfully support the contention made. The order is not void upon its face, and it is too late upon the hearing of the account to show that the estate was insolvent when the order was made, and that therefore the court lacked jurisdiction to make it. Such a holding would place executors and administrators in a sorry plight, as would be fully exemplified in this case if these items for money paid were rejected from the account. Conceding the court had no power to make the order if the estate was insolvent, still the making of the order in itself is an adjudication that the estate was not insolvent. In principle, this identical question is decided by the case of In re Welch, 106 Cal. 430, 39 Pac. 805, where the court, in speaking of an order of family allowance, said: "It is asserted that this order is invalid for lack of a finding that the property exempt from execution, and already set apart to the support of the widow, was insufficient for the purpose. * * *

The fact that the court, after setting aside exempt property, made its order for family allowance, involved of necessity the decision that the amount originally set apart was insufficient. The order for additional allowance in itself was a declaration of that insufficiency." The time for appeal from the order has long gone by, and the attack here made is essentially a collateral attack. The making of the order necessarily involved a determination that the estate was solvent, and it is now proposed to show upon this collateral attack that the finding of the court as to the solvency of the estate is untrue. This cannot be done. These appellants had ample opportunity to protect themselves, if the estate was insolvent, by directly attacking the order. If they had no notice of the hearing upon which the order was made, then, clearly, they had the right subsequently to ask the court to set it aside. Indeed, section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains no provision for notice to creditors before making an order for the family allowance. Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 619, 29 Pac. 235. By the aforesaid section the court only has power to make an order of allowance when the amount already set apart under sections 1464 and 1465 is insufficient for the support of the widow; and appellants here, with equal legal propriety, could contest this account upon the ground that when the order was made the court had previously set apart an amount sufficient for the support of the widow, and that therefore the order made was void. Yet the case of In re Welch, supra, holds directly to the contrary of that contention. Again, by section 1466 the court "may make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family." It might with equal legal propriety be contended that the order of allowance was void, or at least void pro tanto, upon the ground that it was too large, and that the amount was not necessary for the maintenance of the family. Of course, the validity of an order of allowance cannot be attacked collaterally upon these grounds. As far as the validity of any particular order of allowance is concerned, it must be held that these matters were considered and determined when the order was made, and were determined in a way that supports the validity of the order made. The same rule necessarily applies upon the question of the insolvency of the estate, and it must be held that, when the court made the order or orders involved, it decided that the estate was solvent. It is said in Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 336, 41 Pac. 458, "The same presumption must now attach to decrees in probate proceedings upon collateral attack as to judgments in cases at common law or in equity."

There are two separate appeals in this case, brought here upon a single record. For the reasons given, the order settling the account of the executor, from which the appeals are taken, is affirmed as to both appeals.

COIT et al. v. WESTERN UNION TEL. CO.
(S. F. 1,521).¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1900.)

TELEGRAPHS — UNREPEATED MESSAGE — RELEASE OF LIABILITY — AGENCY — GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

1. A finding that an error in a telegram as delivered was not due to the gross negligence of the telegraph company, or any other degree of negligence, is equivalent to a finding that the company exercised great care, within Civ. Code, § 2162, requiring telegraph companies to exercise great care and diligence in the transmission and delivery of messages, and hence the company was not liable for loss resulting from the error.

2. Where plaintiffs requested certain information by telegram, and it was sent them by an unrepeat message, under a contract with the telegraph company that it should not be liable for mistakes in any unrepeat message, whether happening by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, plaintiffs by such request made the sender their agent, and hence were bound by the contract, and the telegraph company was not liable to them for damages for a mistake not caused by its gross negligence.

3. Plaintiffs' correspondent sent them an unrepeat telegram under a contract releasing the telegraph company from liability for mistakes in unrepeat messages, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, in reply to an inquiry for a price on steel rails. At the time the message was received for transmission the telegraph line was working badly, on account of storms along the line, and sometimes messages could not be transmitted, but when the message was sent the line was in working order. Held, that the transmission at such time was not gross negligence, and hence plaintiffs could not recover for a mistake in the message as delivered to them.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Griffith Coit and another against the Western Union Telegraph Company for damages for failure to correctly transmit a message. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Thornton & Merzbach, for appellants. R. B. Carpenter, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiffs telegraphed to W. B. Dennis, at St. Louis, asking him to telegraph them the lowest cash price for 220 tons of 40-pound steel rails. The message was correctly delivered, and in answer thereto Dennis telegraphed to plaintiffs the price to be $37 per ton. This dispatch was delivered in due time, but when delivered it read $27 per ton; the mistake in the message having occurred in transit, by reason of atmospheric disturbances. Relying upon the words of the message as delivered, plaintiffs entered into contracts to buy and sell steel rails, and great damage resulted to them by reason of the mistake of defendant heretofore stated. To recover this damage the present action is brought. The facts of the case are largely agreed upon, and in addition the court made a finding of fact as follows: "The defendant, Western Union Telegraph Company, was not guilty of gross or any other degree of negligence in the transmission of the message of Dennis to the plaintiffs; nor was the error or mistake in the said dispatch of said Dennis, as the same was delivered to said plaintiffs, due to or caused by the gross or any other degree of negligence of the said defendant, Western Union Telegraph Company." Upon the facts, judgment was rendered for defendant, and this appeal from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial is now before us. This finding in favor of defendant of no negligence is essentially a finding of the ultimate fact in the case, and will be so treated by the court in the consideration of the merits of this appeal.

The Civil Code declares (section 2162), "A carrier of messages for reward must use great care and diligence in the transmission and delivery of messages." In many jurisdictions it is held that the phrase "gross negligence" is a misnomer, and that the adjective "gross" in no way qualifies the noun "negligence." But in this state the rule is recognized to the contrary, not only by the decisions of this court, but by many sections of our Civil Code. The phrases "gross negligence" and "slight negligence" are found in common use in the law of this state, and, being so used, each must be held to have a distinctive meaning. The defendant in this case was required to use great care in the transmission and delivery of this message. The court found that, in the transmission and delivery of this message, defendant was not guilty of any negligence. Not being guilty of any negligence whatever, defendant must be held to have used great care; and the finding of fact quoted is the equivalent of an express finding that defendant used great care in the performance of its duty in the transmission and delivery of the message here involved. But, in view of the conclusion at which the court has arrived, it is unnecessary to determine whether or not the evidence in this case is sufficient to support a finding of fact to the effect that defendant was not guilty of any negligence whatever, and this conclusion is based upon the following reasons:

The written message which was delivered by Dennis to defendant, to be sent to San Francisco and delivered to plaintiffs, contained the following regulation and stipulation bearing upon defendant's duties and liabilities: "It is agreed between the sender of this message and this company that said company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any unrepeatable message, whether happening by negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the amount received for sending the same." In this case the message sent from St. Louis to plaintiffs was not a "repeated message." The foregoing stipulation constituted a valid and binding contract between Dennis, the sender, and the defendant company. As to its validity and binding force in this state, at least, the law may be considered settled. Hart v. Telegraph Co., 66 Cal. 579, 6 Pac. 637; Redington v. Cable Co., 107 Cal. 317, 40 Pac. 432; Primrose v. Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883. These authorities declare the rule of this state upon the question. It follows, therefore, that if Dennis, the sender of the message, was bringing this action against defendant for damages suffered by him, he would be bound by the agreement made, and could only recover in case defendant was guilty of willful misconduct or gross negligence in the performance of its duty. The interesting question then presents itself, do these plaintiffs, the addressee and receiver of the message, stand in a better position, as against defendant's negligence, than does Dennis, the sender of the message? In England it is held by the courts with entire unanimity that the addressee of a message has no right of action against the telegraph company for failure of performance of duty. And this conclusion is based upon the proposition that the relation between the parties is purely one of contract, and the addressee is not a party thereto. In this country it may be deemed settled law that the addressee has a right of action against the telegraph company when by its negligence he has suffered damages. At the same time the different reasons given by the different courts in adopting this rule of law are many. We will not here enter into a discussion of the general principles governing litigation arising between individuals and telegraph companies in the matter of sending and receiving messages, but will confine ourselves to a consideration of the law bearing upon the facts of this particular case.

Plaintiffs telegraphed to Dennis, in St. Louis, requesting him to send by telegram the price of 220 tons of steel rails. In pursuance of that request, Dennis telegraphed the desired information. It is thus plain that Dennis performed service for plaintiffs at their request. And, that being so, we deem the conclusion irresistible that, in the performance of the service, Dennis was acting for plaintiffs, and was their agent. The fact that plaintiffs by a telegram requested him to perform this service is immaterial. They could have made the request with the same legal result either by letter or parol. If a party residing in St. Louis had been engaged for a consideration by plaintiffs to telegraph them the information here desired, and that party had done so, certainly such party would have been the agent of plaintiffs. Yet the fact, if it be a fact, that no consideration was paid by plaintiffs for the performance of the service by Dennis is not a material element in the consideration of the question of agency. Dennis, in sending the message, being the agent of plaintiffs, the addressee of the message, they were bound by the contract made with the defendant by their agent. Plaintiffs, by requesting him to send the message, necessarily authorized him to contract with defendant as to how that message should be sent. And this general authorization was sufficiently broad to include the agreement as to nonliability heretofore set out, and therefore the agreement was binding upon the principal, these plaintiffs. In discussing this identical question, Thompson on the Law of Electricity (section 237) says: "In such a case is the receiver of the message bound by the stipulation, assuming that the sender was bound by it? If the right of action which the receiver has against the company rests upon privity of contract, and depends upon the circumstances that the sender was his agent,—in other words, if the contract with the telegraph company was the contract of the receiver, through his agent, the sender,—then, on the most unshaken ground, the receiver would be bound by this condition, if the circumstances were such that it would bind the sender." Now, in this state, by the authorities already cited, it is plain that Dennis was bound by the stipulation; and, having power to make it, his principal can only stand in his shoes. But it is said the action of the addressee of a message is founded upon tort, namely, a breach of public duty, and that therefore the question of contract does not enter into it. Yet, in a case like the one at bar, it may with equal legal propriety be said that a cause of action by Dennis against defendant would be founded on tort, namely, a breach of public duty, and thus eliminate any question of contract from the case. But this court has said that it cannot be done, and that Dennis must stand upon his contract as made. In cases where no question of privity of contract arises between the sender and the receiver of a message, the addressee may rest his right of action on tort; but where a party to a special contract, either directly, or indirectly through the sender, his agent, brings his action against the company, he must stand upon his contract rights.

We find many cases which support the conclusion at which we have arrived. The roads traveled by courts in arriving at this conclusion are many, yet those roads all lead to the same destination. In the leading case of Ellis v. Telegraph Co., 13 Allen, 238, no question of agency was adverted to in the opinion, yet the court said: "Besides, it is difficult to see how the plaintiff, who claims through a contract entered into by the sender of the message with the defendants, which created the duty and obligation resting in the defendants, can claim any higher or different degree of diligence than that which was stipulated for by the parties to the contract. Certainly a derivative or incidental right cannot be greater or more extensive than that which attached to the principal or source whence such right accrued or was derived." In Curtin v. Telegraph Co. (Sup.) 38 N. Y. Supp. 58, it is said: "The stipulation for exemption from liability contained in the printed blank of the company, upon which the sender writes his message, constitutes a contract which binds him and the person to whom the message is addressed, if the assent of the sender to such stipulation can be assumed." In Aiken v. Telegraph Co., 5 S. C. 371, it is held: "It is equally clear that any stipulation of an express nature intended to mold and limit his obligation must be construed as attaching to the obligation in its fullest extent, and affecting equally all the persons related to it, either as sender, receiver, or agent of transmission. Under this view of the contract, the plaintiff is entitled to enforce its performance as a direct party in interest." In De Rutte v. Telegraph Co., 1 Daly, 556, we find this language: "When the defendants, therefore undertook and were paid for sending the message, their contract was with the plaintiff, through his agent, and the action for a breach of it was properly brought by him." There is some authority opposed to the general tenor of the cases cited,—as, for example, Telegraph Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. St. 303, and Olympe de la Grange v. Southwestern Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann. 384. But no question of agency appears to have been involved in those cases, and it is upon the contract made by Dennis with the defendant, and the privity of contract existing between Dennis and plaintiffs, that we plant our conclusion upon this branch of the case.

In view of what has been said, the remaining question presents itself, has defendant been guilty of willful misconduct or gross negligence? No question of willful misconduct is presented by the record, and the question then is, does the evidence support the finding of fact that defendant was not guilty of gross negligence? Gross negligence is defined to be "the want of slight diligence." "Gross negligence is an entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so light a degree of care as to justify the belief that there was an indifference to the rights and welfare of others." "Gross negligence is that entire want of care which would raise a presumption of the conscious indifference to consequences. See Redington v. Cable Co., supra. It is conceded that the mistake in the message was occasioned by atmospheric disturbances, and that "it is impossible to overcome the action of the elements upon the wire and repeaters with any kind of care and diligence." Plaintiff's counsel, in his brief, says: "In this case negligence does not consist in the manner in which the act was attempted to be done, but in the attempt to do the act at all." The mistake in the message arose in transit between Denver and Los Angeles. And, in view of the fact that the message had arrived at Denver from St. Louis in due time and in proper form, there is no showing of gross negligence up to this point. Especially is this true in view of the further fact that when the message arrived at Chicago from St. Louis, in transit to San Francisco, the only open line of communication to the point of its destination was via Denver and Los Angeles. It follows that counsel's claim is that, in view of the general atmospheric disturbances going on between Denver and Los Angeles at the time, defendant should have held the message at Denver until climatic changes for the better had taken place. There can be no question but that it was the duty of defendant to forward this message from Denver at the earliest practicable moment. Our statute, in terms, demands it. Now, this message was received at Denver at 1:55 a. m. February 20th, and a great storm was then prevailing at intervals of distance and intervals of time between that point and Los Angeles. During the night of the 19th-20th more than 200 messages were transmitted over the line in question from Denver. The operator at Denver knew the line had been working badly by reason of the storm, and at times it was impossible to get a message through. The line was working badly at the time the message was received at Denver, and had been so working off and on all night. But at the time the message was sent from Denver, about 5 a. m., the wire was in good working order. The two operators at Denver and Los Angeles respectively engaged in sending and receiving the aforesaid 200 messages subsequently never heard of any complaint as to the manner of their transmission. Under the circumstances here depicted, defendant was required to do either one of two things, namely, hold the message at Denver for an unlimited time, or send it on its way. And, testing the facts in view of the meaning of the words "gross negligence" as the law defines them, this court cannot say that the finding made by the trial court to the effect that defendant was not guilty of gross negligence has no support in the evidence. The wire at the time the message was sent "was in good working order." The fact that a storm was rioting over the route should not of itself convict defendant of gross negligence in attempting to forward a message. If that be the law, then messages would not be sent for days at a time, or even weeks, during the winter season. The important question is, what is the condition of the wire? Is it in good working order? And is there a reasonable probability that the message as sent will arrive at its destination? Here the salient fact appears that the wire was in good working order when the message was sent. Taking the evidence altogether, the finding of the court that there was no gross negligence upon the part of the defendant will not be disturbed. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WARREN. (Cr. 667.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1900.)

LARCENY — INDICTMENT — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY — NEW TRIAL — NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE — REVIEW — PRESUMPTION — INSTRUCTIONS — POSSESSION OF PROPERTY — CURED ERROR.

1. A description of the property stolen, in an indictment for larceny, as "four calves then and there the personal property of A. L.," is sufficiently certain.

2. In reviewing an order denying a new trial for newly-discovered evidence, it will not be presumed, in support of an affidavit of a witness to an alibi, that the offense was committed at a time to which the affidavit related; there being no evidence in the record.

3. Where, on a motion for a new trial on account of newly-discovered evidence, it was not shown why the evidence was not produced, and it appeared from counter affidavits that the substance of what was set forth in the supporting affidavit was testified to by affiant on the trial, the motion was properly denied.

4. In a prosecution for larceny, an instruction offered by defendant that "the possession must be personal and exclusive, and must be such as to preclude the inference that the stolen property was in the possession of any other person than the defendant," was properly modified by striking out the part following the word "exclusive," and adding in lieu thereof, "or it must be the possession of some person or persons by the consent and will of the accused, and in either case the possession must involve a distinct and conscious assertion of possession by the accused."

5. In a prosecution for theft of calves, the jury was erroneously instructed that the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal in case of felony had been abrogated, and all persons concerned in its commission, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or aided or abetted in its commission, though not present, shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals; but this was followed by a correct instruction that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid or abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, are principals in any crime so committed; and the jury were further instructed that the burden was on the prosecution to prove that the calves were stolen by defendant alone, or by defendant and another person or persons, who had conspired together to do so, or that they were stolen by some other person or persons, while defendant aided and abetted in stealing them. Held, that the error in the first instruction was cured.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

J. A. Warren, Jr., was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Graves & Graves, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. It is conceded that the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict, but certain errors are urged which we will notice in the order presented in defendant's brief. It is claimed that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, for the reason that the personal property alleged to have been stolen is not described with sufficient certainty. The description is "four calves then and there the personal property of Anton Luchessa." This description is sufficiently certain. People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 356; People v. Stanford, 64 Cal. 28, 28 Pac. 106; State v. Stelly, 48 La. Ann. 1480, 21 South. 89; State v. Friend, 47 Minn. 449, 50 N. W. 692.

Defendant made a motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. In support of the motion he filed the affidavit of one Music, in which it was stated by Music that he was at the ranch of J. A. Warren, Sr., the father of defendant, two or three days before the 17th day of November, 1899, and that the father and two of his sons were marking and branding calves in the corral, and so marked and branded eight or ten calves; that defendant was not there, and Music did not see him that day. The larceny is charged to have occurred on the 22d day of November, 1899. We do not see how the fact that Music did not see defendant at the corral two or three days before the 17th of November, 1899, could have affected the result. It is said the evidence of Music would have tended to prove an alibi. The evidence introduced at the trial is not in the record, and we cannot presume that the larceny was shown to have been committed at the time of marking the calves spoken of by Music. The affidavit of Music shows that George Warren was present in the corral at the time of the marking spoken of by Music, as well as his brother William, and his father, J. A. Warren, Sr. It is not shown why the evidence, if material, was not produced at the trial, as the affidavit shows that at least four parties were present at the marking. It was further shown by counter affidavits that Music was a witness at the trial, and in substance testified to the same facts set forth in his affidavit on motion for a new trial. A motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence is looked upon with suspicion and disfavor, and a party who relies upon such ground must make a strong case, both in respect to diligence on his part and as to the truth and materiality of the evidence, and if he fails in either respect his motion must be denied. People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261; Same v. Rushing (Cal.) 62 Pac. 742. The showing made in this case was not sufficient either as to diligence or as to the truth and materiality of the evidence.

The defendant offered the following instruction: "The possession of stolen property in a case of larceny is a circumstance tending to prove guilt only where it appears that the defendant acquired the possession by his own act or with his concurrence or knowledge. The possession must be personal and exclusive, and must be such as to preclude the inference that the stolen property was in the possession of any other person than the defendant." The court modified the instruction by leaving out the words, "and must be such as to preclude the inference that the stolen property was in the possession of any other person than the defendant," and in lieu thereof added, "or it must be the possession of some person or persons by the consent and will of the accused, and in either case the possession must involve a distinct and conscious assertion of possession by the accused." The modification was proper. It clearly appears therefrom that if the property had been found in the possession of a third party without the knowledge of defendant, and with no assertion of possession on his part, such circumstance would not tend to prove his guilt. The jury were clearly told that the possession of a third party must involve a distinct and conscious assertion of possession by the defendant. Of course, the possession of a third party by the consent and will of defendant and for his benefit would be his possession. The court instructed the jury: "The court further instructs the jury that the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal in case of a felony is abrogated, and all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or aided or abetted in its commission, though not present, shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals." This instruction was erroneous, as held by this court in People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 492, 55 Pac. 581. In that case, however, it was held that where other instructions were given by which it clearly appeared "that merely aiding or assisting in the commission of a crime without guilty knowledge is not criminal," the instructions were to be read together, and the error was cured. In this case the erroneous instruction was followed by the correct instruction: "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, are principals in any crime so committed." And the court further instructed the jury that the burden was upon the prosecution to prove "that the calves were stolen by the defendant and by no other person, or that they were stolen by the defendant and another person or persons who had conspired together to commit the crime, or that they were stolen by some other person or persons, while the defendant aided and abetted such other person or persons in stealing them." The jury could not, in view of these instructions as a whole, have believed that defendant could be found guilty for merely aiding innocently, and without guilty knowledge or intent, in the commission of the offense charged. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WARREN. (Cr. 666.)

CRIMINAL LAW — TRIAL — INTOXICATION OF COUNSEL — COMMITMENT FOR CONTEMPT — ADJOURNMENT — CONTINUANCE — DENIAL — RECEPTION OF VERDICT — INSTRUCTIONS — CURED ERROR.

1. After the jury had been impaneled, and the trial had proceeded to the afternoon of the second day, the court was compelled to commit defendant's counsel for contempt incurred on the court's adjournment of the case by reason of the counsel's intoxication. Held, that an adjournment a reasonable time thereafter to allow other counsel to become familiar with the facts of the case was all that defendant could claim, and that a continuance was properly denied.

2. The jury, after being out several hours, asked to have read the testimony of a witness. It was found that this would take several hours, and owing to the lateness of the hour the court, without objection or exception, announced an adjournment until the next day, when the testimony was to be read, but just before the time set therefor the jury announced an agreement. Held, that their verdict was thereupon properly received, without the reading of such testimony.

3. Error in an instruction that all persons who aid or abet in the commission of a crime, though not present, shall be prosecuted and punished as principals, was cured where the jury were elsewhere told that all persons who "aid and abet in the commission of a crime are principals," and "in every crime or public offense there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent or criminal negligence."

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

George Warren was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Lamy, C. A. Palmer, and Graves & Graves, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. Defendant was jointly indicted with one J. A. Warren, Jr., for grand larceny, and convicted. This appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. It is conceded that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Defendant contends that the indictment did not describe the property alleged to have been stolen with sufficient certainty. The description has been held sufficient in People v. Warren (this day filed) 63 Pac. 86; and upon the authority of that case the point is settled.

Error is assigned in the refusal of the court to continue the case during the trial for the purpose of allowing defendant to employ other counsel. The facts, as shown in the record, are as follows: The trial commenced on Monday, April 2, 1900, and a jury was impaneled. At 1:30 p. m. of April 3d, at the opening of the afternoon session, Ernest Graves, who had up to that time been defendant's sole attorney, came into court in an intoxicated condition; and, after some time taken up in attempt to proceed with the trial, it became apparent to the judge presiding that the defendant's attorney was so much under the influence of liquor that the business of the court could not proceed in regular order. The court thereupon admonished counsel, stating that counsel was evidently not in a condition to proceed with the trial; and, while the court was so speaking, counsel interrupted in an insolent and impudent manner, saying, "The allegations of the court are false." Thereupon the court fined the attorney $50 for contempt of court, but suspended the execution of the fine until the conclusion of the trial, expressly stating that it was not the intention of the court to stop the proceedings of the trial. The court thereupon admonished the jury, and adjourned until 3 o'clock p. m. of the same day. Just as the judge rose to leave the bench the attorney, in a loud, violent, and offensive manner, applied to the judge an insulting epithet. The court then ordered the attorney into custody of the sheriff, and made an order for him to show cause on the following day, April 4th, at 9 o'clock a. m., why he should not be punished for contempt. The case was then continued until April 4th, at 9 o'clock a. m., at which time the court imposed a further fine upon the attorney, and made an order committing him to jail for five days. The court thereupon sent for William Graves, the partner of Ernest Graves who had been sent to jail, and appointed said William Graves as counsel for defendant. The said William Graves requested time to investigate the facts of the case, and the court thereupon continued the case until 1:30 p. m., and directed the reporter to read to said William Graves, if desired, all the proceedings in the case. Upon the calling of court at 1:30 p. m., William Graves made a motion for a continuance, upon his own affidavit and the affidavit of defendant, in which it was stated that William Graves was not familiar with the facts of the case, and could not safely proceed, and that he was pressed with other professional engagements. The court, after the motion for a continuance was argued and considered, remarked: "I would wish very much to be able to give the defendant an adjournment for some time if it were not for the fact that the jury has been impaneled, and that there are a large number of witnesses here in attendance, and we are in the midst of the trial. Mr. Graves has pleaded other engagements,—Mr. William Graves. I will not set aside the order I made yesterday. I will still let you stand as attorney of record, and I will appoint Mr. Palmer—Charles Palmer—as additional counsel for defendant. I will let this case stand over until to-morrow at half-past one p. m., at which time the defendant will be prepared to proceed. Mr. Reporter, you will read for the counsel any of the testimony that has been taken in the proceeding, that they may be fully advised of the proceedings to date, whenever they desire it, between now and 1:30 p. m. to-morrow." April 5th, at 1:30 p. m., Louis Lamy, an attorney at law, appeared at the request of William Graves, and, with said Palmer, acted as attorney for defendant. The said attorneys, Lamy and Palmer, renewed the motion for a continuance, which the court denied and ordered the trial to proceed. The trial then proceeded, witnesses were examined, and on April 9th, after serving out his five days, Ernest Graves appeared in court and assisted the said Lamy and Palmer in the defense. The trial was completed on April 11th, and the case argued to the jury, and Ernest Graves took part in the argument. We do not think the court erred in refusing to further continue the case. Motions of this kind rest much in the discretion of the court below, and it is only in cases of arbitrary action or abuse of discretion that we would be justified in interfering with the order of the court. In this case the court did not act arbitrarily, but proceeded with care and a constant regard for the rights of defendant. Several adjournments were granted to give counsel time to prepare for trial and to become familiar with the case. While the rights of a defendant should always be carefully guarded, so that his defense may be fully presented, at the same time the public interest and business must be conducted in an orderly manner. Here a jury had been impaneled, and the trial had progressed to the afternoon of the second day. Witnesses were in attendance, and the case taking its regular course. The counsel could not, by becoming intoxicated or incurring the penalty of contempt, give the defendant the right to an indefinite postponement of the case. All the defendant could require, as a matter of right, would be a reasonable time to have other counsel become familiar with the facts of the case. This time was granted by the court, and, under the circumstances, appears to have been amply sufficient. The court must have discretion in such cases. People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 341, 19 Pac. 161.

It is claimed that the court erred in not ordering the testimony of J. A. Warren, Sr., read to the jury. The case had been submitted to the jury about three hours, when they came into court after 11 o'clock p. m. and asked to have the testimony of said Warren read. The judge then asked the reporter how long it would take to read the testimony, and was informed that it would take about two hours, as there was about 300 pages of it. The judge then announced to the jury, in the presence of counsel, that owing to the lateness of the hour it would be necessary to adjourn until the next day at 9 o'clock a. m., when the testimony would be read. No objection or exception was then made, and the jury retired and court adjourned. A few minutes before 9 o'clock the next morning the jury came into court and announced that they had agreed upon a verdict. Counsel then objected to the verdict being received because the testimony called for by the jury had not been read. The judge remarked that the jury had found a verdict without having such testimony read, and that he knew of no course except to receive it, and that the jury might be polled, and, if any juror desired to express himself, he might do so. The jury were polled, and all answered that it was their verdict. The court did not deny the right of defendant to have the testimony read. Neither was it an abuse of discretion to adjourn court till the following day for such purpose. The court would not be required to remain in session all night for the purpose of having testimony read to the jury.

The court erred in giving to the jury the instruction to the effect that all persons who aid or abet in the commission of a crime, though not present, shall be prosecuted and punished as principals (People v. Warren [this day filed] 63 Pac. 86); but the error was cured, as in that case, by a direct and clear statement of the law in other parts of the charge. The jury were elsewhere told that all persons who "aid and abet in the commission of a crime are principals," and "in every crime or public offense there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent or criminal negligence." In such case we cannot believe that the jury understood that a person who innocently aids in the commission of an offense may be found guilty. The jury, if possessed of common sense, could not have given the word "aid" its extremely narrow and literal sense. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

LEMASTERS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (L. A. 791.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1900.)

RAILWAYS—COLLISION—INJURY TO LICENSEE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — WILLFUL AND WANTON MISCONDUCT—IMMATURE AGE OF DECEASED—INSTRUCTIONS NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

1. Where deceased, a fireman on a switch engine of defendant, while not on duty jumped on the rear footboard of the switch engine, to ride to the roundhouse, and was killed in a collision, and it was against the rules of defendant to ride on the footboard, of which deceased had knowledge, the contributory negligence of deceased barred a recovery for his death.

2. Where deceased was killed in a collision caused by an open switch, while riding on the footboard of a switch engine, instructions on the question of willful and wanton misconduct on the part of the defendant were improper, as the evidence presented no question of that character.

3. Where deceased, a bright and active boy of 17 years, who had been employed for 2 months as fireman on defendant's switch engine, was killed while riding on the footboard of the engine when not on duty, an instruction that if deceased was a trespasser the jury could take into consideration his youth, and the immature judgment which naturally belongs to youth, in determining his negligence, was erroneous; the evidence presenting no question that deceased was immature or inexperienced.

4. Where the court charged that, if deceased was killed through the wanton and willful neglect of the defendant, the jury must be satisfied that the accident causing the death was not caused alone by negligence, but that the negligence must have been willful and wanton, to make the defendant liable, and also charged that if defendant failed to give proper signals and keep a proper lookout in order to prevent a collision, and by reason of such negligence, without fault of the deceased, he was killed in a collision, the verdict must be for the plaintiff, the two instructions were directly contradictory and erroneous.

5. Where deceased, a fireman on a switch engine, was killed in a collision while riding on the footboard of the engine while not on duty, an instruction that if the servants of defendant in charge of the engine knew that deceased was riding on the footboard, in a dangerous position, and they did not stop and order him off or compel him to get off, but allowed him to remain without objection until the collision occurred, defendant was liable for his death, provided the defendant did not exercise ordinary care to prevent the accident, was erroneous.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by John Lemasters against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Ahern and Walter J. Trask, for appellant. A. J. Bledsoe, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This action was brought by a father to recover damages for the death of his son. The deceased was a bright, active boy, nearly 17 years of age. He was a fireman upon a switch engine of defendant, and had been working in that capacity for nearly 2 months. At the time of the accident he was not on duty. The pay car of defendant, to which was attached a switch engine, started to go from the railroad station to the roundhouse. A board is attached respectively to the front and rear of this engine, about a foot above the track. This board is placed there for the use of the yardmen in directing the movements of the engine. As the engine started to the roundhouse, the deceased, in company with three others, jumped upon the rear board; and while standing upon it, and riding towards the roundhouse, the engine, by reason of an open switch, passed to another track and collided with a stationary engine there located. Deceased was killed, being jammed between the engine and the car, and the other three parties were severely injured. If deceased had been a passenger upon the train of defendant, and had located himself in a position of danger similar to that where he here placed himself, it is evident damages could not be recovered for his death. His contributory negligence in placing himself in that position would be a complete bar to a recovery. And we cannot see how plaintiff is in a better position to bring this action than he would have been if deceased had been a passenger upon defendant's train. As disclosed by the facts, deceased was either a trespasser or a mere licensee. As a trespasser, defendant owed him no duty; and if he was a mere licensee riding upon the train, even conceding that defendant owed him a duty, still he certainly had no more rights than a passenger situated under the same circumstances. It would be an anomaly to hold that a mere licensee could occupy a position, as to the defendant, more favorable to himself than could the ordinary passenger traveling upon the train. Again, if deceased was a licensee, he was only a licensee to ride upon the train. He was not a licensee to ride upon this board attached to the engine. It was against the rules of defendant for persons to ride upon this board, and deceased was acquainted with that fact. In addition to these circumstances, there is no evidence that the deceased, or anyone else, with the consent of defendant, at this particular time or at any other time, rode upon this board. In this case the doctrine of Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500, is invoked,—a case of wanton and willful misconduct upon the part of the defendant. But this is no such case. Here defendant did not know that deceased was upon the board, and, even if it had known it, it did not know that the switch was open. If defendant had known that the switch was open and that deceased was upon the board, and, being possessed of that knowledge, had run the train upon the other track, thereby colliding with the second engine, possibly the doctrine of the case cited could be invoked. Wilcox v. Railway Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 379, in its facts, is similar to the case at bar, except by the facts of that case it appears that the young man injured was riding on the engine board with the consent of the engineer and other employés. Yet it was there held that, having placed himself in the position of danger, he was barred from recovering damages for injuries received by reason of defendant's negligence. See, also, Eaton v. Railroad Co., 57 N. Y. 382.

Instructions of the court were given to the jury upon the question of willful and wanton misconduct upon the part of defendant. In view of what has been said, the evidence presented no question of that character.

Again, the court instructed the jury that, if deceased was a trespasser, the jury could take into consideration his youth, and the immature judgment which naturally belongs to youth, etc. When we consider that the deceased was nearly 17 years of age,—a bright, active boy who had been for 2 months working as a fireman upon the identical engine upon which he was riding at the time of the accident,—we feel assured there is no place to be found in the case where instructions were appropriate, which deal with this question of the immature judgment of childhood.

The court gave the jury the following instruction at the instance of defendant: "In this case the plaintiff claims that his son, Charles Lemasters, was killed * * * through wanton and willful neglect of the defendant; and, before you can find a verdict against the defendant, you must be sat-ified that the accident causing the death was not caused alone by negligence, but that negligence must have been willful and wanton." The following instruction was given at the request of plaintiff, in speaking as to the duty of the defendant to give signals and keep a proper lookout in order to prevent a collision: "And if you find from the evidence that the servants of defendant failed therein, and by reason of their negligence, and without the fault of the deceased, Charley Lemasters, he was killed in a collision as alleged in the complaint, it will be your duty to find a verdict for the plaintiff." These two instructions are directly contradictory. The court also gave the jury the following instruction: "And if the servants of defendant in charge of and operating said engine and train, knowing that the deceased, Charley Lemasters, was riding on the footboard of said switch engine, in a dangerous position, yet did not stop the train and order him off, or compel him to get off, but allowed him to remain where he was, without objection, until the collision occurred, then the defendant is liable for his death, and your verdict must be for the plaintiff, provided you find the defendant did not exercise ordinary care to prevent the accident." If this instruction be sound law, then the ordinary tramp riding upon a brakebeam could recover damages for injuries received in a collision occasioned by the negligence of defendant, if the defendant knew the tramp was riding. The instruction does not contain a sound exposition of law. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded.

(S. F. 2,118.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1900.)

BILLS AND NOTES—CONSIDERATION—FAILURE—PROOF—SUFFICIENCY—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—NOTICE OF FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION—REJECTION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Defendants executed two notes, for $385 each, in payment of a commission for selling land, and payable only in the event that the vendees of the land remained on it for one year, and made improvements equal in value to the notes. The vendees plowed 100 acres, which increased its value $2.50 per acre, erected buildings, constructed drainage worth $75, and a levee worth $64, but with the consent of defendants, to whom they executed a reconveyance, abandoned the premises before the expiration of the year. Held, that a finding that there was not a failure of consideration for the notes was proper.

2. Where there was sufficient evidence of plaintiff's ownership of the notes in suit, and the court found against the defendants on the only defense set up by them, error of the court in finding that plaintiff came into possession of the notes without notice of equities in favor of defendants was harmless.

3. Error in rejecting certain evidence as to the conditional delivery of a note was cured by the subsequent admission of all facts tending to show the real consideration for the note.

4. Where the makers of notes resisted payment on the ground of failure of consideration, evidence to vary the terms of the notes, which in no way related to consideration, was properly excluded.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; E. W. Risley, Judge.

Action by the Easton Packing Company against J. W. Kennedy and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Harris & Hubbard and George L. Warlow, for appellants. Frank Kauke and A. M. Drew, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action on two promissory notes. The complaint was dismissed as to defendant Pool. Plaintiff had judgment against defendants Kennedy and McCormick, from which, and from the order denying motion for new trial, they appeal. The notes in suit were executed by defendants, and delivered to one Summers, the payee, October 30, 1893, and each was for $385, due one year from date, and provided for payment of a reasonable attorney's fee and expenses of suit, if sued upon. Plaintiff became the holder and owner of the notes, as found by the court, January 19, 1897. Defendants, in a separate defense, alleged that it was agreed that the notes were "payable only in the event that the purchasers of certain real property, that day (October 30, 1893) conveyed to certain parties by these defendants, should make the payments for said property as stipulated in the agreement of purchase and sale and the mortgage for the purchase price of said premises, in which sale the said Summers had assisted"; that the true and only consideration for the notes was the payment to be made by the purchasers of said property; that before the maturity of the notes sued on the purchasers abandoned it, surrendered possession to defendants, and refused to continue in possession of the property under the agreement of purchase or to make any payments; that the consideration for said notes has wholly failed. The court found that Summers rendered service to defendants Kennedy and McCormick in negotiating and assisting in a sale and in securing purchasers for certain real estate belonging to Kennedy and McCormick, and the notes sued on were executed for and in consideration of said services so rendered, and said services were rendered and fully performed at and prior to the execution of said two notes on the said 30th day of October, 1893. And said notes were payable one year after their said date, and were so payable without regard to the payments to be made by the said purchasers of said real property. The court found against defendants on the special defense pleaded, and finds that the consideration for the notes had not failed.

The evidence showed that the notes represented Summers' commission for finding purchasers for the Kennedy and McCormick land. He found the purchasers, and the sale was made, the vendees taking a deed. They assumed the payment of a mortgage resting on the land for $4,000, and gave their notes and mortgage for the balance of the purchase price, the first notes falling due two years after date, or one year after the notes in question became due. The remaining ten equal payments matured at annual intervals of one year, the last being twelve years from date. Defendants seem to have abandoned the special defense set forth, and relied on evidence that the consideration was that the vendees of the land should remain on it for at least one year, and within that time make certain improvements, of a value not less than the notes given to Summers. Kennedy and McCormick testified that such was the consideration for the notes. Summers was called as a witness for defendants. He was not asked by defendants as to the consideration of the notes nor as to the alleged agreement. On cross-examination he testified: "These two notes came through a land transaction for commission. At the time of the delivery of these notes there was nothing further that I had to do. As far as I had to do the sale was complete, but there was a stipulation,—a verbal agreement—" The witness was interrupted by plaintiff's counsel at this point, and was told that he had not asked him as to any agreement, and this witness for some reason was not interrogated by either party as to the consideration for the notes, although he was a party to the alleged agreement that they were not to be paid unless the work referred to was performed. There was evidence tending to show that the vendees of defendants plowed about 100 acres of the land, and that this was worth $2.50 per acre; that they made some improvements thereon, erected some buildings of uncertain value, dug a half mile of drainage ditch, costing $75, and erected a levee of about same length, costing 40 cents a rod. There was some question as to whether the work was judiciously made, and benefited the land to the extent of its cost. But the alleged agreement proven may fairly apply to work done, and not to its ultimate value to the property. It appeared, also, that the vendees left the ranch before the first year expired, and refused to return to it when requested by defendants; and defendants thereupon, on November 8, 1894, a few days after the notes here in suit were due, and without the consent of the holders of the notes, took a reconveyance of the property from the purchasers, and canceled their notes and mortgage, and allowed the vendees to remove the buildings from the land. What became of the ven-dees' obligation to pay the prior mortgage is not shown, and so far as appears they are still liable for that amount, and defendants have the benefit of the agreement to pay this amount. It appears, also, that while Summers held the notes it became necessary for him to raise $200, which he was enabled to do by procuring the individual indorsement of one Rowell, then president of plaintiff company, and delivered the notes in suit to Rowell as collateral security, and he delivered them to the bank that furnished the money, with the note signed by Summers as principal and Rowell as surety. Before Rowell consented to become surety for Summers, he spoke to defendant McCormick, one of the owners of the land, about the notes in suit. Rowell testified: "Before I took these notes at all, I saw McCormick in regard to them, and asked him if the notes were all right. He said they were, and if it hadn't been for that I never should have taken them. Had no knowledge or information of the notes prior to that time. Had no other information than what I got from McCormick at that time." He further testified that McCormick explained to him that the notes were given to Summers "as commission on a land trade"; that he asked him if there was any condition, and McCormick said that Summers was to keep the notes until a certain amount of work was done on the land, "and that the work was done, and more too." Defendants paid $114.29 on this note, which was credited on the notes in suit by the court.

Conceding that defendants showed that the consideration for the notes was the doing of certain work by the vendees of defendants, and that the vendees would remain on the property one year, the evidence is sufficient to warrant the trial court in its finding that the consideration had not failed. I do not think the fact that the vendees left the land before the expiration of the year shows failure of consideration, the essential thing to defendants, as guaranty of good faith in making the purchase, was that the vendees should expend an amount of money on the land at least equal to the commissions paid to Summers. They did the work, but concluded to give up the place, and defendants consented that they should do so, and took a reconveyance, and canceled the mortgage.

Appellants claim that the findings that plaintiff came into possession of the notes on January 19, 1897, as owner and holder, without notice of any defense by the defendants, is not justified by the evidence. Conceding that plaintiff took its title to the notes subject to all the equities of the makers, the evidence supports the findings of the court against the only defense set up by defendants, and it is therefore immaterial whether or not plaintiff had notice, and, if the court erred in finding that plaintiff had no notice of any defense claimed by defendants, the error was harmless. There is sufficient evidence of plaintiff's ownership of the notes.

Error is claimed in rejecting certain of defendants' offered evidence relating to the alleged conditional delivery of the notes to Summers. The points raised would be worthy of attention if it did not appear from the record that defendants succeeded in getting before the court all the facts bearing upon the question of the consideration for the notes. We have carefully examined the alleged errors, and, conceding error, we find them cured by the unrestrained admission of all the facts tending to show what the consideration was. Evidence tending to vary the terms of the note, not related to the question of consideration, was properly excluded. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

SPIELBERGER v. THOMPSON. (Sac. 734.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1900.)

NOTES—CONSIDERATION—HOLDER.

1. A nonsuit cannot be urged against plaintiff on the ground that he was not the holder at the time of the trial of the note sued on, where it appears that before it was assigned to plaintiff it was placed in the hands of C. as collateral, that the indebtedness for which it was held as security was paid by plaintiff's assignor, and under instructions from defendant, the maker, C. refused to return it to plaintiff, and the answer alleged that C. held it as trustee of defendant.

2. There is consideration for a note where, all the parties to a litigation over the estate being anxious to amicably terminate it, and, the attorney for one of the plaintiffs therein refusing to consent to a dismissal till his fee was paid, one of the defendants told said plaintiff, who had not money to pay his attorney, that if he would dismiss the case she would give him a note to pay his attorney, and would pay the note when she got her money from the estate, and this was agreed to, and steps were immediately taken towards, and resulting in, dismissal, after some delay, largely occasioned by said defendant.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Joseph W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Joseph Spielberger against California Thompson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McKune & George, for appellant. Edward J. Dwyer and Devlin & Devlin, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff, as assignee, brings this action upon a promissory note, against the maker thereof. Its execution and delivery are admitted, but various defenses to its payment are made. These defenses will be considered.

1. It is claimed that plaintiff was not the holder of the note either when the action was brought or the trial had, and for this reason a nonsuit should have been granted. Under the facts disclosed by the record, there is nothing in the point. Before the note was assigned to plaintiff it was placed in the hands of C. W. Clarke as collateral security. The indebtedness for which the note was held as security was paid by plaintiff's assignor, and, under instructions from the defendant, Clarke refused to return the note to him. But, beyond this, defendant alleges in her answer that Clarke held the note as her trustee. If the note was in the possession of her trustee, it was in her possession, and she is foreclosed by her allegation in the answer from successfully urging a nonsuit upon the ground that plaintiff was not the holder of the note at the time of the trial.

2. It is claimed that the note was given without consideration. Let us pause for a moment to look at the facts. The Oppenheimers were engaged in litigation regarding certain trust property; some were plaintiffs, others were defendants, and still others cross complainants. The payee and assignor of the note was a son. The drawer and defendant was a daughter. All parties litigant appeared to be anxious to bring the litigation to an amicable conclusion. Plaintiff's attorney in the litigation would not consent to a dismissal of the actions until his fee was paid, and his objection to a dismissal was a formidable bar in the way looking towards the accomplishment of the desired end. The evidence at this point is somewhat conflicting as between the assignor of the note and the defendant, but upon this evidence the court found against the defendant's testimony, and we are only concerned in testing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the aforesaid finding. In substance, the payee of the note testified that he told defendant he had no money with which to pay the fee of plaintiff's attorney, and she then said "If I would dismiss the case she would give me a note for fifteen hundred dollars to pay the fee of Mr. Johnson, and would pay the note when she got her money from the estate. The note was given to me in consideration of the dismissal of the cases pending at the time. I immediately took numerous steps, and tried numerous times, by my attorneys, to dismiss the action." It further appeared that the plaintiff's assignor paid the attorney his fee, and some time thereafter the action was dismissed. The dismissal was delayed for some months after the execution of the note, but this delay was largely occasioned by defendant herself. It was essentially a question of fact as to the intention of these two parties, respectively, in the making and receiving of the note in controversy. There is no question of actual fraud involved in its procurement. It is not shown but that the attorney was in fact objecting to the dismissal of the action until his fee was paid. And there is no claim that he ever objected to its dismissal after the note was given. From all these facts and circumstances, the finding of a sufficient consideration for the giving of the note will be upheld.

WILLIAMS v. TAM. (S. F. 1520.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1900.)
GIFTS—PARTNERS—SALE—INTEREST OF THIRD PARTY—NOTICE.

1. Where one refuses to accept the money which his wife's daughter owes him, but, on his wife insisting that he should accept it, he tells her to take it and use it herself, and she does take it from a loan thereafter obtained on the daughter's property, the gift is to take effect at once, and so is a valid gift inter vivos.

2. A partnership in training and racing horses does not give one of the partners authority to sell a horse owned by them as tenants in common, though by them trained and raced as partners.

3. Where W., on selling a horse, tells the buyer that his wife owns a half interest therein, the buyer is put on inquiry as to the authority of W. to sell her interest.

Action by Amanda M. Williams against Joseph H. Tam. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas A. McGowan, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and defendant are owners in common of two horses named, respectively, "Midas" and "Sport McAllister"; that said horses are in the possession of defendant; that she is excluded from the use and possession of the horses,—and prays for a decree of partition, that a sale of the horses be ordered, and for an accounting. The defendant denies that the plaintiff has any interest in the horses, and claims to be the sole owner of them by virtue of a sale to him by the husband of the plaintiff, one Dow Williams. The decree granted the prayer for a sale and partition, but denied the accounting; and defendant appeals from the judgment, and also from an order denying a new trial.

Appellant specifies many particulars in which he insists the evidence does not justify the findings. The evidence, however, is sharply conflicting in most material particulars. The facts may be briefly stated as follows: Dow Williams, the husband of the plaintiff, and one Manuel Morris jointly purchased the horse Midas. In the early part of 1895 Morris sold his interest in the horse Midas to the plaintiff, and executed a bill of sale to her. Appellant contends that the purchase was made with community funds, and that the horse became community property, and that Midas and Sport McAllister, subsequently acquired, were sold and transferred to him by the husband, Dow Williams. Plaintiff insists that the purchase was made with her separate money. The price was $500. Plaintiff's daughter, Miss Riley, owed Mr. Williams $450, but he refused to accept it from her. Plaintiff insisted that he should accept it, and he told her to take the money and use it herself. Plaintiff then secured a loan of $750 upon her daughter's property, and out of that money paid Morris for his interest in the horse Midas. The other horse was afterwards purchased with the earnings of Midas. The court found these facts upon sufficient testimony, and concluded that said interest in said horses constituted her separate property. The interest acquired by the plaintiff from Morris was in the early part of 1895. These horses were trained and run on the race track until in March, 1896, when Dow Williams was excluded from the privileges of the Bay District track. Not being able to find a purchaser readily, and being told that the horses would also be ruled off, he testified that he went to the defendant, Tam, for legal advice; that it resulted in the execution of a bill of sale of the horses to defendant, dated April 9, 1896, the consideration recited being $10; and that he then informed "Judge Tam Mrs. Williams had a half interest in those horses." On April 9, 1897, Dow Williams gave Tam his personal receipt for $200 "in full of all demands on account of the sale of the horses Midas, Sport McAllister, and Venus;" and the court found that on that date, and at no other time, Dow Williams sold and conveyed his interest in said horses to the defendant, "and that prior to such sale and conveyance defendant had notice of the said ownership of plaintiff in said horses."

1. Appellant contends "that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that the half interest in the horses became the separate property of the plaintiff by reason of their being purchased with this alleged gift." Sections 1146 and 1147 of the Civil Code, and several cases, are cited to support said proposition. There is here no question as to what is essential to constitute a valid gift. As stated in Zeller v. Jordan, 105 Cal. 148, 38 Pac. 640, cited by appellant: "A gift inter vivos, to be valid, must take effect at once, and there must remain nothing to be done essential to its delivery. If it is to take effect in the future, it is no gift, only a promise to give." But the gift was not to take effect in the future, as in the case above cited, where it was "to take effect at the death of the donor." Here there was no revocation of the gift, and it was in fact received by the donee and appropriated to her own use.

2. It is next contended by appellant that, if said money was the separate property of the wife, she and her husband were co-partners, and that his transfer to defendant was valid and transferred her interest. Plaintiff and her husband were not engaged in the business of buying and selling horses for profit. Their business was training and running horses upon the race track. As to the horses, which were kept and used for a special purpose, they were tenants in common. "A husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property." Civ. Code, § 161. There can be no implication arising from the use made of the horses, nor from the relationship of the parties, that Williams had any authority to sell his wife's interest in the horses, and no authority is shown to have been given him by the plaintiff for such purpose; nor was there any evidence of an agency, whether real or ostensible, for the sale of the plaintiff's interest in the horses. The evidence is that defendant was informed by Dow Williams that his wife owned a half interest in the horses, and that should have put him upon inquiry as to Dow Williams' authority to represent his wife in a transfer of the property. Besides, the bill of sale did not purport to be executed by the plaintiff, nor on her behalf. He cannot, therefore, successfully contend that the plaintiff is estopped by the fact that the horses were in the possession and apparent control of Dow Williams.

3. The motion for nonsuit was properly denied. In his brief, appellant rests this point upon his argument of the points above noticed, and therefore it need not be further discussed.

4. It is contended that the court failed to find upon the special defense that the husband was the reputed owner of the horses, and that defendant purchased them in good faith. The court expressly found "that prior to such sale and conveyance defendant had notice of the said ownership of plaintiff in said horses." The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

STARR v. KREUZBERGER et al. (Sac. 739.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1900.)

APPEALS—FROM JUDGMENT AND ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—STAY BONDS.

An appeal on a stay bond from an order denying a new trial, being prior to dismissal of the appeal from the judgment, stays execution on the judgment; so that, pending the appeal from the order, judgment cannot be entered against the sureties on the stay bond on the appeal from the judgment, though it in terms provides that the sureties will pay the judgment if the appeal be dismissed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Joseph W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Albert H. Starr against Lucas Kreuzberger and another. Plaintiff's motion for judgment against John Skelton and others, sureties on defendants' stay bond on appeal, was denied, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Shinn and H. Starr, for appellant.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for judgment against the sureties on a stay bond. The action was for personal injuries, and plaintiff had judgment March 15, 1898. April 4, 1898, defendants appealed from the judgment, and gave the usual appeal bond, and also an undertaking to stay execution of the judgment. The appeal was dismissed by this court on November 14, 1898 (grounds not shown), and on December 22, 1898, remittitur was filed in the court below. On January 27, 1899, plaintiff moved for judgment against the sureties upon the stay bond. The appeal bond provided, among other things, that: "If the said judgment appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellants will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment; and that, if the appellants do not make such payment within thirty days after the filing of the remittitur from the supreme court in the court from which the appeal is taken, judgment may be entered in said action on motion of respondents, and without notice to us or either of us, in his favor, against the undersigned sureties," etc. This bond was given under section 942, Code Civ. Proc. It appeared that defendants gave notice of motion for a new trial in due time, and in due time their statement on the motion was duly settled and filed. Thereafter, to wit, on September 13, 1898, the motion was duly made, and on the same day was denied, and on October 28, 1898, defendants served and filed their notice of appeal from the order, and on the same day duly filed an undertaking on appeal, which was substantially the same in form as the bond given on the appeal from the judgment, and was in fact a stay bond. At the hearing of plaintiff's motion for judgment on the first bond the court denied the motion, and this appeal is from that order.

It will be observed that before the judgment was entered here (November 14, 1898) dismissing the appeal from the judgment, the motion for a new trial had been heard and denied (September 13, 1898), and the appeal taken from the order, and the stay bond filed (October 28, 1898). In Holland v. McDade, 125 Cal. 353, 58 Pac. 9, it was held that upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial in an action for the recovery of money the reversal of the order would necessarily set aside the judgment; and it was further held, approving Fulton v. Hanna, 40 Cal. 278, that such bond operates to stay execution pending such appeal. See, also, Owen v. Water Co., 124 Cal. 331, 57 Pac. 71. In the Holland-McDade Case, Holland was defendant in the case of Curry against Holland, in which Curry had judgment. Holland moved for a new trial, and his motion was denied, whereupon he appealed from the order denying the motion, and, without appealing from the judgment, gave a stay bond on his appeal. Notwithstanding this appeal, and after the stay bond was filed, Curry took out execution on his judgment, and McDade, as sheriff, served it by levying on certain property belonging to Holland, and on his refusal to release it from execution Holland sued him for damages. The question was, did the stay bond given on the appeal from the order have the effect to stay execution on the judgment? The answer was in the affirmative. In the case now here plaintiff could not have had execution if defendants had not appealed from the judgment (Baldwin v. Superior Court, 125 Cal. 584, 58 Pac. 185, and cases supra); nor could he if defendants had appealed from the judgment, and had given an insufficient or fatally defective bond, and the appeal for that reason had been dismissed, because they would then have been in the same position as if they had not appealed at all from the judgment. We cannot see that any different result would follow where the appeal is from the judgment, and a sufficient stay bond has been given, but for failure for some defect in the proceedings the appeal is dismissed after a stay bond has been filed in the appeal from the order. This latter bond must have the same effect whether the appeal is from the judgment or not, and the fact that a stay bond has been given on the appeal from the judgment can make no difference. It is true, the bond given on the appeal from the judgment in the present case in terms provides that the sureties will pay the judgment if the appeal be dismissed; but the sureties are not liable before the principal, the judgment debtor, has himself become liable. If execution will not issue against the judgment debtor, the plaintiff cannot proceed against the sureties. Parnell v. Hancock, 48 Cal. 452. See, also, Sharon v. Sharon, 84 Cal. 424, 23 Pac. 1100; Id., 84 Cal. 433, 23 Pac. 1102. If it be true, as is now settled, that the stay bond given on the appeal from the order stays execution on the judgment, it must stay its execution for all purposes and as to all persons. To hold that it may be executed against the sureties when it may not be executed against the principal "would," as was said in Parnell v. Hancock, supra, "be to place the sureties in a position apparently less favorable than that occupied by their principal." Besides, defendants may prevail, and secure the reversal of the order, the effect of which would be to set aside the judgment; but their appeal would be barren of results if the judgment had already been enforced either against the principal or the sureties. We think the reasoning in Holland v. McDade applies with equal force to the present case, and is authority for holding that the lower court rightly decided the motion. We advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1900.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY—PLEADING—DEMURRER—APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT—FOREIGN MATTER—REVERSAL—COSTS.

1. Where the record on appeal showed only one judgment, and no order in the nature of a judgment, a notice of appeal "from said judgment made and entered in said action in favor of defendants and against the plaintiff" was sufficiently specific to entitle appellant to be heard on appeal.

2. Where a portion of the complaint stated a cause of action, a general demurrer to the whole complaint was improperly sustained.

3. Where the first part of the complaint stated a cause of action, and was followed by matter foreign to such cause of action, which was objectionable for misjoinder of actions and parties and for ambiguity, a special demurrer to the whole complaint was improperly sustained; since, if any part of the complaint shows a cause of action free from objection, a special demurrer to the whole will not lie.

4. Where the transcript on appeal is filed with matters foreign to the case, full costs will not be awarded to appellant on reversal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; H. L. Gillespie, Judge.

Action by David Jones, as administrator with the will annexed of Evan Davis, deceased, against Neils Iverson and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, entered on demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

David Jones, in pro. per. L. G. Morse, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendants demurred to the complaint on several grounds. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, defendants had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals.

1. Respondents object to the consideration of the appeal on the ground of the insufficiency of the notice. It is as follows: "[Title, court, and cause.] Please take notice that the plaintiff in the above-entitled action hereby appeals to the supreme court of the state of California from said judgment made and entered in said action in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff. * * * The notice does not give the date of the judgment, nor identify it in any way, except by the statement as above given. If the record showed more than one judgment, or if it showed, in addition to that judgment, an order in the nature of a judgment, the notice might be ineffectual for uncertainty. But, as there was but one judgment, to wit, the judgment on demurrer in favor of defendants and against the plaintiff, we think the notice was sufficiently definite to entitle appellant to be heard here.

2. The demurrer went to the sufficiency of the complaint, and also specially set forth as grounds misjoinder of parties defendant, that several causes of action have been improperly united, that the complaint is unintelligible, uncertain, and ambiguous. The complaint was drawn by plaintiff and signed in propria persona. It is obvious that he is a layman with a very imperfect notion of what constitutes the statement of a cause of action in plain and concise language. Briefly, it is alleged in the complaint that one Evan Davis died testate in April, 1888, seised of certain land in Mendocino county, and plaintiff was duly appointed administrator of the estate of deceased, with the will annexed; that on May 3, 1892, "plaintiff was, ever since has been, and now is, the owner, and seised in fee, and entitled to the possession of that certain tract of land" (here follows a description of the land of which the complaint alleges ownership of deceased at his death, and also an additional tract not in the former description). The complaint (paragraph 11) then sets forth that while plaintiff was such owner, possessed and entitled to possession of said land, the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered into and upon the said land, and ousted plaintiff therefrom, and ever since have wrongfully and unlawfully withheld and now withhold possession, etc., to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $50,000. Then follow some 60-odd folios of allegations of various incidents in the history of plaintiff and the said Davis, and their relations with sundry persons, and sets forth certain litigation had by plaintiff and said Davis with sundry persons that apparently have nothing whatever to do with the cause of action set out in the first 11 paragraphs of the complaint, and ought to have been stricken out on motion. The special demurrer seems to have been directed to this portion of the complaint, although it in terms applies to the entire complaint; and might, as to the matters referred to, have been sustained. But we think there is a cause of action stated in the earlier part of the complaint, which must be held to be sufficiently pleaded as against a general demurrer, and is equally good against the special demurrer. The rule is well established that a general demurrer directed to the whole of the complaint should be overruled if some portion of the complaint states a cause of action. A special demurrer is, or should be, directed to specific portions of the complaint, and the grounds should be specifically pointed out. The grounds for the special demurrer in the present case are not pointed to any particular paragraph or paragraphs, but are directed to the whole complaint. But the first 11 paragraphs state a cause of action, and, separated from the succeeding paragraphs, are not obnoxious to the special demurrer. We must look to these succeeding paragraphs to ascertain the grounds for the special demurrer. It may be admitted that these subsequent matters are wholly foreign to the cause of action stated in the first part of the complaint; it may be that, as to these foreign and irrelevant matters, there would appear misjoinder of actions and parties, and unintelligibility and ambiguity of statement; still, as the demurrer is to the whole complaint, and there remains a good cause of action elsewhere stated, it was error to sustain the demurrer. If enough appears to make the pleading easy of comprehension and free from reasonable doubt, a demurrer on the ground of ambiguity should be overruled. Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 58 Pac. 376, citing Salmon v. Wilson, 41 Cal. 595. In Weaver v. Conger, 10 Cal. 234, the court said: "The complaint was very loosely drawn, and contains much useless verbiage; but, taking it altogether, the facts stated were sufficient to sustain an action. The demurrer was to the whole complaint; and, not being good as to all, was properly overruled." In that case there was a general demurrer and a special demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action. See, also, People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 336. Where the special demurrer is to the whole of the complaint, the rule should be the same as in the case of a general demurrer to the whole complaint. If in a portion of the complaint there is stated a good cause of action, free from ambiguity or uncertainty, or which, in short, is not amenable to any of the grounds urged in the special demurrer, it is error to sustain the demurrer as to the entire complaint. It would seem that the redundant and irrelevant matter to which the special demurrer was directed in this case could have been reached better by a motion to strike out. However this may be, the court should have overruled the general demurrer, and should have sustained the special demurrer as to all that part of the complaint following the first 11 paragraphs, with leave to amend. If plaintiff had, in such case, persisted and refused to amend, there would be some reason for sustaining a judgment against him on the demurrer. The judgment should be reversed, but, as the transcript is stuffed with matters having nothing to do with the case, plaintiff should recover no more than one-fifth of the costs of appeal.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, plaintiff to be allowed one-fifth of the costs of the appeal.

KLUMPKE v. BAKER et al. (S. F. 1,640.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1900.)

TAXATION—ASSESSMENT—LANDS JOINTLY ASSESSED—EFFECT—COLLECTOR'S RECORDS—ERROR—EFFECT ON TAX DEED.

1. Pol. Code, § 3628, provides that no mistake in the name of the owner to whom real estate is assessed shall invalidate the assessment. Id. § 3650, subsec. 3, provides that the assessor shall specify, in the assessment book, city and town lots, naming the city or town, and the number of the lot or block, according to the system of numbering of such city or town. Held that, where there was no system of subdividing blocks into lots, the assessor was authorized to assess parts of blocks according to ownership, and his error in including in one parcel land owned by more than one person would not invalidate the assessment, such error being merely a mistake in the name of the owner.

2. Pol. Code, § 3778, requires the tax collector, before delivering any certificate of sale for taxes to the purchaser, to copy from such certificate the description of the lands sold into a book to be kept in his office. Section 3787 declares that a tax deed shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings, from the assessment to the execution of the deed. Held, that where the collector made a mistake in the copy of the description of the land kept in his office, such error would not prejudice the rights of a purchaser at the tax sale after receiving his tax deed.

Action by Klumpke against Baker and others. From an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

R. H. Countryman, for appellant. H. C. Firebaugh, D. T. Sullivan, and W. F. Sullivan, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Action to quiet title. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed from an order denying a new trial. The plaintiff's title is based upon certain tax deeds for different portions of the premises described in the complaint, three of the deeds being for the taxes thereon for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and one for the succeeding year. The deeds were all executed to the plaintiff July 13, 1886, and this action was commenced July 11, 1891. Upon the introduction of the deeds in evidence the plaintiff rested. Unless, therefore, some evidence was introduced on the part of the defendants which had the effect to impeach the validity of these deeds, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Pol. Code, § 3788.

The defendants offered certain evidence to the effect that the lots for which the deeds had been executed had not been assessed to their respective owners, two of said lots having been assessed to the defendant George H. Baker, whereas they were, at the time of the assessment, the property of his wife, Mary A. Baker, and stood of record in her name. Evidence was also introduced to the effect that each of these lots included a portion of the lot belonging to an adjacent owner. The respondents contend that, by reason of the assessments thus made, the tax deeds are entirely inoperative, and confer no title upon the plaintiff. Section 3628, Pol. Code, provides that the assessor shall assess the property "to the person by whom it was owned or claimed, or in whose possession or control it was at twelve o'clock M. of the first Monday of March next preceding; but no mistake in the name of the owner, or supposed owner of real property, shall render the assessment thereof invalid." The assessment is not against the owner, but is of the property, and that must be correctly described. The name of the owner of the property assessed is an incidental provision for the sake of convenience, but a failure to give the correct name of the owner is declared by the statute not to impair the assessment. In Lake Co. v. Sulphur Bank Quicksilver Min. Co., 66 Cal. 20, 4 Pac. 876, it was said: "The ascertainment of the name of the owner is a matter with respect to which the assessor has discretionary power, and his judgment or conclusion in regard to it is final so far as the validity of the tax is concerned." The failure of the assessor to describe the land in accordance with the metes and bounds given in the conveyance to the person who is assessed therefor, as well as his including therein land which is owned by another person, is only "a mistake in the name of the owner" of the lot assessed, and does not render the assessment invalid. The cases cited by the respondents arose under a statute which did not contain the above provision of section 3628. Each of the parcels described in the other two tax deeds was assessed to unknown owners. Such assessment is expressly authorized by section 3636, Pol. Code.

The provision in subdivision 3 of section 3650, that the assessor must specify in the assessment book, under its appropriate head, "city and town lots, naming the city or town and the number of the lot or block, according to the system of numbering of such city or town, and improvements thereon," was followed in the present assessments. The assessor observed the provisions of this section by specifying the number of the block according to the official subdivisions of the land in that portion of the city; and it does not appear that there is any "system" in San Francisco for the subdivision of the blocks into lots. In such a case, the assessor may assess any subdivisions according to their individual ownership, and his determination thereon is not open to review, and, if erroneous, does not invalidate the assessment. In Cadwalader v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43, 14 Pac. 385, cited by the respondents, it appeared that the pueblo lots had been officially divided into city blocks, and these blocks again subdivided into a large number of lots, which were designated by numbers upon the official map, and that the assessor disregarded these subdivisions, and assessed the east half of the pueblo lot as a single parcel.

Section 3778, as it stood at the time of the tax sales in question, provided that the tax collector, before delivering any certificate, must enter in a book kept for that purpose in his office a description of the land sold, corresponding with the description in the certificate, and certain other particulars. At the trial herein the defendants offered this book in evidence, and in one instance the description therein of the land sold varied from that contained in the certificate and in the tax deed, and was in itself defective, and they contend that by reason thereof the deed was ineffective. A proper construction of the several provisions of the statute fails to sustain this contention. Section 3776 provides that, after receiving the amount of the taxes and costs, the collector must make out, in duplicate, a certificate, stating certain matters therein specified; and section 3777 declares that one copy of the certificate must be delivered to the purchaser, and the other filed in the office of the county recorder. By section 3779 it is declared that "on filing the certificate with the county recorder the lien of the state vests in the purchaser, and is only divested by the payment to him, or to the county treasurer for his use, of the purchase money and fifty per cent. thereon." Section 3786 declares that "the matters recited in the certificate of sale must be recited in the deed," and that such deed is primary evidence of certain facts; and section 3787 declares that the deed is "conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings, from the assessment by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed," one of which is the act of the tax collector in copying the certificate into the book of descriptions. It is not to be held that the rights of the purchaser can be impaired by the failure of the tax collector to make a correct copy of the certificate in this book.

In one of the deeds the land is described as commencing at a point 69 feet easterly from Lyon street, and the complaint describes the land in controversy with the same boundary. Evidence was offered in behalf of the defendant O'Connor to the effect that the block which embraces the land in controversy is of smaller dimensions than that delineated upon the assessor's map, and that the land claimed by him commences, for its western boundary, at a point 15 feet east of Lyon street. Whether the land claimed by him is included in the tax deed is to be determined by ascertaining the actual location of Lyon street. The court made no finding upon this subject, and the record does not contain any evidence from which that fact can be ascertained. The evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants was insufficient to defeat the title of the plaintiff as shown by the tax deeds, and for that reason the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial. The order is reversed.

MURDER—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. One accused of murder, on the day of the killing, borrowed a shotgun and four shells, stating his purpose was to shoot squirrels. He used two of the shells in shooting squirrels. Between 5 and 6 o'clock of the same day a Chinese laundryman, with his laundry, went into the house where accused boarded, and never came out. Next day his body was found concealed beneath the floor of the house. Death had resulted from two shotgun wounds inflicted with the borrowed gun and two of the borrowed shells. Gunshots, coming from the house, were heard about the time the Chinaman was at the house. Accused was seen at the house shortly after the shots were heard. The owner of the house, who was absent that day, returned to his house drunk between 7 and 8 o'clock that night. Accused made false statements when questioned by the officers after the killing, and made a bold attempt to escape from their custody. Held sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the second degree.

2. On a trial for murder alleged to have been committed in a house, a witness who heard the shots may be asked if he could tell from the sound of the shots whether they were in the house or out of it.

3. Where a witness states that he could distinguish by the sound the difference between shots fired with a shotgun and those fired with a rifle, and that he heard the shots which killed deceased, on a trial for the murder he may state that the shots sounded like those from a shotgun.

4. Where on a trial for murder a witness states that he was sitting on a rock near the house where deceased was killed, and heard shots in the house, and shortly thereafter saw accused come out, third persons, to whom such witness stated he pointed out the rock, may state that the house could be seen from the rock, in rebuttal of evidence by accused that it could not be seen therefrom.

5. Where a murder was committed either by accused or another, and accused claimed on the trial that it was committed by such other, the prosecution may prove by the latter that he did not kill the deceased.

6. On a trial for murder, the motive for which is assigned as robbery, accused cannot be impeached by showing his illicit relations with a certain woman.

7. On a trial for murder, the motive for which is assigned as robbery, the improper admission of evidence of accused's illicit relations with a certain woman is not reversible error, where evidence of the same general character was introduced by accused.

8. Where a motion for a new trial for newly-discovered evidence is based on accused's affidavit, stating that his evidence on the trial was false, and on affidavits of others setting out matters merely cumulative, its refusal will not be disturbed on appeal.

9. On a trial for murder, based on circumstantial evidence, an instruction authorizing the jury, if they have a reasonable doubt as to which of two opposing conclusions the chain of circumstances leads, they should give accused the benefit of such doubt, is properly refused, where both of the opposing conclusions might lead to accused's guilt.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Harry W. Clarke was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Shinn and D. Allen, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of the crime of murder of the second degree, and appeals to this court. It is earnestly insisted that the evidence does not warrant a conviction. The evidence was purely circumstantial, and the salient facts are these: One Joseph Hunter, a constable, lived in a four-room house near the public road, some three miles distant from the city of Los Angeles. The defendant, a young man of slight physique and weight, afflicted with a perceptible lameness in one leg, had been living with Hunter for some weeks. Upon the day of the killing, Hunter was in the city of Los Angeles; the defendant being alone at the house. During the early part of the day defendant borrowed a shotgun of one neighbor, and four loaded shells of another, stating his purpose was to shoot squirrels. And during the early afternoon he undoubtedly fired two of these shells at squirrels near his house. Between 5 and 6 o'clock of this day a Chinese laundryman drove up to the house for the purpose of delivering laundry, as was his usual weekly custom. He went into the house with the laundry, and never came out. His horse and wagon stood in front of the house for an hour or more, and then the horse wandered away aimlessly down the road. Upon the following morning suspicion of murder became rife in the neighborhood, and upon the third or fourth day thereafter the dead body of the Chinaman was found concealed beneath the floor of the house. Death had resulted from two shotgun wounds inflicted with the borrowed gun and two of the borrowed shells. At some time between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock of this day, and after the Chinaman had entered Hunter's house, one witness heard two shotgun shots, apparently coming from within the house, and other witnesses heard at least one shot coming from the same direction. Two bedsheets, evidently taken from defendant's bed, were found wrapped around the head and shoulders of the dead man. Spots of blood were found at various points in the house, and evidence of an attempt to conceal and erase them was apparent. Indeed, there is no question but that the Chinaman was killed in the house by gunshot wounds inflicted with the borrowed gun and shells. Defendant made many false statements when questioned by the officers after the killing, and also made a bold effort to escape from their custody. He was seen at the house by one witness a few minutes after the two shots were heard, although he claims to have left the house soon after the Chinaman had entered it and not to have returned until an hour or two later. About 10 or 11 o'clock of that night, at the house, he showed a woman friend considerable silver money, and the theory of the state is that the purpose of the killing was robbery. Hunter returned to his house drunk, at some time between 7 and 8 o'clock of that night. There are other items of evidence looking towards defendant's guilt, which it is not necessary to here detail. If the Chinaman was killed between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock of that afternoon, or even as late as 7 o'clock, the defendant's guilt is well assured; and that the gunshots heard by the aforesaid witnesses as coming from the direction of the house caused the death of the Chinaman is equally well assured. There were but four loaded shells for the gun, and two of these shells had been fired early in the afternoon at squirrels. The remaining two shells were the shells used in the killing. Defendant, by his counsel, claims that Hunter must have killed deceased; but that theory is confronted with the fact that Hunter did not return to his house until after 7 o'clock, at least, and the two shots from the gun, as testified to by the witnesses, must have been fired previous to that time. While the fact cannot be considered upon the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, still it may be mentioned that the correctness of the jury's disbelief in the evidence of defendant as to his alibi was subsequently impregably fortified by his own affidavit introduced upon his motion for a new trial, wherein, under oath, he admitted his testimony at the trial to be false, and stated that he was present at the killing, and saw Hunter fire the shots that killed the deceased, and subsequently stood by when Hunter concealed the dead body. We have given the salient facts disclosed by the record. In addition to these, there are many others of minor importance; and, taking them altogether, we are prepared to say that the verdict of the jury has full support in the evidence, and it will not be disturbed by this court upon the ground urged.

A witness, under objection, was asked the following question: "Q. Could you tell from the sound of the shots about where they were, —whether they were in the house or out of the house?" The objection was properly overruled. People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 602, 41 Pac. 697. The witness was also justified in testifying that the shots sounded like those fired from a shotgun. Even if it be conceded that this evidence should only come from the mouth of an expert, still there was no objection to the question upon that ground; and the witness also stated that he was able to distinguish, by the sound, the difference between shots fired from a shotgun and those fired from a rifle.

The witness Le Page testified that he was sitting upon a rock several hundred feet from Hunter's house when he heard the shots fired, and that a few minutes thereafter he saw defendant come out of the house, look into the wagon of the Chinaman, and then return into the house. The defendant offered evidence to the effect that a person sitting on the rock described by the witness could not see Hunter's house. The location of this particular rock, therefore, became very material; and in rebuttal Le Page testified that he pointed out to the state's witnesses the rock upon which he was sitting when he saw defendant at the house. These witnesses then testified that the house could be seen from the rock pointed out by Le Page. We see no valid objection to this line of testimony.

There was no error committed by the court in allowing the prosecution to prove by Hunter that he did not kill the Chinaman. It may be said the evidence points with unerring certainty to the fact that either the defendant or Hunter killed the Chinaman. Indeed, counsel for defendant all through the trial of the case claim that deceased must have been killed by Hunter. Under these circumstances, the testimony of Hunter was competent and admissible. People v. Van Horn, 119 Cal. 328, 51 Pac. 538.

The defendant, when on the witness stand, was asked in regard to one Miss Letitia Allec: "Q. You were living there with her, was you not?" The question was clearly objectionable, and clearly prejudicially objectionable. You cannot degrade or impeach a witness in this way. Under almost any circumstances other than those here presented, this error would demand a reversal of the judgment and a new trial of the defendant. This court has held questions of this character prejudicially objectionable so many times in the past that it is surprising the state's officers will continue to indulge in the practice of asking them. In the very recent case of People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 135, 57 Pac. 785, the whole matter is fully discussed, and the authorities cited. But, in view of the fact that other evidence of the same general tenor was introduced upon the part of the defendant, we think it apparent that the error committed by the trial court in the admission of the answer to this question did not prejudice him. The record discloses, by the evidence of defendant's witnesses, that this woman had been living a portion of her time prior to the killing at Hunter's house, with defendant. The woman herself testified in answer to defendant's counsel: "About two weeks before the shooting I remember riding from the city with Joe Hunter towards his place. At that time, and between the city and his place, on the road, he said to me: 'Why don't you get rid of Harry? He hasn't got any money, and if you get rid of him I will give you all the money and fine clothes you want.' He also said on the same occasion that Harry was no good, only for his good looks." And upon cross-examination she says: "Joe Hunter didn't say to me that I had better marry Clarke. He wanted me to quit Harry and go with him. That is all."

Defendant made a motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and in support of his motion presented many affidavits. He himself made an affidavit to the effect that his testimony bearing upon his claim of an alibi was false, and that he was present in the house and saw Hunter kill the Chinaman and subsequently conceal the body. As tending to furnish statutory grounds for a new trial, we attach no importance whatever to this affidavit. The court below evidently had but little doubt of its falsity. Indeed, it appears by the record that, subsequent to defendant's conviction, Hunter was tried for the murder of the Chinaman and acquitted; the jury evidently not believing defendant's testimony, which was in line with his affidavit here under consideration. We have also examined the contents of the other affidavits introduced by him as showing newly-discovered evidence. As to some of them,—for example, that of Anna Bibby,—it may well have impressed the trial court as being entirely unbelievable. Others contain matters of minor importance, and still others set out matters of an entirely cumulative character. In view of the law by which this court is governed in reviewing a question of this character, we will not disturb the order denying the new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. People v. Demasters, 109 Cal. 607, 42 Pac. 236. We do not find it necessary to pass upon the admissibility of certain counter affidavits offered by the state upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial.

Complaint is made of the court's refusal to give the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that if one set or chain of circumstances leads to two opposing conclusions, one or the other of such conclusions must be wrong; and therefore, in such a case, if you have a reasonable doubt as to which of said conclusions the chain of circumstances leads, a reasonable doubt would thereby be created, and you should give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him." In view of the fact that both of these "opposing conclusions" might lead to defendant's guilt, the instruction, for this reason alone, was properly refused.

There is no substantial error disclosed by the record. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TERRILL. (Cr. 634.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1900.)

CRIMINAL LAW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY—RULE OF COURT.

Rule 29 of the supreme court provides that, in all cases of appeal to the supreme court from orders of the superior courts, the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions. Held, that where an information was set aside on the ground that the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate, and the record, on an appeal from the order, did not include the affidavits and papers used on the preliminary examination in a bill of exceptions, the order must be affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by the people against Samuel B. Terrill. From an order granting a motion to set aside the information, the people appeal. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and James H. Campbell, for appellant. Jackson Hatch, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by the people from an order of the court below granting a motion to set aside the information. The main ground of the motion was that prior to the information respondent had not been legally committed by a magistrate. What is called the "Transcript on Appeal" shows what purport to be a large number of affidavits and other papers and testimony given and proceedings had at the preliminary examination; but there is no bill of exceptions authenticating these matters, and therefore there is nothing before us into which we can look to see whether the order appealed from was or was not erroneous. The Codes contain no provision, either in civil or criminal cases, for authenticating papers or evidence used on a motion, other than a bill of exceptions, and formerly there was great difficulty and confusion on the subject. It was held in Walsh v. Hutchings, 60 Cal. 228, that the certificate of the clerk would not do. In Peper v. Land Co., 56 Cal. 173, the judge of the lower court had certified to the papers used, and the court said that, "as the Codes had prescribed no mode of authentication, this court has the power to prescribe by a rule how such papers can be brought before it on appeal," and that, "as it has such right to make a rule in advance, it has a like power to ratify and adopt the mode followed in this case," and the papers named in the judge's certificate were considered. There is no decision as to when the judge must make his certificate, and his recollection of the facts might be very indistinct; and in Borkheim v. Insurance Co., 38 Cal. 627, the court suggests to members of the bar that they "request the judge, at the hearing of such motion, to indorse each affidavit or other document as having been used upon the motion." In Somers v. Somers, 81 Cal. 608, 22 Pac. 967, the whole matter was extensively discussed, several justices expressing opinions. It was held in the leading opinion "that the papers could only be presented to this court by bill of exceptions," but, as the certificate of the judge was itself insufficient, it was probably on that ground that the appeal was dismissed; the court being embarrassed by former decisions. But it was suggested in that case, which was decided in 1899, that there should be a rule of court on the subject to "operate prospectively"; and immediately afterwards the rule, then No. 32, and now No. 29, was adopted, which is as follows: "In all cases of appeal to this court from the orders of the superior courts, the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law." Afterwards, in March, 1891, the case of White v. White, 88 Cal. 429, 26 Pac. 236, was decided, in which this court said: "The transcript on appeal herein purports to show that certain affidavits and testimony of witnesses were used upon the hearing of the motion which resulted in the order appealed from, but there is no bill of exceptions in the record. In the case of Somers v. Somers, 81 Cal. 608, 22 Pac. 967, the members of this court were divided as to the proper practice to be pursued in authenticating the record on appeal from this class of orders, but since then the court has adopted rule 32, which, we think, should be deemed as settling the practice, so far as relates to appeals taken since it went into effect; and, this appeal having been taken since that date, the rule is decisive of the question arising on this motion." That case was decided nearly 10 years ago, and the rule itself has been in existence more than 11 years, and there is no reason why since then all difficulties on the subject should not be avoided by a compliance with the rule. Of course, the rule does not apply to papers which are themselves parts of the judgment roll, as was the case in Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 609, 35 Pac. 345, 639. The order appealed from is affirmed.

DENNIS v. KOLM et al. (KOLM, Intervener).
(L. A. 748.)

ACTION AGAINST FIRM—INTERVENTION—INTERESTED PARTY—EVIDENCE OF PARTNERSHIP—PRIMA FACIE CASE—ADMISSION OF DECLARATIONS.

1. In an action against a firm, an intervener claiming to own money attached therein as the property of one who denied that he was a member, and alleging that the money was the proceeds of a note and mortgage which he assigned to her, is an interested party, within

Code Civ. Proc. § 387, authorizing intervention by any one having "an interest in the matter in litigation."

2. On an issue in an action against a firm as to whether an intervener owned the proceeds of a note and mortgage attached as the property of a defendant, who denied that he was a member, and which note and mortgage she claimed he had assigned to her, declarations made by the other defendants as to the partnership affairs, who composed the firm, the amount of the investments of each in the business, and the object of the member in question in disposing of the note and mortgage to intervener, were admissible.

3. After a prima facie case as to partnership is made, the admissions and conduct of the several partners in the course of the partnership business are admissible against the others.

4. Whether a prima facie case as to partnership has been made, so as to justify admission of the declarations of partners, is for the court to determine in a trial before a jury.

5. On an issue as to whether a mercantile partnership existed between two brothers and a third, who denied it, it appeared that the latter was in the store, and in and about the business, conducting and managing it, apparently as the others. Before the business started in the place in question, he said to one witness that he was going to invest some money, and look around and start in business there. He afterwards said to another that he had more money invested in the business than his brothers. After the store was closed, and he had removed to a distant city, and begun business alone, he said, in answer to a question as to some of his goods, that "we" (meaning himself and brothers) had a store at the place in question, but could not agree, and, after disposing of what they could, the balance of the goods were to be shipped to where he then was. He also said in a letter that, "We are also through with the business," that each went his own way, and that they could not think of such a thing as to conduct a business in partnership again. Held to establish a prima facie case of partnership, warranting the admission, as evidence that he was a partner, of the declarations of his two brothers.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by B. H. Dennis against K., T. E., and H. Kolm, co-partners, doing business as Kolm Bros., in which Bertha Kolm intervened. From a judgment for defendant H. Kolm and the intervener, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Dillon & Dunning, for appellant. McKeeley & McKeeley and L. C. Whitney, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This action was brought to recover for goods, wares, and merchandise alleged to have been sold to the defendants as co-partners under the firm name of Kolm Bros. One Perkins had in his hands about $870, which plaintiff claimed to be the money of H. Kolm, who was alleged to be one of the partners. Plaintiff had the $870 attached in this action as the property of H. Kolm. Bertha Kolm, a sister, filed a complaint in intervention, in which she denied that the money so attached was the property of H. Kolm, or of Kolm Bros., and alleged that the same was her property, and asked that she be adjudged to be the owner thereof. A de-murrer was interposed by plaintiff to the complaint in intervention, overruled, and plaintiff filed an answer to said complaint. The respondent H. Kolm filed an answer to the complaint of plaintiff, in which, among other things, he denied that he ever was at any time a member of the firm of Kolm Bros., or that he was in any way indebted to the plaintiff. The case was tried before a jury, and verdicts rendered for the respondent H. Kolm and the intervener, Bertha Kolm. Upon these verdicts judgment was entered. This appeal is from the judgment and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

It is claimed that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint in intervention, for the reason that the said complaint does not state facts showing that the intervener has any interest in the matter in controversy, or that the decision would in any way affect her rights. It is provided in the Code of Civil Procedure (section 387): "Any person may, before the trial, intervene in an action or proceeding, who has an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both." In this case the intervener claimed the money in the hands of Perkins as the proceeds of a note and mortgage that had been assigned to her by respondent H. Kolm. She alleged that Kolm Bros. were at no time the owners of said note or mortgage, or of the money in the hands of Perkins, but that she was the owner of the same. If she could show that H. Kolm was not one of the co-partners of the firm of Kolm Bros., then he was not indebted to plaintiff. If plaintiff was not a creditor of H. Kolm at any time, then he could not attack the transfer of the note and mortgage made by H. Kolm to the intervener. We think the intervener had such interest as would entitle her to intervene under the statute. It was said by this court in Coffey v. Greenfield, 55 Cal. 382, in speaking of the interest which entitles a party to intervene: "And the Code does not attempt to specify what or how great this interest shall be in order to give a right to intervene. Any interest is sufficient. The fact that the intervener may or may not protect his interest in some other way is not material. If he has an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of either of the parties, he has a right to intervene." The provisions of our statute are taken substantially from the Code of Procedure of Louisiana, and the practice in that state is to allow a party to intervene whose property has been seized or attached in the suit. Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, p. 464, § 427, note 2; Field v. Harrison, 20 La. Ann. 411; Yale v. Hoopes, 16 La. Ann. 311; Letchford v. Jacobs, 17 La. Ann. 79.

Plaintiff claims that the court erred in sustaining objections made by respondents to several questions tending to prove declarations made by F. Kolm and T. E. Kolm as to the partnership affairs, who composed the firm, the amount of the investments of each of the brothers in the business, as to the object of respondent H. Kolm in disposing of the note and mortgage to respondent Bertha Kolm. The above statement shows generally the nature of the offered evidence, and it will not be necessary to consider the questions and rulings separately. The court, after several questions were asked tending to show the above matters, in sustaining objections to the questions said: "I don't care to hear any authorities upon the proposition that one man can, by any declaration of his, bind another, except he be present and hear it, as to the relation between them. I said yesterday that this is a case of trial by jury in which they determine all questions of fact. It is not within the province or power of this court to say whether any prima facie case or any other case is made out. The objection is sustained." The court erred in excluding the offered evidence. It was one of the main points at issue as to whether or not H. Kolm was one of the partners of the firm of Kolm Bros. It was also material to determine the issue as to the ownership of the note and mortgage which H. Kolm claims to have sold to his sister Bertha. After a prima facie case as to partnership is made, the admissions and conduct of the several partners in the course of the partnership business are admissible as against the others. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 177; Colly. Partn. § 775; 1 Lindl. Partn. (2d Ed.) p. 128, note 2. And in a trial before a jury it is incumbent on the judge to determine the question whether there is prima facie evidence of a partnership. Hilton v. McDowell, 87 N. C. 364; Bryce v. Joynt, 63 Cal. 378. The ultimate facts in such cases should be determined by the jury upon proper instructions from the court, but, the prima facie showing of a partnership having been made, the court should admit all evidence that is admissible upon the theory that the partnership has been fully proven. Any other rule would deprive a party of very material testimony. In this case, for instance, if the jury had concluded that a partnership existed, and that H. Kolm was a member of the said partnership, it would not have had before it any of the evidence that was offered upon the theory that he was such partner. The exclusion of the evidence was upon the theory that H. Kolm was never a partner of Kolm Bros. If the jury had found such co-partnership, then the evidence was admissible. In order for it to be admitted the case would have to be retried. There was ample evidence to show prima facie that H. Kolm was a partner of Kolm Bros. He was in the store, and was in and about the business, conducting and managing it apparently as the other brothers. Before the business was opened in Los Angeles the witness Linehan testified that H. Kolm told her "that he was going to invest some money, and look around, and start in business here in Los Angeles." The witness Jappa testified that H. Kolm told him that "he had more money invested in the business than his brothers." The witness Stelinski testified that, after Kolm Bros. had closed their store in Los Angeles, he was present at a store in Chicago being opened by H. Kolm, and witness saw goods marked very low, and some of the cases had "Los Angeles" written upon them, which appeared to be obliterated; and witness said to H. Kolm, "Have you stolen those goods, or found them, because you can sell them so cheap?" Kolm answered: "We had a store in Los Angeles,—we brothers,—but we couldn't agree. * * * After disposing of what we could, the balance was shipped to Chicago." He said they were three in partnership. He said, "The Jews swindled enough, and it is not more than right that we should do the same, or swindle them." In a letter written at Chicago, August 22, 1897, to his sister, the intervener, H. Kolm said: "Now, we are already through with the business, and live again on Fry street here. Each goes his own way whence he came. Theodore will soon be West again, Ferdinand again at Moody's school, and I am out working at present. * * * We cannot think of such a thing as to conduct a business in partnership again." There are other circumstances and admissions, but the above is sufficient. It was the duty of the court to determine whether or not a prima facie case showing H. Kolm to have been a partner was established. Such prima facie case was established. The offered evidence was admissible upon the theory that H. Kolm was a partner. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

LARRABEE v. TOWN OF CLOVERDALE et al. (S. F. 1,583.)¹

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — SURFACE WATER IN STREET—DIVERSION ONTO PRIVATE PROPERTY—ACTION FOR NUISANCE—NON-SUIT—EVIDENCE—GRADE OF STREET—RULE AS TO CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES—APPLICATION.

1. In an action against a town for a nuisance caused by the diversion onto plaintiff's lot of surface water running past the same, it was claimed that the water never ran there in a well-defined channel. Plaintiff testified that, from the time she went to reside on the lot in 1886, "there was a waterway at the edge of the sidewalk, * * * perhaps eighteen inches deep," crossed by "a plank about three feet long." Another witness said that the water had flowed along the street in question from the time it was graded, in 1881, and before that, for 25 years or more, had flowed along generally in the direction of the street, in "a well-defined water course and channel, meandering generally along what is now the general course" of such street. Other witnesses said that prior to 1893 there was no regular ditch along the street, but only a gutter, and that the water was confined merely by the sidewalk on one side and the rise of the street on the other. Held, that it was error to grant a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence that the stream had flowed in a clearly-defined channel.

2. A municipality, the same as an individual, has no right to divert surface water from the channel in which it flows in a street, whether natural or artificial, and however it may have come into the street, and throw it onto the land of another.

3. The rule that a city, in grading a street in the regular performance of its legitimate functions, is not responsible for consequential damages, does not apply to its direct invasion of the rights of a lot owner, where it diverts water from its channel in the street, and throws it onto his premises.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; S. K. Dougherty, Judge.

Action by Hester A. Larrabee against the town of Cloverdale and others. Plaintiff was nonsuited, and from an order denying a new trial she appeals. Reversed.

Smith & Murasky, for appellant. James W. Oates and J. R. Leppo, for respondents.

SMITH, C. The plaintiff was nonsuited in the court below, and appeals from an order denying a new trial. The suit was brought to enjoin the maintenance of an alleged nuisance, and for damages suffered by the plaintiff by reason of it. The defendants, other than the town, were trustees of the town, but are sued individually. There was no evidence tending to establish the cause of action as against them, and as to them the nonsuit was rightly granted. The material facts of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, are as follows:

Plaintiff is the owner of a lot containing about two acres of land in the town of Cloverdale, fronting northwest on First, and northeast on Washington, street. First street runs northeast and southwest; but the witnesses speak with regard to it as though it ran east and west, and for convenience of expression I will adopt this usage. The plaintiff has been the owner of the lot in question since 1890, and had previously resided thereon with her husband from 1886. During all this time there was a waterway running along the south side of First street past her lot, in which during the rainy season, or at least during wet seasons, there was running water. This water, prior to 1893, crossed Washington street through a culvert, and passed on to West street, about a thousand feet further on, and thence along the same southerly to a large ditch, and into the river. But in that year Washington street was graded across First street so as to form an embankment across the waterway, and without culvert, by which the water was diverted from its former course, and made to flow along the west side of Washington street, near the east boundary of plaintiff's lot. The result was that, during the two rainy seasons following this work, the water was backed up over the land of the plaintiff, and part of her land, with 30 or 40 feet of her fence on Washington street, washed away. The channel of the water was also washed out to the depth of about 3 or 3½ feet, and to the width of 6 or 7, and access and egress to and from her land thus impeded.

One of the grounds for nonsuit was that prior to 1893 the water—which respondent claims was mere surface water—"never run there in any well-defined channel for any considerable time," and the court seems to have based the decision on this ground, or, as expressed by itself, on "the absence of a clearly-defined channel upon First street prior to 1893." But there was evidence that there was such a channel. The plaintiff testified that from the time she went to reside on the place in 1886 "there was a waterway at the edge of the sidewalk * * * perhaps eighteen inches deep, with a sandy, pebbly bottom," crossed by "a plank about three feet long." And the witness Criger testified that the water had flowed along First street from the time it was first graded, in 1881, and before that, "for 25 or more years," had "flowed along generally in the direction of First street," in "a well-defined water course and channel, meandering generally along what is now the general course of First street." Some of the witnesses, indeed, testified that prior to 1893 there was no regular ditch along First street, but only a gutter, and that the water was confined merely by the sidewalk on one side and the rise of the street on the other. But this is not in conflict with the other evidence, but equally establishes the existence of a "water course" or "clearly-defined channel"; and, indeed, had it been otherwise, it should, on motion for a nonsuit, have been disregarded.

The fact that the water flowed only during the rainy season, or during rainy weather, or, as claimed by respondent, was mere surface water, is quite immaterial; and it may even be admitted (though there was evidence to the contrary) that the course over which the water flowed was not a natural water course. It was sufficient that there was, and for many years had been, a definite channel, whether natural or artificial, and that the defendant obstructed this channel, and thus diverted the water onto plaintiff's land; that is to say, not only onto the west half of Washington street, which is presumably the land of the plaintiff (Civ. Code, §§ 831, 1112), but onto her lot outside the street. "An individual has no right to collect in artificial channels mere surface water, and precipitate it on the land of another. Nor has a corporation, whether public or private, the right to collect in such channels the mere surface water precipitated by rain or snow over large districts, and throw it upon the property of another." Conniff v. City and County of San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45, 7 Pac. 41. With reference, therefore, to the damage accruing from the impact of the water onto the plaintiff's land, the case comes directly within the principle cited.

And, generally, I think, the case comes within the authority of the decision last cited, and of Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 Pac. 375. In Conniff v. City and County of San Francisco,—which was a case very similar to this,—the channel obstructed is referred to in the course of the opinion as “a natural channel”; but the meaning of this expression is to be interpreted by reference to the actual character of the channel as shown by the pleadings and evidence in the case, and from this it does not appear to have been anything more than “a water course crossing the street,” and “the channel of usual escape.” We may therefore construe the term “natural channel” as including all channels through which, in the existing condition of the country, the water naturally flows. As is said in Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles (pages 466, 467, 103 Cal., and page 377, 37 Pac.): “In all regions of country having a broken surface, and subject to heavy rainfall, surface water does make for itself or assume definite channels in seeking, pursuant to the law of gravitation, a lower level,” and it is also said that municipal corporations are bound to provide for the escape of surface water in all “that class of cases where the surface water, owing to the conformation of the adjacent country, has formed for itself a definite channel in which it is accustomed to flow.” In both of the cases cited the decision and language of the court must be construed as referring to the existing condition of the surrounding country, which had come, in each case, to be a part of a city, and thus materially and essentially transformed from its original condition. In each case, though the channel of egress was probably the same as before the city existed, the waters flowing to it—by reason of the grading of lots and streets—may, and, indeed, must, have been different from what before the improvement of the city naturally flowed to the same point; and it is to the conditions existing at the time of the suit, and not to those anciently or originally existing, that the decisions must be understood to relate. And this, on principle, must be the true construction of the term “natural channel,” when used in the present connection; for, by the necessarily great changes that must occur in the conformation of the country in the building of a city, the natural channels for the surface water are changed; and as the changes in the ground are inevitable and legitimate, and therefore natural, the new channels, through which, under natural laws, the surface waters are discharged, must also be regarded as natural.

Some other grounds are urged by respondent in support of the judgment, to which we will briefly advert:

(1) It is claimed that the natural course of the surface waters from the cañon west of the town, in which they have their source, was not along First street, but from the land of one Smith, west of the western terminus of the street, southwesterly into a ditch passing to the south of the plaintiff's lot; that the waters were diverted to the course along First street by a board fence erected by Smith about the time of the construction of the embankment across First street complained of; and that in fact the damage to the plaintiff was caused by the increased flow of water thus occasioned, and would not otherwise have occurred. To understand this position, it should be understood that prior to 1893 there was a picket fence through Smith's place, on the prolongation of the south line of First street, which in 1893 was replaced by the board fence referred to. But, as we have seen, the evidence showed that long before the year referred to the course of the water had been along First street, and that any material difference was made in the flow is a mere inference. Nor, though it were otherwise, would the liability of the defendant be affected. There is no reason to suppose that the increased flow, if any, would have damaged the plaintiff's land if it had not been turned by the defendant; and, however the water may have come into the street, the defendant had no right to turn it upon the land of the plaintiff.

(2) It is further urged that the grading of Washington street by the city was in the regular performance of its legitimate functions, and that it is not responsible for consequential damages. But the case is not one to which this principle can apply. The act complained of was a direct invasion of the plaintiff's rights, and consequently unlawful. Conniff v. City and County of San Francisco, 67 Cal. 50, 7 Pac. 44, and cases cited. I advise that the order denying a new trial be reversed as to respondent the town of Cloverdale.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying a new trial is affirmed, with reference to the respondents other than the town of Cloverdale, and as to the respondent last named it is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

STANFORD v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 1,171.)¹

TAXATION—STOCKS AND BONDS—SITUS.

Stocks and bonds of a foreign corporation, owned at the time of his death by a resident of California, where his estate is being administered, and inventoried by his executrix as part of the estate committed to her charge, is there taxable to her, under Const. art. 13, § 8, as property “owned or claimed” by her, though testator had pledged it for a loan in another state, and it still remains so pledged.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Jane L. Stanford, executrix of Leland Stanford, deceased, against the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wilson & Wilson, for appellant. Franklin K. Lane, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover certain taxes, paid under protest, upon certain stocks and bonds situated in New York City. Defendant had judgment on the demurrer to the complaint, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

It appears from the complaint that at his death plaintiff's testator was the owner of a large number of stocks or shares and certain bonds of foreign corporations, all of which, except certain described shares of stocks, were, on and prior to the first Monday in March, 1894, in the state of New York, and pledged as collateral security for the payment of a loan, "and were not on and prior to said date, and thence hitherto never have been, in the possession of this plaintiff as executrix as aforesaid"; that before the assessment in question plaintiff "made a formal statement in writing to said assessor that the said property so assessed by said assessor to this plaintiff as said executrix was not at any time on or since said first Monday in March, 1894, in the possession of said estate * * * or of this plaintiff as executrix," except as above stated, and that "this plaintiff, as such executrix, did not have in her charge, possession, or control the personal property, or any part thereof, so assessed," except as above shown; that plaintiff appeared before the board of equalization, and made application "to strike out the said assessments, and fully set forth the facts upon which it was claimed that the assessments or valuations should be stricken out." The personal property involved is divided into three classes: First, shares of stock of foreign corporations, the certificates of which were physically in the possession of the executrix in San Francisco at the date of the assessment; second, shares of stock of foreign corporations, the certificates of which were not within the state, nor in the actual possession of the executrix, on the tax day, but were in New York City, where they were held in pledge as collateral security for certain advances made thereon prior to the testator's death, the amount of which advances does not appear from the complaint; third, bonds of foreign corporations similarly situated to the shares last above named.

1. As to the assessment of the property falling within the first classification, the learned counsel for plaintiff make no point in their brief. This property is clearly taxable in this state. In re Fair's Estate (Cal.) 61 Pac. 184, and cases therein cited. See, also, Mackay v. City and County of San Fran- cisco (Cal.) 61 Pac. 382, and cases therein cited, and Id., 113 Cal. 392, 45 Pac. 696.

2. Plaintiff does not attempt to distinguish between the stocks and bonds which were outside the state before the death of plaintiff's testator, and we see no ground upon which the one may and the other may not be taxed. The same principle must govern both. Appellant contends that, so far as the executrix was concerned, these stocks and bonds had a situs outside of this state, and were never in her possession or control, and are, therefore, not taxable here; that under sections 1613, 1615, Code Civ. Proc., the executrix is chargeable only with such property as may come into her possession, and is not responsible for what she cannot collect. It is stated in the brief of counsel that upon her appointment as executrix plaintiff filed an inventory and appraisal, and, as was her duty, included therein a list of the stocks and bonds in question which she had been informed were in New York City, pledged as aforesaid; but that she never had the property in possession or under her control, and is not accountable to the probate court or to any legatees or devisees for it, nor could she collect commissions on it as executrix; and it cannot, therefore, be taxed here. We do not see that the extent of the executrix's accountability or liability for the property in her official capacity affects the question of its being liable to taxation. While she has not the possession, she yet has a control in so far that she may pay off the lien, and would then be entitled to possession and absolute control. Her pecuniary liability as executrix may be limited by reason of the possession being in another person, and still there remain a responsibility and control. Certainly, the property belongs to the estate, and the executrix, having taken it up on her inventory, is charged with a duty to protect and care for it. We are not willing to admit that she would be free from liability should she negligently allow the property to be lost to the estate. But at most the circumstance alone of her acting in a representative capacity can have but little bearing upon the question as to the situs of the property. That situs is in California, as we shall see under the general rule laid down in this state, unless for some reason it can be excepted therefrom. In short, it seems to us that the case stands as if the testator were alive, and the property had been taxed to him. Plaintiff represents him for purposes of taxation while representing his estate as executrix of his will.

Appellant cites several cases and quotes from Desty on Taxation to the point that it is the actual situs of the personal property, and not the domicile of its owner, that determines where the tax should be laid. It is not necessary to enter upon the discussion of this proposition. It has been expressly held by this court, quite recently, that bonds of a West Virginia railroad company, which had never been physically present in this state, but were kept in New York City, or elsewhere at the East, have their locality or situs for the purposes of taxation "at the place where they are held,—that is, owned." In re Fair's Estate, supra. See, also, Mackay v. City and County of San Francisco, supra. The testator in the present case died while a resident of California, and in California his estate is being administered by his executrix. Among other of the properties of her testator the executrix inventoried, and thereby charged herself with, the personal property in question as part of the estate committed to her charge. Unquestionably, this property is "held—that is, owned"—in California, and has "its locality for purposes of taxation at the place" where so owned, unless the general rule is subject to modification, or is inapplicable where the stocks and bonds, as in the present case, were pledged by the testator in his lifetime as collateral security without the state. In Re Fair's Estate, supra, it was said that there was an exception to the rule there laid down, which had received extensive recognition, namely, "where the paper evidences of debt are in the possession and control of an agent of the owner in a state foreign to the domicile of the latter, and are held by the agent for management in the course of the permanent business of the owner,—as, for example, to collect the money to become due thereon, and to reinvest it,—the securities are deemed taxable at the domicile of such agent." The cases cited as so holding are Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152 (the leading case); People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; Finch v. York Co., 19 Neb. 50, 26 N. W. 589; Goldgart v. People, 106 Ill. 25. Appellant contends that, if these securities may have a "business situs" in New York, under the circumstances last above cited, "a fortiori they should not be assessed to the executrix when they are held by a pledgee adversely to her, and when she has absolutely no control over the same." But it will be observed that the exception to the general rule assumes that the securities "are held by the agent for management in the permanent business of the owner," at the place where they are held; and, as was said in Mackay v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, the investment and reinvestment is "in such manner that the property or credits come in competition with the capital of the citizens of the state in which the agent resides." In the instance of securities thus sent away as the basis for a permanent business in a foreign state, the accumulations to be there invested and reinvested, and the principal to remain as the source of income for the investments, the case is quite different from that of a temporary hypothecation as security for a loan. In the one case there is a transfer of capital from the owner's residence to the foreign state, there to be used in prosecuting a permanent business, and for the purposes of taxation for that reason is held to have a "business situs"; in the other case the transfer is for a specific and temporary purpose that may be accomplished in a brief space of time, and may be, and presumably is, to aid the business of the owner at his place and residence. The reasons for creating an exception in favor of the "business situs" have no application to the case here, and furnish no argument, a fortiori or otherwise, for making an exception to the rule.

We are cited to Story, Conf. Laws, § 550, where it is written: "Although movables are, for many purposes, to be deemed to have no situs except that of the domicile of the owner, yet, this being a legal fiction, it yields whenever it is necessary for the purposes of justice that the actual situs of the thing should be examined." Appellant also cites Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. 140, 19 L. Ed. 109, and adds: "The case at bar is clearly such a case where an examination as to situs is necessary for the purposes of justice." Waiving the question whether Mr. Story referred to intangible property, such as stocks and bonds, when he spoke of "movables," we find no peculiar circumstances in this case that would seem to make it necessary to examine the situs of the property in order to do justice. It is quite common in all parts of the United States for business men engaged in large operations, as was Gov. Stanford, to resort to the principal or some other money center in a foreign state for financial aid, and the pledging of intangible securities is the common means of obtaining such assistance. Sometimes money is borrowed to nearly the full face value of the security (depending upon its stability and character); sometimes on a small margin of that value. If the rule contended for by appellant were adopted, it would furnish an opportunity to escape taxation at the place where the securities are owned by pledging them in a foreign state for a merely nominal loan. We are not informed by the complaint of the circumstances attending the pledging of the securities here in controversy. Even if it be conceded that, where the full value of the securities has been borrowed, an exception might be made (which we by no means would be understood as deciding), no such circumstance is here presented. So far as we know, the equitable interest of the estate in these securities may be equal to nine-tenths of their value, or even more.

The Political Code (section 3629) provides that the assessor "must assess such property [i. e. taxable property] to the persons by whom it was owned or claimed, or in whose possession or control it was, at twelve o'clock meridian, of the first Monday in March next preceding"; and the constitution provides that all property shall be assessed "to the person by whom it was owned or claimed, or in whose possession or control it was," on the tax day. Const. art. 13, § 8. Shares of stock and bonds pledged as collaterals to secure advances made thereon are assessable in the name of the pledgor. At his death plaintiff's testator was the owner of the shares and bonds by him pledged. They became part of his estate, and were inventoried as such; and it must follow that they were property "owned or claimed" by appellant as executrix on the statutory tax day, and to her the law directs the assessment to be made. In the state of Ohio the assessment is required by law to be to the person in the possession or control of the property. In Ratterman v. Ingalls, 48 Ohio St. 468, 28 N. E. 168, defendant owned certain stocks which he had pledged as collateral security for loans, with power in the pledgees to cause a transfer of the stock to their own names, and to sell if the loans were not paid. It was contended that the shares could not be taxed to the owner, because they were not in his possession or under his control within the meaning of Rev. St. §§ 2730, 2736, 2737. The court said: "We are of a contrary opinion. The books of the company showed the shares to be in the name of the defendant, and he was the real owner. He had the power to resume absolute control by paying off the indebtedness. It is not the policy of our law to assess taxes upon pledged property against the pledgee, and the language of the sections referred to will not, in reason, bear so literal a construction,"—citing President, etc., of Waltham Bank v. Inhabitants of Waltham, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 334; Tucker v. Aiken, 7 N. H. 113. It will be admitted that all property not used for some excepted purpose should bear its share of the public burdens, and it must be admitted that the securities in question should pay taxes somewhere. Doubtless the testator gave his note, or some evidence, for the advances to the New York pledgee, and as his property the pledgee should pay taxes in New York on that note or other evidence of the debt. But it would be gross injustice to compel him to pay tax on the securities held by him in which he has no interest except as security. It was so held in Gibbins v. Adamson, 5 Kan. App. 90, 48 Pac. 871, where plaintiff, a resident of Kansas, having given his own note for $2,800 to a resident of Missouri, and afterwards indorsed a note secured by mortgage on Kansas lands, and assigned the note and mortgage to the resident of Missouri as collateral security, and they were thereafter held continuously until after the tax day in Kansas. The collateral note was taxed in Kansas. We are clearly of the opinion that upon the complaint presented in this case the demurrer was rightly sustained, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

ARGONAUT MIN. CO. v. KENNEDY MIN. & MILL. CO. (Sac. 733.)

MINES—LOCATION—EXTRALATERAL RIGHTS—DIVERGENCE OF END LINES—EFFECT.

1. Act Cong. May 10, 1872, § 3, provides that locators of mining claims shall have certain lodes through their entire depth, though they may extend outside the vertical side lines of the location, provided that such extralateral rights shall only extend to that part of the vein lying between vertical planes through the end lines of the location, and also that no locator shall be authorized by his right to the dip of his lode to enter on the surface of the claim of another. Held, that the proviso did not grant any additional rights to one claiming a location under a previous act, since it does not purport to confer ownership of all the lode between such vertical planes, but only to provide that no one shall pass beyond them.

2. Act Cong. 1866, in relation to mining locations, granted extralateral rights, but did not require the end lines of locations to be parallel. Act Cong. May 10, 1872, also granted extralateral rights, but required the end lines to run parallel to each other, and confirmed the rights of locators under former laws. Plaintiff's location and its application for a patent were made under the act of 1866, but patent did not issue till subsequent to the act of 1872. Held, that the nonparallelism of its end lines did not deprive plaintiff of the right to follow its vein on the dip beyond the side lines of the surface location.

3. Plaintiff's patent for a mining location granted 1,589.94 feet of the lode through its entire depth, provided that its extralateral rights should be confined to that part of the lode which lay between vertical planes drawn downward through the ends of the survey at the surface. The survey at the surface had end lines diverging in the direction of the dip of the vein. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to that part of the vein at any depth which lay between vertical planes drawn at right angles to the general course of the vein on the surface.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by the Argonaut Mining Company against the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John M. Wright and Byron Waters, for appellant. Lindley & Eickhoff, Wm. J. McGee, and F. J. Solinsky, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for damages for the value of ore alleged to have been taken by defendant from plaintiff's mine, situate in Amador county. The defendant denies taking any ore or gold-bearing rock from plaintiff's mine, and avers that defendant is the owner of the mine from which the rock was taken. The cause was submitted in the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts, each party having the right to object to the relevancy, competency, and materiality of any part of it. Certain objections to evidence were made by the appellant, which were overruled by the court, and the main argument here has been in regard to these rulings. Much of the evidence was objected to simply upon the ground of immateriality. All that I deem it necessary to say in regard to such rulings is that, admitting that the trial court erred, as I am inclined to think it did, defendant has suffered no harm. The question of law upon which the case must turn is not changed or affected by receiving this immaterial evidence.

The controversy is indicated by the following diagram:

The plaintiff owns the Pioneer quartz mine, and the defendant owns the Kennedy mine and the Silva mine. All three mines had passed to patent before the ore was taken out by defendant. The ore was taken under the Silva location, and within its exterior limits carried vertically down. It was taken from the discovery lode of the Pioneer location, which is the only lode which has its apex within that location. It enters that location near the middle point of the southern end line, and runs northerly through the location in a direction practically parallel to the side lines, through the center of the northern end line. In fact, save that the end lines are not parallel, the location and the lode are the ideals upon which the rules and regulations of miners and the laws of congress seem to have been based.

The defendant does not assert any right to the ore in dispute by virtue of its ownership of the Kennedy mine, and nothing further need be said about it. Defendant asserts title to the ore by reason of its ownership of the Silva ground, under what counsel call the common-law right to everything beneath the surface. It admits plaintiff's ownership of the Pioneer mine, and that the lode has its apex, as stated, within its surface location, but denies that the quartz taken by it from that lode is within that location. This is asserted, as I understand the contention, upon two grounds: First, defendant contends that, because of nonparallelism of the end lines of the Pioneer, it carries no extralateral rights; and, second, if the court can as matter of law construct for it parallel end lines, the southerly end line being the base line from which the location was projected, the parallel will be made by extending the northern end line in a direction parallel to the direction of the southerly end line.

The dip of the lode is easterly at an angle of about 60° from the plane of horizon, and the end lines of the Pioneer diverge in that direction to the extent of about $14^\circ 45'$. The ore was taken out directly beneath the Silva surface location at depths varying from 1,400 to 2,000 feet beneath the surface. The Silva location is more than 900 feet easterly from the easterly line of the Pioneer location. The Pioneer was located, as the patent shows, under the law of 1866. The application for a patent was filed January 13, 1871. On the 23d day of February, 1872, the Pioneer entered and paid for its mine, and the patent is dated August 12, 1872. The act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States was passed May 10, 1872. For reasons, which will appear as this opinion proceeds, I think plaintiff is entitled to all the rights which would attach to such a location under the law of 1866, and to any additional rights which inured to such locations under the act of 1872.

Among the contentions of the respondent is this: "Although the end lines were not required to be parallel under the act of 1866, yet if, by any process of reasoning, any limitation upon the extralateral right was imposed upon the locators' title by reason of the divergence of end lines, such limitation was removed by the act of May 10, 1872, which granted to owners of locations therefore made the right to pursue the vein on its downward course, between the end-line plane of such location as it existed." This proposition is based upon the language of the first proviso in section 3 of the law of 1872. After stating that the locators shall have certain lodes throughout their entire depth, although they may so far depart from a perpendicular in their downward course as to extend outside the vertical side lines, it proceeds: "Provided, that their right of possession to such outside parts of said veins or ledges shall be confined to such portions thereof as lie between vertical planes drawn downward as aforesaid through the end lines of their location so continued in their own direction that such planes will intersect such exterior parts of said veins or ledges." Then follows another proviso, that no locator, by reason of his right to the dip of his lode, shall be authorized to enter upon the surface of a claim owned by another. These provisos grant no rights additional to those already given, nor do they purport to do so. They are both express limitations upon rights already given. The proviso does not confer ownership to all within those planes, but says, in effect, that no locator may pass beyond them. No rule of construction with which I am familiar would authorize or require a different reading of the section, especially in the face of the evident policy to strictly limit the rights of all locators as to length along the vein or lode.

We have many graphic accounts of the rush of gold hunters to California in 1849. The river banks and gulches were suddenly crowded with eager and earnest men anxious to dig for gold. There was no law by which any one could secure to himself any portion of the rich placers. In the absence of regulation, the strongest or most unscrupulous would get the lion's share. The miners, of necessity, made and enforced their own laws. Some regulations as to mining claims sprung into existence naturally, in fact necessarily. First, so far as possible, each person was given a specified portion of the ground, which he could mine. Secondly, the allotment to each was so limited that there should be no monopoly. So far as possible, all should have an equal chance. The right of the first possessor was preferred, but no matter was considered more important than the limitation upon the extent of the claims. And, thirdly, as a corollary from these two cardinal rules, the third follows: That each claimant shall mark plainly upon the surface of the earth the boundaries of his claim, that others may locate claims without interfering with him. These essential rules have been the basis of most of the rules and regulations of miners, and have been recognized in every mining district on the Pacific Coast, and in all attempts by legislation, territorial, state, or national, to regulate mining locations. Indeed, it may be said that the purpose of all these laws and regulations is to secure these ends.

These views are, as I think, expressed by Judge Field in the celebrated Eureka Case, 4 Sawy. 302, Fed. Cas. No. 4,548. The locations there considered were made under the law of 1866, and one of the questions to be decided was whether the defendant was entitled to its allotted distance along the vein, although in its strike the vein passed beyond its exterior surface lines. There was no contention based upon diverging end lines, and there could not have been; for the ore body in dispute was within planes passing through the end lines of the Champion location, which belonged to plaintiff, and was not within such planes passing through the end lines of any location under which defendant claimed. Defendant, on this point, simply contended that it had the oldest location, and under the law of 1866 had a right to the number of feet on the lode called for in its location, although it extended within the junior locations owned by plaintiff. It was held that defendant could not follow the lode on its strike through any line of its surface location. In reaching this conclusion the court emphasized the invariable and inexorable policy to limit the location along the course of the vein to the quantity located, and to the line of the surface location, and to permit an extension of right only on the dip.

Bearing, then, in mind that the argument was to show that under the law of 1866 the locator could not, for the purpose of securing his length of lode, pass the lines of his surface location, we may be instructed by the decision. It is first said the locations under the law of 1866 are not invalid because the end lines are not parallel. The law did not require such parallelism, and the requirement in the law of 1872 was merely directory, and no consequence attached to a deviation from the direction. "Its object is to secure parallel end lines drawn vertically down, and that was effected in these cases by taking the extreme points of the respective locations as the length of the lode."

The locator was limited to his number of feet on the lode throughout its entire depth, and the court realized that the only possible mode of so limiting the right was by parallel end lines. The miners seem to have regarded a lode as something like a plank. All a locator had to do was to measure off his distance upon it, and then make a "square cut" at the end. Judge Field's idea that the planes of the end "cuts" must be parallel in order to limit the locator at all depths to his number of feet claimed upon the surface is further shown. He says: "It is true that end lines are not in terms named in the rules of the miners, but they are necessarily implied, and no reasonable construction can be given to them without such implication. What the miners meant by allowing a certain number of feet on a ledge was that each locator might follow his vein for that distance on the course of the ledge, and to any depth within that distance. So much of the ledge he was permitted to hold as lay within vertical planes drawn down through the end lines of his location, and could be measured anywhere by the feet on the surface. If this were not so, he might by the bend of his vein hold under the surface along the course of the ledge double and treble the amount he could take on the surface. Indeed, instead of being limited by the number of feet prescribed by the rules, he might in some cases oust all his neighbors, and take the whole ledge. No construction is permissible which would substantially defeat the limitation of quantity on a ledge, which was the most important provision in the whole system of rules. Similar rules have been adopted in numerous mining districts, and the construction thus given has been uniformly and everywhere followed. We are confident that no other construction has ever been adopted in any mining district in California or Nevada. And the construction is one which the law would require in the absence of any construction by miners.

If, for instance, the state were to-day to deed a block in the city of San Francisco to twenty persons, each to take twenty feet front, in a certain specified succession, each would have assigned to him by the law a section parallel with that of his neighbor of twenty feet in width, cut through the block. No other mode of division would carry out the grant. The act of 1866 in no respect enlarges the right of the claimant beyond that which the rules of the mining district gave him. The patent which the act allows him to obtain does not authorize him to go outside of the end lines of his claim, drawn down vertically through the ledge or lode. It only authorizes him to follow his vein, with its dips, angles, and variations, to any depth, although it may enter land adjoining; that is, land lying beyond the area included within his surface lines. It is land lying on the side of the claim, not on the ends of it, which may be entered. The land on the ends is reserved for other claimants to explore. It is true, as stated by the defendant, that the surface land taken up in connection with a linear location on the ledge or lode is, under the act of 1866, intended solely for the convenient working of the mine, and does not measure the miner's right, either to the linear feet upon its course, or to follow the dips, angles, and variations of the vein, or control the direction he shall take. But the line of location taken does measure the extent of the miner's right. That must be along the general course, or "strike," as it is termed, of the ledge or lode. Lines drawn vertically down through the ledge or lode, at right angles with a line representing this general course at the ends of the claimant's line of location, will carve out, so to speak, a section of the ledge or lode within which he is permitted to work, and out of which he cannot pass."

Judge Field here was endeavoring to show that the locator was limited, under the law of 1866, to the specified number of linear feet on the lode throughout its entire depth. The extent of his right could be measured by the feet on the surface. The statement that the requirement in the law of 1872, that the end lines shall be parallel, was only directory, was overruled in Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Elgin Mining & Smelting Co., 118 U. S. 196, 6 Sup. Ct. 1177, 30 L. Ed. 98, but that the limitation upon the line or distance on the lode continues throughout its entire depth has always been recognized. And, indeed, it seems obvious that the opposite contention could not be thought of. A proposed rule may be tested by inquiring what may be done with it. Suppose the divergence here had been 150° instead of 15°, the dip being at a small angle from the plane of the horizon; the statutory limitation upon the length which could be taken on the lode would be a farce, even were the ledge the ideal ledge of miners. The Pioneer would soon have extended itself to the entire length of the lode.

I think the law of 1872, instead of extending the rights of locators under the law of 1866 along the lode, expressly limits them in that respect to the rights they had under the previous laws. Section 2 provides: "Mining claims upon veins or lodes * * * heretofore located shall be governed, as to length on the vein or lode, by the customs, regulations and laws in force at the date of their location." These words themselves, in my opinion, are sufficient to support the declaration of the court in the Eureka Case. Speaking of the limitations provided in section 3 of the act of 1872, which I have noticed, of lodes to planes through the end lines: "The act in terms annexes these conditions to the possession, not only of claims subsequently located, but to the possession of those previously located. This fact, taken in connection with the reservation of all rights acquired under the act of 1866, indicates that in the opinion of the legislature no change was made in the rights of the previous locators by confining their claims within the end lines. The act simply recognized a pre-existing rule applied by miners to a single vein or lode of the locator, and made it applicable to all veins or lodes, found within the surface lines." This proposition is substantially reiterated in Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Elgin Mining & Smelting Co., 118 U. S. 196, 6 Sup. Ct. 1177, 30 L. Ed. 98, and in many other cases, including the latest to which our attention has been called (Walrath v. Champion, 171 U. S. 293, 18 Sup. Ct. 909, 43 L. Ed. 170).

It remains but to add on this point that the patent under which plaintiff claims only grants of the discovery lode 1,589.94 linear feet "of the said Pioneer quartz vein, lode, ledge or deposit, as hereinbefore described, throughout its entire depth; * * * provided, that the right of possession to such outside parts of said veins, lodes, ledges, or deposits shall be confined to such portions thereof as lie between vertical planes drawn downward through the end lines of said survey at the surface, so continued in their own direction," etc. And in the habendum is added, as a condition, "that the grant hereby made is restricted to the land hereinbefore described as lot No. forty-eight (48), with fifteen hundred and eighty-nine and $\frac{94}{100}$ linear feet of the Pioneer quartz vein, lode, ledge, or deposit, throughout its entire depth," etc. I think it clear that there is no attempt here to convey all within planes passing through the end lines, if such planes would at any depth include more than the amount specifically defined on the strike of the lode.

Upon this conclusion that a patent to a location with end lines diverging in the direction of the strike does not convey all within those planes, but, at the most, not more than the stated number of feet on the lode, at any given depth, the appellant contends that such patent grants no extralateral rights at all. Such would be the law if the location were under the law of 1872, and, as the patent to the Pioneer was issued after that law took effect, counsel contends that it is subject to its requirement that the end lines must be parallel or the patentee has no extralateral rights. Another objection is that there is no description of the segment of the lode which extends beyond the surface location, and no grant can be effectual which does not define the thing granted. Parallel end lines were not required in locations by the law of 1866, and yet extralateral rights were specifically given. The act refers to rules and regulations made by miners, but it is not said that any such rule required parallel end lines. It is claimed in argument that such was, in general, the custom of miners, but it is not even contended that there was such a custom in Amador county, and all the patents shown in this case lack such parallelism.

I think it would have been competent for congress in the law of 1872 to have required parties who had equitable rights to patents to cause such adjustments of their surface lines as would indicate and define their extralateral rights; in other words, to have made their end lines parallel before a patent would issue, on pain of losing all extralateral rights. There are no such provisions in the act of 1872, but the rights of locators under former laws are expressly confirmed to them. The presumption is very strong against forfeiture, and against such construction of any law as would work a forfeiture. The language of an act to have such effect must be very plain, or the court will, if possible, give a construction to it that would not have that effect.

It is admitted that such extralateral rights are recognized and asserted in the Eureka Case, and I think the language used by Judge Field in Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Elgin Mining & Smelting Co., 118 U. S. 196, 6 Sup. Ct. 1177, 30 L. Ed. 98 (the Horseshoe Case), is equally clear upon this matter: "Under the act of 1866 (14 Stat. 251), parallelism in end lines of a surface location was not required, but, where a location has been made since the act of 1872, such parallelism is essential to the existence of any right in the locator or patentee to follow his vein outside of the vertical planes down through the side lines." This very clearly implies that a locator under the act of 1866 has such right, although his end lines are not parallel. In many other cases the same thing is implied. Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co., 171 U. S. 55, 18 Sup. Ct. 895, 43 L. Ed. 72; Walrath v. Mining Co. (C. C.) 63 Fed. 552; Id., 171 U. S. 293, 18 Sup. Ct. 909, 43 L. Ed. 170.

We come, then, to the other phase of the question: Can it be determined as matter of law, from the patent or the complaint, what segment of the dip, if any, the plaintiff acquired by his location or patent? It is admitted, or rather contended, by counsel on both sides that the court cannot construct end lines. If the court is to adjudge that plaintiff is entitled to follow the dip beyond his lines, it must find some mode of limiting the right along the vein, and that limitation must result as matter of law from the patent, when the necessary facts are shown as to the property it attempts to convey; that is, as to the course and dip of the lode.

The contention of the parties in regard to this matter is shown upon the diagram. Of course, it is understood that plaintiff contends for all included between planes drawn through its end lines, although they diverge, and would inevitably extend his rights along the strike, while defendant contends that because of such divergence plaintiff has no extralateral rights. But each party has an alternative theory, in case its primary contention is not sustained. Plaintiff says, if planes through its end lines do not control, then planes are indicated between lines perpendicular to the general course of the lode.

Defendant's alternative is that, as the southern end line constitutes the initial line in the survey, it necessarily follows from the requirement of parallel end planes that the northern end line shall be parallel to it; that by locating and fixing the southern end line first the northern end line was thereby also definitely and finally located. These theories are shown in the diagram. 3-5 is the southern end line continued; 1-6 is a parallel line from the northern end of the lode. This shows defendant's theory. These lines would give the ore in dispute to defendant. The lines suggested by plaintiff are 1-2 and 3-4. These are at right angles to the general course of the lode, and planes descending through them would give the ore to plaintiff. The line, B-B', is the northern end line continued, and between that line and 3-5 is plaintiff's first contention, which we have considered.

I am not referred to any authorities which support the contention of appellant that the southern end line must be considered as the basis from which the surface form of the location was projected. As stated, the argument is that, having been first located, it followed, as matter of law, that the other end line must be in the same direction in order that end lines may parallel. But the location was made, surveyed, the land paid for, and application made for the patent, before the law of 1872 was enacted. The act of 1866 did not require parallel end lines to insure extralateral rights, or at all. There was therefore no implication that the second end line should be parallel to that first established. It was not an absolute necessity, that by a naked description one end line should be described before the other. A side having been located, one sentence could have created both end lines from each end, and at right angles to the side line, in a certain direction.

No such general rule, therefore, applicable to all cases could be adopted. Planes so constructed could not result as matter of law.

Planes through the lode at the end lines of the location, at right angles to the general course, would impose the required limitation upon the rights of the locator along the lode. The rule that they must be so constructed would be universally applicable; at least, theoretically. The congressional system for the sale of mineral lands is founded upon the proposition that the course of the lode can be traced. That nature, in her infinite variety, does not always so deposit her mineral gifts, is unfortunate; but I think, in construing the law, we may have regard to the views of the lawmakers in regard to its subject, however crude and inadequate such views were. The law of 1866 is said to have been but a crystallization of the rules and customs of the miners. The first lodes worked were, I think, nearly in a uniform direction. The individual claims were short, usually 200 feet. Under such circumstances, it was not difficult to appropriate to each his number of feet on the dip at any depth. In California mines such claims were very often consolidated and disputes avoided. Often, as on the Comstock lode, the miners agreed upon a base line from which the surface form of locations were projected, or to which they were adjusted. This would result in parallel end lines.

The general practice, I think, was to have their claims bounded, so far as the lode was concerned, by parallel end lines, whatever might be the form of their surface location. In fact, they adopted the idea put forth by Judge Field in the Eureka Case. Their rights on the lode were limited to planes at the limit of their right to the lode on the surface, at right angles to the general course of the lode. The Eureka Case is perhaps the only express authority for this proposition, but I do not find, as claimed by the learned counsel for the appellant, that it has been repudiated by later cases. On the contrary, these cases which imply extralateral rights when the end lines are not parallel seem to concede this rule. I am unable to understand Walrath v. Mining Co., 171 U. S. 293, 18 Sup. Ct. 909, 43 L. Ed. 170, upon any other theory. There was liberty of surface form under the act of 1866, but the law strictly confined the right on the vein below the surface. This accords both with the Eureka Case and the Flagstaff Case, 98 U. S. 463, 25 L. Ed. 253. In the latter case it was said: "But our laws have attempted to establish a rule by which each claim shall be so many feet of the vein lengthwise of its course to any depth below the surface, although laterally its inclination shall carry it ever so far from a perpendicular." But rights on the strike were limited by the surface lines of the location under both laws. Judge Field was familiar with the mining customs and laws. I have no doubt he expressed in the Eureka Case what had been and was the universal understanding and practice of miners. The rule there declared seems to me reasonable, and, in fact, the only one that can be applied to such patents issued under locations made before the law of 1872 came into existence. If, as suggested, the officers of the land office usually adjust and make the end lines of locations parallel before issuing the patent, such patents, when issued, will be conclusive evidence that such also was the location.

A case has been cited in which the end lines of the location converge in the direction of the dip. Carson City Gold & Silver Min. Co. v. North Star Min. Co. (C. C.) 73 Fed. 597. It was held that the locator had extralateral rights because the conveyance would give less rather than more on the dip of the vein. This may be all right, as it seems to me, however, not because the patent carries less rather than more than would pass had the end lines been parallel, but because that which is granted is described so that it can be definitely located. Under the force of the restriction contained in section 3 of the law of 1872, the locator could not take beyond planes through his end lines. This confined him, within well-defined boundaries, to less on the dip below the surface than he had upon the surface. If this was an attempt to construe the act of 1872, the logic might be questioned. That act, as construed, does not grant extralateral rights because the end lines are parallel or converge towards the dip of the vein, but if they are parallel. The location there under consideration was made under the act of 1866, and carries extralateral rights because the extent of such rights is definitely described. At least, such was the fact, and no other reason was required. It was therefore not necessary in that case to consider the point here under debate. If this position be correct, the complaint does definitely describe the segment of the lode from which the ore was taken. The judgment is affirmed.

HOXIE v. BRYANT. (L. A. 774-776.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1900.)
EXECUTION—LEVY ON NOTE AND MORTGAGE—ORDER OF COURT—RIGHT TO OBJECT.

1. It is immaterial whether a levy on a note, which could be taken on execution and sold, was made by an order of court or otherwise.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 17, subd. 3, includes notes in its definition of personal property. Section 688 provides that property may be attached or taken on execution in like manner as on writ of attachment; and by section 542, subd. 3, personal property capable of manual delivery must be attached by taking it into custody. Held, in view of these provisions, that a note of which the sheriff may peaceably take actual possession may be levied on and sold under execution.

Action by H. E. Hoxie against E. I. Bryant. Affirmed.

Goodrich & McCutchen, for appellant. Works & Lee and Chas. T. Howland, for respondent.

COOPER, C. In May, 1894, the defendant was the owner of a promissory note and mortgage made by one Lewis to him for the sum of $500. The maker of the note was insolvent, and the lands described in the mortgage were of small value, not to exceed $100. Defendant went to plaintiff, and by false representations in regard to the value of the land mortgaged, and by taking plaintiff and showing her different lands, representing that he was showing the lands mortgaged, succeeded in selling the note and mortgage to plaintiff for its face value, $500. As soon as plaintiff discovered that she had been deceived and defrauded, she brought the present action in the superior court to rescind the sale, and to recover of defendant the amount paid him, with interest. The judge of the court below found the transaction on the part of defendant fraudulent, fully stating the facts constituting the fraud, and adjudged that the sale be rescinded, that plaintiff recover the amount paid to defendant, with interest and costs, and that the note and mortgage, which had been filed with the clerk of the court, be delivered up to defendant upon his paying the amount so adjudged to be due plaintiff. This judgment was entered October 27, 1897, and has become final. The defendant has never paid the judgment, and it does not appear that plaintiff can in any way obtain satisfaction of the same. On the 11th day of March, 1899, the plaintiff filed a petition setting forth, among other things, that the note and mortgage had been filed as exhibits at the trial, and were in the clerk's office; that the judgment had never been paid, and that the note and mortgage would become barred by the statute of limitations on the 5th day of April, 1899; and praying for an order permitting the sheriff to levy an execution in the action upon the said promissory note, and sell the same thereunder. The court made an order as prayed for in the petition, and authorized the clerk to deliver up the said note and mortgage to the sheriff, for the purpose of permitting execution to be levied thereon. In pursuance of the order, the sheriff levied upon the note and mortgage, took them into his possession, and after notice sold them to plaintiff, who was the highest bidder therefor. On April 4, 1899, the day before the statute would run against the note and mortgage, plaintiff filed a complaint for the foreclosure thereof, which action is still pending. On April 12, 1899, the defendant made three motions: (1) To set aside the order of court authorizing the levy on the note and mortgage; (2) to set aside the levy and sale, and recall the writ of execution; (3) that the judgment in the action be declared paid, satisfied, and discharged. These motions were each denied, and defendant has appealed from the orders by three separate appeals, which are brought up in the same transcript. The first two motions involve practically the same proposition, and may be considered together.

The main question involved and discussed is as to whether or not the sheriff may levy a writ of execution upon a promissory note, and sell it as personal property capable of manual delivery. If the note could be so levied upon and sold, it is immaterial whether done by order of court or otherwise. The order probably was unnecessary, but it did no harm. There is no question here involved as to the right of the sheriff to take possession of a promissory note in the hands of the judgment debtor. Neither is there any question as to the rights of any other creditor, except the plaintiff, who had the execution issued upon her judgment. The question, then, is simply as to the right of the plaintiff to levy an execution upon a promissory note in such position and custody that the sheriff may peaceably take the actual possession of it. The promissory note was personal property. Code Civ. Proc. § 17, subd. 3. Property may be attached or taken on execution in like manner as upon writ of attachment. Id. § 688. Personal property capable of manual delivery must be attached by taking it into custody. Id. § 542, subd. 3.

In the case of Davis v. Mitchell, 34 Cal. 81, the matter was fully considered, and it was held that under the provisions of the practice act, which are similar to the provisions of the Code on the same subject, a promissory note is subject to seizure and sale under execution. This case was cited with approval in Donohoe v. Gamble, 38 Cal. 352, and has never been overruled, and we see no reason for changing the rule as therein laid down. This court in McBride v. Fallon, 65 Cal. 303, 4 Pac. 19, refers to the case of Davis v. Mitchell, supra, and says: "We could not, with our present views, assent to the doctrine of that case;" but the court was discussing the question as to whether or not a judgment could be levied upon and sold under execution as personal property capable of manual delivery. The question here presented was not in any way involved in the case. In Dore v. Dougherty, 72 Cal. 235, 13

Pac. 621, it was held that a judgment was not subject to levy and sale under execution as personal property capable of manual delivery. The distinction between a judgment and a promissory note is plain. The judgment is a matter of record. It is the record evidence of the debt due by the judgment debtor. It is not capable of being taken out of the book where it is recorded and personally delivered. The sheriff cannot seize the judgment, take possession of it, and sell it. But a promissory note, negotiable in form, which passes in the commercial world by indorsement and delivery, and is subject to sale, is quite different. The owner of such promissory note cannot refuse to pay a just judgment against him, and claim the note as exempt from execution. If it, in any way, can be found and seized by the sheriff on execution, it may be sold and delivered to the purchaser. A similar statute exists in Louisiana (article 647, Code Prac.), and it is held in that state that promissory notes may be levied upon and sold. Fluker v. Bullard, 2 La. Ann. 338; Stockton v. Stanbrough, 3 La. Ann. 390; Nugent v. McCaffrey, 33 La. Ann. 271. In Iowa an execution may be levied upon a promissory note, and the note sold by the sheriff. Rev. St. Iowa, § 3272; Earhart v. Gant, 32 Iowa, 483. And so in Indiana. 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 208, § 433; Bay v. Saulspough, 74 Ind. 399. In Freem. Judgm. (3d Ed.) § 112, the author in stating the rule says: "There are many choses in action which, from their intangible character, seem to be incapable of being made the subjects of direct levy and sale. Of this character are all debts and credits not evidenced by writing, or by something capable of being seized and taken into possession, or in some manner made to bear witness to a change in their ownership." He then enumerates both accounts and judgments as being such property. In a late case decided by the supreme court of New York (Kratzenstein v. Lehman, 46 N. Y. Supp. 71), in speaking of the authority given by the Code of New York to levy upon a promissory note, the court said: "While they do not always pass by delivery, but sometimes require an indorsement to transfer a complete title, yet they are usually paid or payable only to the person who has them in his actual possession; and the possession itself is ordinarily required as satisfactory evidence of the right to recover the money which is to be paid by their terms. While they are, in a technical sense, choses in action, yet practically the paper itself is property, is regarded as such, and is dealt with like other tangible personal property." The motions were therefore properly denied. Aside from the main point, the defendant is not in position to complain. He does not appear to have paid the judgment, or to have in any way attempted to get the promissory note and mortgage. He made no attempt to prevent the note from becoming barred by the statute, and when he made these motions the statute, but for the act of plaintiff, would have run. If the motions had been granted, the promissory note and mortgage barred by the statute would probably be worthless. It seems that defendant intends, as appears by this record, not only to leave plaintiff's judgment unpaid, but to attempt to keep plaintiff from selling the mortgaged lands, which the court found to be what is known as "wash land and worthless." While defendant is entitled to his legal rights, yet his position here certainly does not commend him to the favorable consideration of a court of equity. It follows that the orders, and each of them, should be affirmed.

ROONEY v. SNOW, City Auditor.
(S. F. 1,629.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1900.)

MANDAMUS—TO CITY AUDITOR—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT—INVALID ORDINANCE.

1. Mandamus will not lie to compel a city auditor to draw a warrant pursuant to an ordinance appropriating money to pay the claim of R., and directing the auditor to draw his warrant in favor of R. for such sum, his duty not being ministerial merely under the city charter providing that every demand shall be presented to him for approval, and that he shall "satisfy himself whether the money is legally due."

2. The voluntary character of a payment to a city for license under the supposition that the place of business is within the city limits is not changed by the subsequent discovery that it is outside; so that an ordinance providing for its repayment is invalid.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Mandamus by Owen F. Rooney against R. W. Snow, auditor of the city of Oakland. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Reed & Nusbaumer, for appellant. W. A. Dow, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. In April, 1898, the city council of the city of Oakland passed an ordinance, the first section of which reads as follows: "The sum of one thousand dollars is hereby appropriated from the general fund of the city of Oakland for the year 1897-98 to pay the claim and demand of Owen F. Rooney for moneys erroneously collected by the city of Oakland from said Owen F. Rooney, and paid by him under protest, as liquor license for the saloon and restaurant kept by said Owen F. Rooney at the end of the Oakland pier." By the second section of the said ordinance the auditor is directed to draw his warrant in favor of said Rooney for the sum of $1,000, and the treasurer of the city is ordered to pay said warrant. The respondent, Snow, as auditor of the city of Oakland, refused to draw his warrant upon the treasurer, as required by said ordinance. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to the superior court of Alameda county for an alternative writ of mandate against said respondent as such auditor, requiring him to show cause why he did not draw a warrant in favor of the plaintiff, as required by said ordinance. The respondent demurred to plaintiff's petition, and the lower court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant for costs, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

The appellant relies upon said ordinance as the foundation of his claim, and maintains that the auditor of said city has no discretion in the matter, but merely a ministerial duty to perform in drawing the warrant in accordance with the ordinance. By section 40 of the charter of the city of Oakland every demand, before it can be paid, must be presented to the auditor to be approved, "who shall satisfy himself whether the money is legally due and remains unpaid, and whether the payment thereof from the treasury of the city is authorized by law, and out of what fund. After such examination he shall approve or reject the claim in whole or in part, and endorse upon such demand his approval or rejection over his signature, together with the date thereof. If it is approved, the fund out of which it is to be paid shall be designated. If the claim is rejected, or any part of it, unless the party presenting it is willing to take in full of the entire demand the sum offered, the auditor shall return it to the council, board or other body which originally authorized it, then if it is allowed by a majority vote of all the members of the council, or of the members of the board or other body authorizing it, and approved by the mayor, it can be audited in the same manner as if it had not been rejected: provided, the said council, board or other body had the authority to make the expenditure out of which the claim arose." St. 1889, p. 531. It is manifest from the city charter that the powers conferred and the duties imposed on the auditor in the premises require the exercise of judgment and discretion, and not merely the performance of clerical or ministerial duties. And this power conferred upon the auditor comes from the same source as that conferred upon the city council, and is of equal rank. The city council has no power to direct the auditor to audit an illegal claim, or to draw his warrant for payment of the same, or one which there is no authority in law to allow; and, if the council should pass such an ordinance, the auditor would not be required to carry out the direction, but it would be his plain duty to refuse to do so,—he must "satisfy himself whether the money is legally due." As said in Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 151, 38

Pac. 682: "Powers of a municipality are to be exercised through its legally constituted agents, and the authority of such officer, board, or department to exercise any of the corporate power with which a municipality has been clothed must be distinctly conferred upon that officer, board, or department, or its acts create no obligation against the municipality." The only statement in the petition in reference to the nature of the plaintiff's demand is contained in the said ordinance, which is set out in said petition; and the language of the ordinance is that the claim is for money erroneously collected by the city of Oakland from said Rooney for a liquor license for his saloon and restaurant kept by him at the end of Oakland pier. But the petition does not show how or why the money was erroneously collected. It appears, however, that in City of Oakland v. Oakland Water-Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, this court held that "ship channel," being the western boundary line of the city of Oakland, was the line of ordinary low tide. The end of the Oakland pier, at which point this plaintiff's saloon and restaurant were kept, was discovered not to be within the city of Oakland. The plaintiff and others were supposed to know where the boundary lines of the city of Oakland were as well before as since the decision in question. The charter of the city of Oakland, defining its boundaries, is a public statute, and the lines were not altered or changed by such decision, but simply defined according to the act itself. The payment of the license by Rooney, although it was stated in the ordinance to have been under protest, was, nevertheless, voluntary on his part, and as such cannot be recovered back. "The illegality of the demand paid constitutes of itself no ground for relief. There must be, in addition, some compulsion or coercion attending its assertion, which controls the conduct of the party making the payment." Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 271. In Maxwell v. San Luis Obispo Co., 71 Cal. 466, 12 Pac. 484, the plaintiff alleged that "the moneys sued for were exacted and collected by the tax collector without authority of law, and as a condition precedent to the carrying on of business, and by threats, menaces, legal prosecutions, suits, actions, processes, attachments, seizures, confiscations, and sequestrations, which he, the said tax collector, gave out and made for the purpose of causing the payment of said moneys; and that said moneys were all paid under and by reason of said threats and menaces, and would not have been paid but for such threats and menaces." Yet this court in its decision says: "The tax collector had no real or apparent power to execute the threats of seizure, confiscation, and sequestration. The law under which he assumed to exact license taxes authorized him to direct suits to be brought for the recovery of such taxes, and to have attachments issued in such actions;" and adds that the plaintiff was "not liable to anything beyond civil and criminal prosecutions in which the invalidity of the law which authorized the collection of the taxes would have been a perfect defense." Many cases are referred to in support of this view of the court, which it is unnecessary here to quote. It was held in that case that the complaint did not state a cause of action for the recovery of money, and the judgment was reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint. In Phelan v. City and County of San Francisco, 120 Cal. 1, 52 Pac. 38, it is said that, in order to constitute a payment under duress, there must be some coercion or compulsion, or some exercise of authority over the person or property of the party making the payment which controls his action, and which can be avoided only by making the payment. Nor does the payment of the taxes under protest of such party take from the payment its voluntary character unless it is necessary in order to protect his person or property. To the same effect are O'Brien v. Colusa Co., 67 Cal. 503, 8 Pac. 37, and Grimley v. Santa Clara Co., 68 Cal. 575, 9 Pac. 840. The payment of the license tax by the appellant was voluntarily made under the supposition, doubtless, that his place of business was within the city of Oakland. But, because that turns out not to be so, the character of the payment is not altered. In law it is still deemed to be a voluntary payment, and the city is not responsible in the matter, nor required to refund the money so paid. This being so, the ordinance under consideration is without authority of law, and invalid, and the respondent was fully justified in refusing to follow its direction. Judgment affirmed.

BLEWETT v. MILLER et al. (Sac. 753.)¹

SHERIFFS — LEVY ON EXEMPT PROPERTY — MEASURE OF DAMAGES — NEW TRIAL — NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE — DILIGENCE.

1. Where an action is brought against a sheriff for the wrongful sale of exempt property, and the full value thereof is recovered, it is error to refuse a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence on a showing that the owner of the property repurchased it after the sheriff's sale for less than it was worth, since the measure of damages is the sum necessary to compensate the owner as authorized by Civ. Code, § 3333, and not the value of the property as authorized by section 3336, as the latter section does not apply when the property is repurchased.

2. On the trial of an action against a sheriff for the wrongful sale of exempt property, the plaintiff's pleadings did not show that the property had been repurchased after the sale for less than its value, and the plaintiff did not testify to such fact, but a witness testified that he saw part of the property in plaintiff's possession after the sale. Plaintiff recovered a verdict for the value of the property. Held not to show such a want of diligence on the part of defendant as would warrant a refusal of a new trial on a showing of such repurchase.

3. Where a sheriff wrongfully sells exempt property in connection with other property, and all is repurchased by the owner for less than its value, the amount so paid should be apportioned between the exempt and the other property in determining the damage caused by the sale of the exempt property, in an action against the sheriff to recover therefor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; William O. Miner, Judge.

Action by H. C. Blewett, administrator, against Henry Miller and others, for the wrongful levy and sale of exempt property. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal. Reversed.

El. N. Rector and Frank H. Farrar, for appellants. Chas. H. Marks and B. F. Fowler, for respondent.

SMITH, C. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial, but the only point made by the appellants' counsel, and the only point that need be considered, is that a new trial should have been granted on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. The defendant Warfield is sheriff of Merced county, and, it is found, seized under attachment certain property of the plaintiff's intestate that was exempt from execution, namely, a harvester and five gang plows. The other defendants are the sureties on his official bond. The suit was brought to recover damages for this taking. The court found that the harvester was at the time of the taking of the value of $1,000, and the plows of $60, and gave judgment for the aggregate amount, with legal interest from the time of the taking. It appears from the affidavit of Warfield that at the sale of the property levied on by him—consisting of the property in controversy and 23 mules and other property—the whole of the property was sold to C. F. Blewett (plaintiff in the attachment suit) for the sum of $750, who, on the same day, sold the same to the plaintiff's intestate for the sum of $1,100, and that the mules alone were worth more than that sum. Had this fact been known at the trial, the result must have been different; for the plaintiff—his intestate having recovered the property—was not entitled to recover its full value. The rule is that, "where one recovers his property again which had been unlawfully taken from him, he is considered as having received it in mitigation of damages"; and the measure of damages, in the absence of special damage, is the expense of procuring its return (with interest). 1 Suth. Dam. 239. And see 3 Suth. Dam. 527, and to same effect 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 58. The rule applies generally without regard to the means by which the return is secured, whether by purchase or otherwise. "Thus, when plaintiff's property was seized and sold by the defendant [a sheriff], and was repurchased by the plaintiff from one who bought it in at the sheriff's sale, it was held that the measure of damages was the amount paid to repurchase the property." Id. The point is directly decided by the court of civil appeals of Texas in Field v. Munster, 32 S. W. 417, where the subject is fully discussed, and the above and numerous other authorities cited. The decision was affirmed on writ of error by the supreme court of Texas (Munster v. Fields, 33 S. W. 852), the court citing as additional authorities Kline v. McCandless, 139 Pa. St. 223, 20 Atl. 1045; Fields v. Williams (Ala.) 8 South. 808. The provisions of section 3336, Civ. Code, are to be understood as applying only to cases where the property is not returned or recovered, not as abolishing the rule that the recovery of the property is to be considered in mitigation of damages. In such cases the rule is as stated in section 3333, Id.

With regard to the question of diligence on the part of the defendant, I have more difficulty in coming to a conclusion. "The presumption is that the discretion [of the lower court] has been properly exercised." Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 670, 38 Pac. 512. But here the new fact was of such a character that it might have remained undiscovered by the defendant even after the most extraordinary diligence; nor was there anything in the circumstances of the case to put the defendant on inquiry (104 Cal. 671, 38 Pac. 512), unless it was the statement of the witness Houlk that he had seen the harvester on the ranch of the plaintiff's intestate subsequent to the sheriff's sale. But a statement of this kind, made by a witness on the trial, might, under the circumstances of the case, very well escape the notice even of diligent counsel; for the fact—though known to the plaintiff and his attorneys—was suppressed by them, or at least not referred to in the pleadings, and the plaintiff himself as witness, though sworn to tell the whole truth, said nothing about it. This conduct, whether designed to have such effect or otherwise, would naturally tend to mislead the defendant, and the plaintiff cannot complain if it in fact had such effect.

The case has evidently been tried on a wrong theory, and a new trial should be had. On the new trial the whole amount paid by the plaintiff's intestate on the purchase from C. F. Blewett should be apportioned between the property in controversy and the other property according to relative value; and the defendant should be charged only with the amount apportioned to the former, with legal interest from the date of sale, and any special damages, if any, that may be proved. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

MULCAHEY et al. v. DOW et al.
(S. F. 1,719.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1900.)

INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEE—FRAUD—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—EVIDENCE.

1. Civ. Code, § 2224, providing that "one who gains a thing by fraud * * * is * * * an involuntary trustee of the thing gained for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have gained it," if covering property gained by a judicial decree, applies only where the fraud is such as would justify a court of equity in setting aside the decree.

2. A proceeding to secure a decree of distribution being one in rem, the decree therein is binding on one who did not appear, though he had constructive notice only under the statute.

3. A decree of distribution finding the wife of intestate the only heir, and distributing the entire estate to her, cannot be successfully attacked for fraud by general evidence tending in an unsatisfactory way to show merely that several years before her husband's death she knew of the existence of persons who were heirs of his, and that she told the attorney who prepared the petition for letters of administration that her husband had no relatives.

Van Dyke, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by Margaret Mulcahey and others against Hezekiah Dow and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Myrick & Deering, for appellants. H. H. Reid, W. H. Bodfish, Beatty & Beatty, and A. Ruef, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Arthur Waters died intestate in the city of San Francisco, leaving a wife, Elizabeth, here, and a sister and nephews in other states. Administration was had upon his estate, and in due time, and after due notice, a decree of distribution was entered, which found that the wife, Elizabeth, was the only heir of her husband, and all of his estate was thereupon distributed to her. Subsequently she died, and these defendants are her successors in interest. Plaintiffs—a sister of Arthur Waters, deceased, and a certain nephew and niece—brought this action, claiming to be his heirs at law, and asserting that the wife, Elizabeth, under the decree of distribution, held their respective shares of the property as an involuntary trustee. They were nonsuited, and judgment went against them. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment will be the material matter considered upon this appeal.

As a legal foundation upon which to rest their claims, plaintiffs rely upon section 2224 of the Civil Code, which says: "One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, * * * or other wrongful act, is * * * an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." For present purposes it will be conceded that this section, in its terms, is broad enough to apply to judgments of courts adjudicating property rights; and here fraud upon the part of the wife, Elizabeth, in securing a judgment, is relied upon to support a recovery. In cases of this character, in order to substantiate the charge of fraud, evidence must be produced which is fully satisfactory to the judicial mind. The rule is clearly stated in Wickersham v. Comerford, 104 Cal. 495, 38 Pac. 101, where this court said: "It was necessary for the plaintiff to establish by clear and indubitable proof, to the satisfaction of the superior court, that the order setting apart the homestead had been obtained through some fraud practiced upon that court by the defendant. * * * She cannot be charged with fraud, or any fraudulent imposition upon the court, for merely failing to state in her petition any facts tending to show that the petition ought not to be granted, unless it is made to appear that she knew the import of these facts, and that they were willfully suppressed by her with the intention of deceiving the court, and thereby inducing it to grant her petition." Again, fraud must be shown which is extrinsic and collateral to the cause. It is held in Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, that neither perjury nor subornation of perjury constitute a fraud which will support a cause of action to set aside a judgment based thereon. In Fealey v. Fealey, 104 Cal. 354, 38 Pac. 49, this court said: "The fraud which is set forth as the basis of the plaintiff's cause of action relates to the alleged falsity of defendant's statement made in her petition for the order setting aside the homestead, and again repeated in her testimony upon the hearing of such petition, concerning the nature of the title to the land set apart to her as a homestead; but the question of title thus presented and sought to be litigated in this action was necessarily involved in the proceeding to set apart the homestead, and the order or judgment of the court therein was a determination that the allegation of defendant's petition in regard to the nature of the title to the land so set apart was true, and that her testimony relating to the same matter given upon the trial of that proceeding was also true. * * * Under these circumstances that judgment is conclusive upon the plaintiff, and she cannot be permitted to bring into litigation the same matters therein involved, and settled by that judgment." Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 279, 44 Pac. 565, is similar to the case at bar, save that the ground there relied upon for equitable relief was not fraud, but mistake. In that case it was held that the decree of distribution was final and conclusive upon all questions of heirship.

The aforesaid section of the Civil Code relating to involuntary trustees places mistake and fraud in the same category, and, if the reasoning in Lynch v. Rooney, be sound, the same reasoning must control here.

In speaking of decrees of distribution, section 1666 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "In the order or decree the court must name the persons and the proportions or parts to which each shall be entitled. * * * Such order or decree is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside or modified on appeal." The all-important question upon the hearing of a petition for a decree of distribution of the estate of an intestate is, who are the heirs entitled to take the estate? The identity of the heirs being determined, the proportion of each is not a difficult question to decide, for the law itself fixes those proportions; and, if the question of heirship is not settled by the decree of distribution, then nothing is settled by it, and the whole proceeding is a vain and useless thing. And this section of the Code declares in terms that the decree, subject to appeal, is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, and devisees. Hence it must be the rule that, conceding section 2224 is broad enough to cover property gained by a judicial decree, still it only applies to cases where the fraud is such as would justify a court of equity in setting aside a judgment. We here have a judicial decree that these plaintiffs are not heirs at law of Arthur Waters, deceased,—a decree that has never been assailed, and which, by the very terms of the section quoted, has become final and conclusive. It seems idle to say that the validity of the decree is recognized by the plaintiffs, and that they rely upon its validity in seeking relief. They are only entitled to the relief sought by showing circumstances in the procurement of the decree itself which would justify a court of equity in setting it aside for fraud. If those circumstances are not shown, they secure no relief. They must attack and overthrow the finding of fact in the decree as to the heirship of the wife, Elizabeth,—a finding expressly placed there by direct authority of the statute,—in order that they may show themselves heirs at law of the deceased, Arthur Waters. It therefore seems inevitable that, in order to secure the relief here sought, they must go behind the decree, and falsify the important finding of fact upon which it is based. In view of the decision in Pico v. Cohn, supra, and other cases cited, if these plaintiffs had appeared in person at the hearing upon the petition for distribution, and had litigated the question of heirship, and lost their cause, certainly that decree, aside from the question of extrinsic and collateral fraud, would have forever foreclosed them from bringing an action of this character. But now the point is made that plaintiffs only had constructive notice of the hearing, and for that reason a different rule of law applies to them. The case of Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 Pac. 563, 16 L. R. A. 361, and the authorities cited in that decision, are relied upon to support this contention; but that the rule there declared ever applied to a proceeding in rem we gravely doubt. A proceeding to secure a decree of distribution is essentially a proceeding in the nature of one in rem. It has none of the characteristics of a proceeding in personam, as was the case of Dunlap v. Steere, supra. In Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harrison, said: "The distribution of the estate includes the determination of the persons who, by law, are entitled thereto, and also the proportions or parts to which each of these persons is entitled. * * * By giving the notice directed by the statute, the entire world is called before the court, and the court acquires jurisdiction over all persons for the purpose of determining their right to any portion of the estate; and every person who may assert any rights or interest therein is required to present his claim to the court for its determination. Whether he appear and present his claim, or fail to appear, the action of the court is equally conclusive upon him, 'subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal.' The decree is as binding upon him if he fail to appear and present his claim, as if his claim after presentation had been disallowed by the court." In view of this clear and forcible language, emanating from the court in bank, it would seem that the plaintiffs' claim entirely dissolves, to the extent, at least, of the principle of law invoked in Dunlap v. Steere, supra.

The nonsuit was properly granted on the evidence. There was no extrinsic or collateral fraud. Fraud must plainly appear from the evidence, and here it does not appear at all. There is some general evidence tending in an unsatisfactory way to show that Elizabeth Waters knew of the existence of these plaintiffs several years prior to the death of her husband. There is also some evidence showing that she told W. H. Metson, an attorney at law, who prepared the petition for letters of administration in behalf of Grant and Pennell, petitioners for letters, that her husband had no relatives; and this is all the evidence of fraud that we can find in the record. The showing made is too weak to stand alone. It would not support a judgment if one rested upon it. The fact that Elizabeth Waters did not inform these relatives, living in different states, of the death of her husband, is not material here. No legal duty devolved upon her to furnish them with that information. There is nothing to indicate that she acted in bad faith at any stage of the administration, or made the statements to Metson with the purpose or design of defrauding anybody, or imposing upon the court. There is no evidence showing that she knew these plaintiffs were entitled to any part of the estate as heirs at law of her husband.

There is no evidence showing that the decree of distribution, wherein it is found as a fact that she was the only heir, was based upon her testimony, or upon any testimony induced by her to be given before the court. If this decree was based upon the testimony of Grant, one of the administrators, as claimed by plaintiffs, there is no evidence but that his knowledge or information upon the subject came from his friend, Arthur Waters, during his lifetime, or from some source other than that of Elizabeth Waters. And, if all of these things had appeared by the evidence, then whether or not they constituted extrinsic fraud would still be an open question. Tried by the test laid down in Wickersham v. Comerford, the nonsuit was properly granted. The errors of law relied upon are unsubstantial. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.; HARRISON, J.

VAN DYKE, J. I dissent. The purpose of the proceeding is not to disturb this action of the probate court at all. That court had jurisdiction of the matter in question, and upon the testimony and showing before it the decree of distribution could not well have been different from the one entered. The question here is whether a party who has succeeded in obtaining a thing through fraud can be compelled to yield it to whom it properly belongs, and who would not have been deprived of it excepting through such fraud. Our Code lays down the general rule in such cases in the following language: "One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." Civ. Code, § 2224. It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiffs were prevented from appearing and presenting their claims by the fraudulent conduct of Elizabeth Waters, who willfully and intentionally represented to the court that she was the sole and only heir, when she knew the plaintiffs were also heirs of the deceased husband, and entitled to a share of his estate. In Story's Equity Jurisprudence it is said: "In general, it may be stated that in all cases where, by accident, or mistake, or fraud, or otherwise, a party has an unfair advantage in proceedings in a court of law, which must necessarily make that court an instrument of injustice, and it is therefore against conscience that he should use that advantage, a court of equity will interfere and restrain him from using the advantage which he has thus improperly gained." Story, Eq. Jur. § 885. To the same effect the rule is stated in Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1053; Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 128, 9 Sup. Ct. 447, 32 L. Ed. 878. In Wickersham v. Comerford, 96 Cal. 439, 31 Pac. 360, it was claimed by defendant, as here, that the facts stated in the complaint did not constitute fraud of which the plaintiff was entitled to complain. The justice, in writing the opinion in that case, says: "The complaint charges a willful suppression of a material truth, and a suggestion of a falsehood by defendant, with intent to deceive and mislead the court, to the prejudice of the creditors of the estate, and avers that such suppression and suggestion had the intended effect, to the injury of the plaintiff, who was one of such creditors. I think this constituted fraud." In Wingerter v. Wingerter, 71 Cal. 105, 11 Pac. 853, the defendant had been the administrator upon the estate of his deceased brother, who died in Los Angeles county. The plaintiff was the son of that deceased brother, but resided in the state of Missouri. The defendant, as such administrator, induced the plaintiff, as heir of his deceased father, through false representations, to convey to him (the defendant) his interest in the estate, and afterwards procured the interest to be distributed to him by the probate court. Held, that the defendant was an involuntary trustee for the plaintiff of the property so fraudulently obtained, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought, to wit, the recovery of the property. See, also, Lataillade v. Orena, 91 Cal. 576, 27 Pac. 924; Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 347, 28 Pac. 563, 16 L. R. A. 361; Bergin v. Haight, 99 Cal. 52-56, 33 Pac. 760; Curtis v. Schell (Cal.) 61 Pac. 951,—where the question is fully discussed. The complaint in this case states a cause of action entitling the plaintiffs to the relief asked, and the evidence at least tended to support the material allegations of the complaint. This was sufficient to prevent a nonsuit. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 117; Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 40; McKee v. Greene, 31 Cal. 418.

GREENE v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (GINN et al., Interveners; S. F. 2,381).

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS — TEXT-BOOKS—CHANGING—VALIDITY—RESTRAINING.

A board of education, by resolution, adopted a different system of penmanship than the one then in use, without giving the notice required by Pol. Code, § 1874, subd. 3, providing that at least 60 days' notice of any proposed change must be given by publication in a newspaper published in the county, stating the change proposed, that bids for furnishing books to replace them will be received, and when and where such bids will be opened. Held, that the resolution, and contract for supplying books made pursuant thereto, were void.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by J. C. Greene against the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, Ginn & Co. appeal. Reversed.

Sheffield S. Sanborn (Wm. B. Bosley, of counsel), for appellants. John H. Dickinson, for respondent J. C. Greene. H. H. Hindry, for respondent H. S. Crocker Co. Franklin K. Lane, for respondent board of education.

COOPER, C. This action was brought by plaintiff, as a citizen and taxpayer, to enjoin the defendants, who are the members of and compose the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco, from using, or causing to be used, until four years after the 9th day of June, 1897, the text-books of the Shaylor system of vertical round-hand penmanship, upon the ground that said text-books have not been legally adopted by the board. The appellants, Ginn & Co., a co-partnership doing business in the state of Massachusetts, were allowed to and did intervene. In their complaint in intervention they alleged that they, as publishers of the said Shaylor system, entered into a contract with defendant board on the 30th day of June, 1899, by which they agreed to supply the public schools of the said city and county with the text-books of said Shaylor system. The case was tried before the court, and findings filed, upon which judgment was entered for plaintiff as prayed for. Appellants made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion. It is conceded that in June, 1899, the defendant board passed a resolution regular in form, and, after proper notice as required by statute, adopting as a uniform series of text-books the Shaylor system, and entered into a contract with appellants, whereby they were to furnish at stated prices the copybooks of the Shaylor system to the pupils in the public schools of the city and county of San Francisco. The resolution of the board and the said contract with appellants were valid and legal if the board had power to make them, and this depends upon whether or not the board had, in the month of June, 1897, legally adopted the text-books of the California system of vertical penmanship published by H. S. Crocker & Co. If the California system was legally adopted in June, 1897, the board had no power to change the text-books so adopted until four years from the date of adoption. Pol. Code, § 1874, subd. 1. The main question, therefore, in the case is as to the validity of a resolution passed by the board June 9, 1897, adopting the California system of vertical penmanship. It is provided in Pol. Code, § 1874, subd. 3: "At least sixty days' notice of any proposed change in text books must be given by publication in a newspaper of general circulation, published in the county, if there be one, in which such change is to be made. If there be no newspaper published in the county, then such publication shall be made in any newspaper having a general circulation in the county. A copy of the newspaper containing such publication, with such notice marked, must, immediately after the first publication thereof, be by the secretary of the board transmitted to the state board of education, and the same, when received, must be filed by the secretary of said state board. Said notice shall state what text books it is proposed to change; that sealed bids or proposals will be received by the board for furnishing books to replace them; the place where and the day and hour when all bids or proposals will be opened, and that the board reserves the right to reject any and all bids or proposals. Said notice shall be published in such newspaper as often as the same shall be issued after the first publication thereof." It is admitted that the board did not comply with the above subdivision of said section, prior to the resolution of June 9, 1897, in regard to the publication of the notice therein required; neither did the board, at any time, comply with the section as to the contract with said H. S. Crocker & Company by publishing any notice prior to making the same. The resolution and contract, as to the California vertical system of text-books, were therefore in excess of the jurisdiction of the board and void. The board, being an inferior tribunal or body, possesses such powers, and such only, as are given it by the statute. The law has prescribed the course to be pursued and the things to be done in order to effect a change in the text-books of the public schools, and the board must follow its mandates. The statute must be substantially followed. If the board could dispense with one of the material requirements of the statute, it could dispense with others, and thus be left with no guide except its absolute will. The board is the agent of the public, and intrusted with the duty of carrying out the mandates of the law in the matter of adopting text-books for the use of the children of the public schools. The evident object of section 1874 is that all parties may have a fair hearing before the board, and that the best text-books may be obtained at the lowest price. The section requires the bids to be publicly opened, and accompanied by sample copies of the books proposed to be furnished. It further provides that no change shall be made except in the months of May or June of the year in which the change is made, and that any books adopted as a uniform series of text-books must be continued in use for not less than four years. The law formerly required six months' notice of any proposed change in text-books, and this court held in People v. State Board of Education, 49 Cal. 685, that the board could not make the change without giving the notice. In the opinion it is said: "The authority of the board to effect the change was thereby made dependent upon the giving of the prescribed notice, and its exercise was forbidden except after such notice first given."

The respondents claim that the provisions of the section do not apply, because it does not appear that the attempted change was made as to books "that were in use as a part of a uniform series of books," and that the change refers to a change of a part of a uniform series. We do not think such a narrow construction should be given the statute. Its plain mandate is, "notice of any proposed change in text-books."

It appears from the uncontradicted evidence of the superintendent of the public schools of the city and county of San Francisco that in June, 1897, the Spencerian system was in use in the schools, and that it was the only system in use that was ever brought to his attention, but that they had been experimenting with the vertical system. But if it be conceded that on the 9th day of June, 1897, the Spencerian system and the California system of vertical penmanship were each in use in the public schools, the order adopting the California system would exclude the Spencerian system. This was certainly a change in the text-books in use in the public schools. We do not think the language of the statute applies only to a change of text-books that had been legally adopted. If the Spencerian system was in use in the public schools, whether by legal adoption or by the silent acquiescence of teachers and pupils, the board could not change the text-books so in use without publication as required by the Code. As the plaintiff cannot maintain this action unless the order of the board of June 9, 1897, was valid and is still in force, and as it has been shown to be void, it is not necessary to pass upon the question as to whether or not the plaintiff, as a taxpayer, can maintain the action. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

BOVARD v. DICKENSON. (Sac. 760.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1900.)

BILLS AND NOTES — ASSIGNMENT BY EXECUTRIX—EVIDENCE—FOREIGN LAWS — PRESUMPTION.

1. Where plaintiff claimed to be the assignee of the note sued on, and the assignment was denied, the burden was on plaintiff to prove it.

2. When plaintiff, suing on a note as the assignee, relied on an assignment executed by an executrix in Missouri, and there was no evidence that such assignment was authorized by any court having jurisdiction of the estate, and no evidence as to the laws of Missouri, there could be no recovery, since the Missouri law would be presumed to be the same as Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1517, 1524, declaring that a chose in action belonging to an estate may not be sold save under order of the superior court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Edward I. Jones, Judge.

Action by John H. Bovard against G. L. Dickenson. From a judgment in favor of defendant and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. W. Dodge, for appellant. Budd & Thompson, for respondent.

GRAY, C. Appeal from a judgment in defendant's favor, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. This action was commenced by filing a complaint on November 5, 1898. In that complaint it is alleged that on June 1, 1885, at Atchison, Kan., the defendant made and delivered his promissory note for $820 and interest, due 90 days after date, to one J. A. Bovard; and thereafter, on December 30, 1894, and February 4, 1898, at Stockton, Cal., in consideration of the foregoing facts and said indebtedness, the said defendant signed two several writings, whereby he acknowledged the said indebtedness, and promised to pay the same according to the terms of said promissory note. It is also alleged that said promissory note and indebtedness and said writings, and every claim and cause of action thereunder against defendant, were duly assigned and transferred to the plaintiff herein, and ever since said assignment plaintiff has been, and now is, the owner of the same. The answer specifically denied the alleged assignment and ownership, and the four-year statute of limitations was also pleaded therein. From the evidence it appears that the payee of the note, J. A. Bovard, died in Missouri in 1894, and that Lucy S. Bovard, appointed in that state as the executrix of his estate, attempted to assign and transfer to plaintiff by instrument in writing, executed by her as such executrix (presumably in the state of Missouri), all the claim and cause of action of said estate under said two instruments of writing. The said executrix also attempted to assign the said promissory note to plaintiff by a written indorsement on the back thereof, signed by her as executrix. There is nothing to show that this action of the executrix was authorized by any order of the court having jurisdiction of said estate. Nor is there anything to show that the transfer by the executrix to plaintiff was intended merely for the purpose of collection, or for any other purpose than that of an absolute assignment, sale, and transfer to said plaintiff as indicated by the said written transfer. The assignment being denied, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove it. This, we think, he failed to do. There being no evidence as to the law of Missouri, it will be deemed, for the purposes of the case, to be the same as the law of California. In California the personal property of a decedent, including choses in action, passes to the heirs or devisees, and no sale can be had without the order of the court. Sections 1517, 1524, Code Civ. Proc. This case cannot be distinguished in principle from Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 38 Pac. 89, which was approved as to the question here considered in Rankin v. Newman, 114 Cal. 635, 46 Pac. 742, at page 660, 114 Cal., and page 749, 46 Pac.; and on the authority of these two cases we hold that the assignment and transfer of the claim and indebtedness from the executrix to plaintiff without authority of the probate court was invalid, and the finding adverse to said alleged assignment is supported by the evidence. This being so, plaintiff cannot recover, and the other points urged by him are immaterial. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

CORPORATIONS-DISSOLUTION — FORFEITURE OF CHARTER-INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE-INTEREST OF STOCKHOLDER-MINUTE BOOKS.

1. Where the uncontradicted testimony showed that defendant corporation had organized, elected officers, adopted by-laws and a seal within 30 days after incorporating, commenced and continued business from that date, and legally changed its name thereafter, such evidence was sufficient to support a finding of the trial court that the corporation adopted and used a seal, organized and commenced the business for which it was incorporated immediately after issuance of said certificate of incorporation, and continued the same from that time on, and hence was not liable to forfeiture of its charter, or dissolution, under Civ. Code, § 358, providing that, if a corporation does not organize and commence business within one year from the date of its incorporation, its corporate powers cease.

2. Where the evidence in an action by the people to enforce the forfeiture of defendant's charter showed that the corporation had organized and commenced business within a year from its incorporation, and there was no evidence to show an injury to the public, the trial court's finding that none of defendant's acts were injurious to plaintiff, nor prejudicial to relator, or any of the stockholders or creditors, was correct, and entitled defendant to a judgment.

3. The illegal levy of assessments on the stock of a corporation would be no cause for its dissolution in an action brought by the state for that purpose.

4. In an action by the state to forfeit defendant's charter for not organizing and commencing business within one year after incorporation, a witness was asked what was his interest, as stockholder, on his retirement from the corporation. Held, that an objection to the question was properly sustained, since it could throw no light on the issue.

5. Where the state sought to forfeit defendant's charter because it had not begun business within one year from the date of its incorporation, its objection to defendant's minute book was properly overruled, since this would tend to show all the details of the business of the corporation and the time of its organization.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Proceeding in the nature of quo warranto by the people against the Rosenstein-Cohn Cigar Company, a corporation, and others, to dissolve the corporation. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for the People. Dillon & Dunning and A. Heyneman, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying plaintiff a new trial. The proceeding is in the nature of a quo warranto by the attorney general to deprive the defendant, a corporation, of its corporate charter, and procure its dissolution. The principal ground, as we gather from the complaint, upon which it is claimed the corporation should be deprived of its charter, is that it did not proceed to organize and commence the transaction of business within one year from the date of its incorporation, as provided in Civ. Code, § 358: "If a corporation does not organize and commence the transaction of its business or the construction of its works within one year from the date of its incorporation, its corporate powers cease." It is alleged that on the 19th day of December, 1894, articles of incorporation were filed with the county clerk of Los Angeles county by the M. L. Polaski Company, Limited, which set forth the object and purposes of the corporation, the place of business, the term for which it was to continue, the names of five directors, the capital stock, the number of shares subscribed, and the amount subscribed by each director; that the said articles were subscribed and acknowledged by the five directors, and a certified copy thereof sent to the secretary of state; and that the secretary of state issued to said M. L. Polaski Company, Limited, the usual certificate, under the great seal of the state, showing "that a copy of the articles containing the required statement of facts had been filed in his office." The complaint then proceeds to allege "that no other, further, or different steps in the organization of said corporation were taken, no by-laws were adopted, no officers were elected, no record was kept embracing the acts done or who were present and who absent, no stock and transfer book was kept, and no meetings of the directors were had." It is not alleged that the said M. L. Polaski Company, Limited, did not organize within the year, nor is there any allegation as to when it commenced the transaction of its business. It is further alleged that a petition was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county on the 24th day of May, 1897, for change of name of the said M. L. Polaski Company, and that "upon proceedings had therein an order was made and entered on June 29, 1897, changing the name of said corporation to the Rosenstein-Cohn Cigar Company, the present defendant." No attempt is made to allege that the defendant, under its present name, did not organize and commence business within one year after June 29, 1897. On the contrary, it is alleged that after the order so changing the name the corporation "carried on business in the city of Los Angeles, county and state aforesaid, as cigar dealers under the name of Rosenstein-Cohn Cigar Company, claiming to be a corporation." It is further alleged that "the exercise of corporate power by the defendants, or any of them, is contrary to the statutes of the state of California, and each and every exercise of said corporate power subsequent to the lapse of one year from the date of its incorporation has been, as to the people of the state of California, void, and of no effect." The prayer asks for judgment "that said corporation did not organize within one year from the date of its incorporation, and that its corporate powers ceased at the expiration of the said year."

The evident intention of the pleader was to show that the corporation, while using the name M. L. Polaski Company, Limited, did not, within one year from the date of its incorporation, organize and commence the transaction of its business. We may, for the purposes of this case, concede that the complaint so alleges, and that such facts would entitle the plaintiff to judgment depriving the corporation defendant of its charter. But the court found: "The said corporation adopted and used a seal in due form of law. The said corporation organized and commenced the business for which it was incorporated immediately after the issuance of said certificate of incorporation, and by the 21st day of December, 1894, and ever since that time, has continued to operate, and is now operating, the same." It is claimed by plaintiff that the above finding is not supported by the evidence. We have carefully examined the evidence, and find in it sufficient to support the finding. The witness Rosenstein testified that he was secretary of the M. L. Polaski Company, and further said: "We adopted by-laws the same week of the incorporation. * * * The by-laws were in the safe. * * * Right away after the incorporation of the M. L. Polaski Company we organized by electing officers. It was within thirty days, and the by-laws were adopted within thirty days. We transacted business right away. The company had a seal. The corporate meetings were held at the cigar store regularly." The witness Robertson was bookkeeper for the M. L. Polaski Company, Limited, from the time it was incorporated until its name was changed. He testified: "I was there just about the time the articles of incorporation were filed. I started a set of books. * * * From the 21st of December, the date of the incorporation, the business went right along at the old stand, buying and selling tobacco, cigars, and articles." The witness Polaski testified: "We were conducting business at the same place as a partnership before the corporation was formed. * * * After the incorporation the business went right along as before, so far as the selling of goods was concerned. Q. Did you organize a board of directors then by the election of officers? A. I think so. Q. Did you commence business? A. Yes, sir." The above evidence not only supports the finding, but is uncontradicted, and upon the finding defendants were entitled to judgment.

The court, after certain other findings, found: "That none of their said acts were injurious to plaintiff, nor prejudicial to the interests of the relator, the said defendant E. Cohn, or any of the stockholders or creditors of said corporation." We think, treating the last-named finding as a conclusion of law, that it is correct, and entitles defendants to judgment. The courts treat a franchise as a trust, and the terms of the charter of a corporation are the conditions of the trust. A forfeiture of the charter takes place when some one or more of the essential conditions of the trust are violated. People v. Dashaway Ass'n, 84 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 277, 12 L. R. A. 117. It is said in the above case that cases of forfeiture are divided into two classes: "(1) Cases of perversion; as where a corporation does an act inconsistent with the nature and destructive of the ends and purposes of the grant. In such cases, unless the perversion is such as to amount to an injury to the public, who are interested in the franchise, it will not work a forfeiture. (2) Cases of usurpation; as where a corporation exercises a power which it has no right to exercise. In this last case the question of forfeiture is not dependent, as in the former, upon any interest or injury to the public." In the case at bar it is not pretended that the corporation has usurped a power which it had no right to exercise, and therefore the second class of cases referred to has no application to this case. The evidence shows, and the court found, that the corporation proceeded to carry out the ends and purposes of the grant of its franchise by organizing and commencing business within the year, but, aside from this, there is no evidence in any manner tending to show an injury to the public. The complaint alleges that certain assessments have been levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, and that said assessments were levied "for the purpose of compelling the stockholders thereof to contribute money for the benefit of said corporation." We know of no reason why assessments may not, in proper cases, be levied upon the capital stock for the benefit of a corporation. If we assume that the assessments were illegally levied, this was not a cause for dissolving the corporation. Burnham v. Manufacturing Co., 76 Cal. 24, 17 Pac. 940. It is not necessary to examine the many specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain other findings upon immaterial matters. The finding quoted and discussed disposes of the vital issue in the case. The plaintiff called one Polaski as a witness. It appeared from his testimony that he was a stockholder and one of the subscribers of the articles of incorporation of the M. L. Polaski Company, Limited; that he retired May 20, 1897. He was then asked by plaintiff: "Q. What interest in the property was then determined to be your interest?" The court sustained an objection to the question, and it is claimed that the court erred in so doing. We think the ruling correct. The amount of interest of the witness in the property of the corporation was not the subject of investigation. It could not possibly throw any light upon the issue as to whether or not the corporation organized and commenced business within one year after it incorporated. There was no error in overruling plaintiff's objection to the minute book of the corporation. It does not appear that the book was read or considered in evidence, but, if we assume that it was so read in evidence, it was competent. It tended to show the organization of the corporation, its place of business, the nature of the business transacted, the meetings of directors, and other matters as to the good faith of the corporation. There was no question raised as to the identity, genuineness, and regularity of the minutes.

Other objections are made to the overruling of plaintiff's objections to testimony, but counsel have not seen fit to discuss them to any extent, and do not seem to rely upon them. The testimony to which objection was made relates to resolutions, meetings, the adoption of by-laws, who were the stockholders, and the shares held by each. It all tended to show that the corporation was organized and doing business, and was, therefore, competent and material on the issue presented by the pleadings. We discover no error of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — JUDGMENT
THEREIN—CONCLUSIVENESS ON JUN-IOR LIENHOLDER.

Where plaintiff, who had a lien on defendants' land subject to a mortgage, was made a party to the suit foreclosing the mortgage, but did not answer or set up his claim therein, he is not barred from maintaining an action on his claim against the landowner, since the only bar raised against him by the decree in the foreclosure suit is on the issue that his claim is subject to the lien of plaintiff therein.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; Joseph P. Jones, Judge.

Action by Emil Greenebaum against John Davis and another to foreclose a lien. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. H. Latimer, for appellants. Edw. J. Pringle, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll. Defendant John Davis was the owner of an undivided interest in the Rancho San Pablo. In January, 1885, one Lynch obtained a judgment against Davis for $2,184.04, and $19 costs, and in February of the same year the undivided interest of Davis in said rancho was sold to one Waterman for the sum of $2,300.42, who received a sheriff's deed therefor. Said undivided interest so sold was, however, subject to a mortgage for the sum of $17,960.25 held by Rudolph Hochkofler, the trustee in bankruptcy, for the creditors of D. Ghirardelli. At the time said deed was executed to Waterman there was a suit pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, brought by Joseph Emeric against Juan B. Alvarado et al., the object of which was to partition said rancho; and said Davis, Hochkofler, and Waterman, who were made defendants to said action, stipulated therein that all such lands as might, upon final partition, be allotted to Davis in satisfaction of his undivided interest in the ranch, should be decreed to him as owner, that the mortgage of Hochkofler should be a lien upon the lands so set apart to Davis for the amount of his mortgage, with interest, and that Waterman should have a lien, subject to said mortgage, for $2,300.42 and interest; and this stipulation was confirmed by an interlocutory decree entered in said cause, the claim of said Waterman to become due upon the entry of the final decree, which was March 3, 1894, and which confirmed the interlocutory decree. Hochkofler, in 1888, commenced an action to foreclose his mortgage, and made Waterman a defendant; but this suit was not pressed until after the final decree in the partition case, when John Lloyd, who became trustee after the death of Hochkofler, amended the complaint, and prosecuted the foreclosure suit to a final decree. Waterman did not answer or assert his lien in that action, but made default. The officer making the sale under Lloyd's decree was directed to pay into court any surplus money that might remain after paying the amount due to Lloyd. The present action was commenced by the plaintiff, Greenebaum, the successor in interest of Waterman, on March 2, 1897. His prayer is, in substance, that any portions of the lands not sold to satisfy the prior mortgage be sold, and that any surplus proceeds paid into court under Lloyd's decree be paid to the plaintiff. These facts are, in substance, alleged in the complaint, and the defendants demurred thereto on the following grounds: (1) That there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause; (2) that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and (3) that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject of the action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant answered. Upon the trial plaintiff had findings and judgment.

Appellants' principal point is thus stated: "The holder of the note secured by the second mortgage cannot, after foreclosure of the prior mortgage by a suit to which he was made a party defendant, and in which all his rights might have been settled, maintain an action upon the note against the maker." To this point he cites Brown v. Willis, 67 Cal. 235, 7 Pac. 682, and Hefner v. Insurance Co., 123 U. S. 747, 8 Sup. Ct. 337, 31 L. Ed. 309, and other cases. In the first of these cases one Aldrich brought suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by one Willis to secure a promissory note. Brown was made a party to that action because he held, as assignee, a subsequent mortgage upon the same premises to secure a promissory note which was due at the time the suit was commenced by Aldrich. Brown answered, and, as said in the opinion, "set up his note and mortgage, and as the note was due, if his pleadings were appropriate as they should have been, the court could and should have ascertained" the amount due to each of the parties, and ordered a sale, and the application of the proceeds to Aldrich and Brown in the order of priority. The case at bar is materially different. Here the plaintiff, though made a party defendant to the foreclosure suit brought by Hochkofler to foreclose a prior lien, did not answer or set up his claim by cross complaint or otherwise, and therefore the plaintiff in this action is precisely within the rule laid down in the case of Savings Bank of San Diego Co. v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 34, 54 Pac. 273, where Mr. Justice Temple cited Brown v. Willis, supra, and, commenting thereon, said: "I am unable to comprehend the rationale of the decision, unless it was upon the theory that the second mortgagee had made himself an actor in the case,—had put his rights as mortgagee in issue, and had then through his neglect allowed judgment to go against him adjudging that he had no lien or claim upon the premises. The only issue tendered to the junior mortgagee, by merely making him a party to a suit to foreclose brought by the prior mortgagee, is in the allegation that the right or claim of the junior mortgagee is subject to the lien claimed by the plaintiff in the foreclosure suit. As to any possible defense he may have to that issue so tendered, he is concluded by the decree, whether he appears in the case or not. The doctrine appealed to does not and cannot go beyond that." The question made by appellants having been thus expressly considered and decided by this court, it is not necessary to examine cases decided in other jurisdictions.

The question whether Waterman or the plaintiff is or was a redemptioner does not arise upon this record; and this remark also applies to appellants' contention that the decree in the Hochkofler foreclosure case, ordering that any surplus remaining after satisfaction of the sums due the plaintiff in that action be paid into court, is void. No issue was made as to said surplus, nor does it even appear that there was in fact a surplus, or that a sale had been made under the decree foreclosing the Hochkofler mortgage. No other questions require notice. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

P. A. BUELL & CO. v. BROWN et al.
(Sac. 709.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—CESSATION FROM WORK—NOTICE—CLAIM OF LIEN—TIME FOR FILING—EXTENSION—CONTRACT—CLAIM—VARIANCE.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, declares that the owner of a building for which materials have been furnished to be used must, within 40 days from cessation from labor thereon, file a notice stating the date when such cessation occurred, in the county recorder's office, and that neglect to file such notice shall estop the owner from maintaining the defense that liens were not filed in time; that a material man must file his lien within 30 days from the filing of notice of cessation of work by the owner; that a cessation from work for 30 days shall be deemed a completion; and that all liens must be filed within 90 days from completion. Held that, though the owner of property failed to file a notice of cessation from work within the required time, a material man's lien filed more than 120 days after cessation from work was too late.

2. Where the claim of lien made by a material man stated a contract to deliver the material at the reasonable market value, but on trial it appeared that the contract called for certain prices, the variance was fatal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by P. A. Buell & Co. against James Brown and others to foreclose a material man's lien. From a judgment in favor of defendants Louis and Jane Doe Dondero, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. F. W. Street, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This action was brought to foreclose a lien for material furnished defendant Brown, and used in the construction of a barn upon the lands of defendant Dondero and wife. Findings were filed and judgment entered for defendants Dondero. This appeal is from the judgment and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The findings are not assailed as to the facts therein determined, but the conclusions of law are challenged. It appears from the findings that between the 12th day of September and the 20th day of November, 1897, the plaintiff furnished defendant Brown mill work, lumber, and materials, amounting at the agreed price to $426.33, to be used, and which were used, in the construction of a barn upon the premises of defendants Dondero; "that said barn or structure has not been completed; that there has been a cessation of labor on said barn or structure ever since the 20th day of November, 1897, and no notice of the completion or cessation of labor was ever filed or recorded in the recorder's office of said Tuolumne county"; that on the 16th day of April, 1898, plaintiff filed and recorded its notice of lien, which stated, among other things, as part of the terms of the contract by which it is sought to charge the premises with a lien, "said claimant to deliver same [said materials, lumber, and mill work] at said property above described, in said county of Tuolumne, state of California, at the reasonable market rate therefor." The claim of lien was filed nearly five months after cessation of labor upon the barn, and the most material question in the case is as to whether or not the notice or claim of lien was filed within time.

It is provided in the Code of Civil Procedure (section 1187) that the owner of property for which materials have been furnished to be used in the construction thereof must, "within forty days after cessation from labor * * * upon any unfinished building, * * * file for record, in the office of the county recorder of the county * * * in which the property, or some part thereof, is situated, a notice setting forth the date when * * * such cessation actually occurred. * * * In case any such owner neglect to file said notice as herein required, within the time herein required, then the said owner * * * shall be estopped, in any proceedings brought to foreclose any mechanic's lien or liens provided for in this chapter, from maintaining a defense therein based on the ground that said lien or liens have not been filed within the time provided in this chapter. Every person, save the original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, at any time after the completion of any building * * * and until the expiration of thirty days after the filing of said notice * * * of cessation by said owner, * * * must file for record with the county recorder of the county * * * a claim * * * which claim must be verified by the oath of himself or some other person: provided, however, that in any event all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of said building, * * * and in all cases * * * cessation from labor for thirty days upon * * * any building * * * shall be deemed equivalent to a completion thereof for all the purposes of this chapter." The court found that labor ceased upon said building November 20, 1897, and 30 days thereafter, to wit, December 20, 1897, the building was deemed completed for the purpose of filing liens by all lien claimants. Ninety days were thereafter allowed in which to file and record the claim of lien, and the claim, not having been filed within the 90 days, was too late. It is claimed that the effect of the failure of the owner to file and record the notice of cessation of labor was to indefinitely postpone the time within which the claim of lien could be filed. We do not so construe the section. After stating that the owner failing to give notice shall be estopped from maintaining a defense on the ground that the lien was not filed within the time provided for in the chapter, it is expressly provided "that in any event all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of said building." The statute then provides what is equivalent to and shall be deemed completion. The proviso should be read in connection with and as a part of the sentence in regard to the owner being estopped to claim that the lien was not filed in time. This construction gives effect to, and makes all parts of the section consistent. It enlarges the time of 30 days, formerly given the material man in which to file his claim of lien, and gives him 30 days after the filing of notice of cessation of labor by the owner, or, in case the owner does not file such notice, then 120 days after such cessation from labor. The construction contended for by plaintiff would prolong the time in which a claim of lien could be filed for years, in case the owner failed to file and record the notice. Such could not have been the intention of the legislature. It is said the owner could give the notice, and thus prevent the time being so extended. In reply it may be said that the material man can file his claim of lien and commence his suit, and thus prevent the bar of the statute. He is the one seeking to collect his claim, and not only seeking to collect it, but seeking to collect it, by force of the statute, from one who never agreed to pay it. The material man in this case did not sell the materials to the owners of the land, but to Brown, who was building the barn. He could charge the lot belonging to the Donderos, not for anything sold to them, or by virtue of any contract with them, but by reason of the statute alone. To charge their property by virtue of the statute, it was necessary for him to comply with the mandates thereof. We are not required to give a strained construction to the statute in order to enable plaintiff to collect its debt from parties who never agreed to pay it, and who never requested the delivery of the materials. The court found that the claim of lien set forth a contract to deliver the materials at the reasonable market rates, but that the contract was an express one, to wit, $26.50 per 1,000 for lumber and $2.50 per 1,000 for shingles. This was a fatal variance, and prevents a recovery by plaintiff. Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 283, 57 Pac. 1008, and cases cited.

Plaintiff claims that the court failed to find as to whether or not the owners, within three days after knowledge that the barn was being constructed, gave notice that they would not be responsible for the same, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1192. There was no such issue made by the pleadings, and, if there had been, such finding would not be material, in view of what has been said as to the other points. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

GIBBS v. TALLY et al. (L. A. 746.)¹

MECHANICS' LIENS — BONDS — FAILURE TO TAKE — MEASURE OF DAMAGES — PAYMENT — BURDEN OF PROOF — ASSIGNABLE CLAIM.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, requiring a bond, in case of a building contract, it by its terms to inure to the benefit of persons performing labor and furnishing materials for the contractor, one given to "T. [the owner], legal representatives or assignees," and not in terms inuring to the benefit of any one else, is insufficient.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, requiring a bond, in case of a building contract, in an amount equal to at least 25 per cent. of the contract price, inuring to the benefit of persons performing labor and furnishing materials for the contractor, and providing as limit of damages, in case of a bond, the value of labor and materials furnished, not exceeding the amount of the bond, and declaring that any failure to comply with the provisions of the section shall render the owner and contractor liable to material men and laborers entitled to liens on the property, the measure of damages, in the absence of a bond, is the amount of the claim for labor or material, not exceeding 25 per cent. of the contract price.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, giving action for damages "to any and all material men, laborers and subcontractors entitled to a lien," if bond is not filed where there is a building contract, the claimant who sues first and obtains judgment is entitled to recover up to the limit of the owner's liability, unless other claimants intervene, or, having brought actions, have them consolidated with his.

4. Though a material man, suing the owner of a building for failure to have a bond of the contractor filed, alleges nonpayment of the claim for materials furnished, it is enough for him to prove the debt, and defendant has the burden of proving payment.

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, giving action for damages to a laborer or material man against the owner of the property who, in case of a contract to build thereon, does not take a bond for their benefit, and providing that action on the bond, if one is taken, shall not affect the laborer's lien nor any action to foreclose it, except that there shall be but one satisfaction of the claim, action for failure to take bond is not affected by the bringing of an action to foreclose the lien.

6. A claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, for damages by a laborer against the owner of property who, in case of contract to build thereon, does not take a bond from the contractor, is within Civ. Code, § 1458, declaring "a right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due, and may be transferred as such."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by William H. Gibbs against Mary A. Tally and another. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Clarence A. Miller, for appellants. T. M. Stewart, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover damages from the owner of a building for failure to comply with section 1203, Code Civ. Proc., relating to liens of mechanics and others. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendants appeal on the judgment roll, including a short bill of exceptions.

1. Appellants challenge the constitutionality of the above section of the Code. The question has been recently decided here adversely to appellants' contention. Carpenter v. Furrey (Cal.) 61 Pac. 369.

2. Appellants contend that a sufficient bond was filed. A bond did in fact accompany the contract, and was filed with it. This bond was signed by the contractor, Parsons, and by two sureties, but it was given to the owner of the property being improved, "Mrs. Mary A. Tally, legal representatives or assigns," and was "not by its terms made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor or furnish materials to the contractor, or any person acting for him or by his authority," as the statute requires. The bond was not such a one as the law prescribes, and was not available to any one except the owner, to whom it was given, and the result, so far as any laborer or material man is concerned, was the same as if no bond at all had been filed. Under section 1203, as it stood when first enacted (St. 1885, p. 147), the bond would have been available to laborers and material men as well as to the owner, but the section was repealed by Act March 15, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 152), and there was no provision of the Code on the subject until the new section was enacted in 1893 as we now have it (St. 1893, p. 202). Plaintiff could not sue the sureties on this bond, for they are liable only so far as they are bound by the terms of the bond, and the bond does not make them liable to any one but the owner, her representatives and assigns. It must follow that there was no such bond as is required by the Code.

3. It is claimed that, if it be conceded that the bond does not comply with the statute, the action cannot be maintained because of the uncertainty as to what is the measure of damages in such a case. When a bond is filed, the section provides that "any person shall have an action to recover upon said bond, against the principal and sureties, or either of them, for the value of such labor or materials, or both, not exceeding the amount of the bond," etc. After providing as to filing a bond and its terms, etc., the statute reads as follows: "Any failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall render the owner and contractor jointly and severally liable in damages to any and all material-men, laborers and sub-contractors entitled to liens upon the property affected by said contract."

The statute is plain enough as to the limit of damages where a bond is filed, but is not so plain where it is not filed. It is manifest, however, that the legislature intended that some damages should be recoverable, and the only question is, how much? It would seem reasonable that the damages should not exceed what would be allowed on the bond if filed, namely, 25 per cent. of the contract price, and to this extent, at least, we think the section will sustain the action. The judgment was less than 25 per cent. of the contract price. But appellants claim that it appeared from the findings that there were unpaid claims other than those set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and that it was error to give judgment for plaintiff without proring with the other claimants. The statute gives the action "to any and all material-men, laborers and sub-contractors entitled to liens." Plaintiff was not bound to bring the action for the benefit of all unpaid claimants. The right of action is several, and the claimant who first sues and obtains judgment is entitled to recover up to the limit of the owner's liability. Possibly other unpaid claimants might intervene and ask to share in the recovery, where the unpaid claims exceed the amount for which the owner is liable. Possibly, too, where several different actions have been begun against the owner under section 1203, these actions might be consolidated in order to give to each claimant his proportionate share of the amount for which the owner is liable. But in the absence of any such situation, brought about by other unpaid lienholders, we see no reason why plaintiff should suffer any diminution of his judgment.

4. Finding 8 is to the effect that Parsons, the contractor, has not paid any part of the judgments mentioned in the complaint, nor any of the claims sued on, and that no part of either of said claims has been paid. Appellants challenge this finding as unsupported by the evidence. Plaintiff sues as assignee of seven different claims of as many different claimants, whose liens had been foreclosed and had gone to judgment, and also on a claim personal to himself, which had also gone to judgment. As to each of these claims plaintiff alleged that the contractor, Parsons, "has not, nor has any other person, paid any part of said judgment," except a certain sum stated in the complaint in each instance. The answer denies nonpayment, and alleges payment in full of each and all said claims. The only evidence of nonpayment was the testimony of Parsons, the contractor, who testified that he had not paid any of the claims, and that he had no property out of which payment could have been made, and that he cannot now pay any of the claims. Appellants contend that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to prove nonpayment. Even if that were the law, as has been intimated in a few cases, a sufficient prima facie case of nonpayment was shown. But in Melone v. Ruffino, 62 Pac. 93, this court reviewed the authorities in this state on the subject, and showed that the rule here is the same as at common law, and that, "where a plaintiff has proved the existence of a debt,—at least, within the period of statutory limitation,—the burden of proving payment is on the defendant"; and that, although an averment of nonpayment is necessary to make the complaint perfect, yet "a negative allegation is to be proved only when it constitutes a part of the original substantive cause of action upon which the plaintiff relies,"—as in cases, for instance, of malicious prosecution, and where the cause of action is the alleged failure of the defendant to do work in a workmanlike manner.

5. Appellants contend that the several claims set out in the complaint were merged in the judgment against the contractor, Parsons, in the suit for the foreclosure of the liens, and that, the lienholders having elected to obtain and accept judgment against him for their claims, they are bound by their election. The pursuit of the remedy of foreclosure given by the statute, in which a money judgment may be taken against the contractor, and a judgment of foreclosure against the owner, will not operate as an extinguishment by merger of the remedy or right of action given under section 1203. It is expressly provided in the section that the action on the bond referred to "shall not affect his [the laborer's] lien nor any action to foreclose the same, except that there shall be but one satisfaction of his claim," etc. We think the converse would be true, that the action for a failure to comply with the section is not affected by bringing the action to foreclose.

6. The judgment includes five assigned claims which were embraced in the foreclosure suit, and it is now contended that they are not assignable, and should not have been included in the judgment. Section 1203, supra, creates an obligation to enforce which is the purpose of this action. It is such an obligation as is assignable under section 954, Civ. Code. "A right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due, and may be transferred as such." Id. § 1458.

7. Among the claims on which plaintiff sued as assignee was that of one Ware, a subcontractor, for $182.65; and another of the Los Angeles Lime Company, for $30.50, for supplies furnished to said Ware as subcontractor. Plaintiff failed to prove an assignment of the lime company's claim. It appeared that the lime company furnished the material constituting its claim to Ware, and his claim when assigned to plaintiff, and as it figured in the judgment in this action, included the lime company's claim. It is true, as contended by plaintiff, that Ware's claim as subcontractor is distinct from the lime company's claim as a material man, and under some circumstances Ware's claim might be considered independent of the lime company's claim, and judgment be given for it, while defendants would still be liable to the lime company, and thus might possibly be made to pay the same claim twice should the limit of their liability not be otherwise reached. But here plaintiff shows that Ware's claim is made up in part of the lime company's claim, and the complaint alleges, although not sustained by the proof, that the lime company had assigned its claim to plaintiff. It was admitted at the trial that any payments made to the lime company should be credited upon the claim of Ware. It seems to us, in view of the pleadings and the admissions, defendants should not be subjected to the possibility of being called upon twice to pay the lime-company claim. Plaintiff concedes that if it is included in the Ware claim this may happen. In view of all the facts, it seems to us more consonant with justice, as well as in keeping also with the theory on which plaintiff brought action, to disallow this item, and reduce his judgment accordingly. The total judgment, including the lime-company claim, is for $442.75. The judgment should be modified by reducing it $30.50, and as thus reduced should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified by reducing it $30.50, and as thus reduced is affirmed.

ENOS et al. v. SNYDER et al. (S. F. 1,613).¹

DEAD BODIES—RIGHT TO BURY—WILLS.

1. One has no property in his dead body, so that he can dispose of it by will.

2. In the absence of statute, the custody of the corpse and the right of burial belong to the next of kin, and not to the executor or administrator.

3. Pen. Code, § 292, declaring on whom devolves the duty of burying the body of a deceased person, is to be considered in a civil case as determining who has the right to bury the body, and to have the possession thereof for that purpose.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; Albert G. Burnett, Judge.

Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lippitt & Lippitt (Myrick & Deering, of counsel), for appellants. Haven & Haven, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. John S. Enos died in Sonoma county on March 30, 1898. The plaintiff Susie T. Enos is his surviving wife, and the plaintiff Gertrude Willis is his daughter. For several years next before his death the deceased had not lived with his wife, but during that time lived at the residence of the defendant Rachel Jane Snyder, where he died. He left a will which contained a direction that the manner, time, and place of his burial should be "according to the wishes and directions of Mrs. R. J. Snyder," the said defendant. After his death the plaintiffs herein made demand of defendant Snyder for possession of his body for the purpose of burying the same, and the demand was refused. Thereupon this action was commenced against Mrs. Snyder for a judgment declaring that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of the dead body of the deceased for the purpose of burial, enjoining defendant from proceeding with the burial of said body, and directing her to give to plaintiffs the possession thereof. Defendant Snyder answered, setting up the clause in the will above referred to, and also verbal statements to the same effect made by the deceased before his death. Afterwards E. S. Lippitt, the executor named in the will, was, on his own application, made a party defendant, and he filed an answer averring substantially the things set up in the answer of defendant Snyder. Demurrers to both answers were sustained, and judgment was entered for plaintiffs substantially as prayed for in the complaint. From this judgment, defendants appeal.

It is admitted that the record presents the sole question involved in the case, namely, under the law of this state, did the respondents, as next of kin, have the right to the possession of the body of the deceased for the purpose of burying it, as against the appellants, who claim that right under the will? The general English and American authorities on the subject are not very satisfactory,—at least, as to a contest, like the one here involved, between the next of kin and persons claiming under a will. It is quite well established, however, by those authorities, that, in the absence of statutory provisions, there is no property in a dead body; that it is not part of the estate of the deceased person; and that a man cannot by will dispose of that which after his death will be his corpse. There are some expressions in some of the authorities cited by appellants to the effect that the right of burial is in the next of kin, "in the absence of any testamentary disposition," but they were not cases in which the right of testamentary disposition was involved. The case which is most directly in point here is Williams v. Williams, 20 Ch. Div. 659. It is a recent case (1882), and expresses the law of England on the subject. In that case the deceased had, by his will, directed that after his death "his body should be given to his friend Eliza Williams, to be dealt with by her in such manner as he had directed to be done in a private letter to her." The body, however, was buried in a certain cemetery "by the direction of his widow and one of his sons"; but afterwards Eliza Williams succeeded in removing it from the cemetery, and, having disposed of it in accordance with the direction of the will, she brought the action against the executors to recover the amount of the expenses which she had incurred in so doing. Kay, J., in his opinion, after referring to certain cases, says: "It follows that a man cannot by will dispose of his dead body. If there be no property in a dead body, it is impossible that by will or any other instrument the body can be disposed of. I asked for any authority in conflict with these cases, but none was produced. I have referred to the books of the greatest authority on the question, and I believe there is no authority in the least degree in conflict with these cases. It follows that the direction in this codicil to the executors to deliver over the body to Miss Williams, who is not one of the executors, is a direction which, in point of law, could not be enforced, and was void." The current of American authorities, although there is some conflict, is to the same effect. Griffith v. Railroad Co., 23 S. C. 25, 55 Am. Rep. 1, and cases there cited; in re Wong Yung Quy, 6 Sawy. 449, 2 Fed. 624; Guthrie v. Weaver, 1 Mo. App. 136. In O'Donnell v. Slack, 123 Cal. 285, 55 Pac. 906, 43 L. R. A. 388, the point was not involved. But as some one must, of necessity, bury the dead, and must have the temporary possession of the dead body for that purpose, in the few cases where there has been any question on the subject equity has been invoked, and courts of equity have assumed jurisdiction and have given the necessary remedies; and it has been generally declared that the right of burial of a deceased wife or husband belongs to the surviving spouse, and in other cases to the next of kin, being present and having the ability to perform the service. Durell v. Hayward, 9 Gray, 249; Fox v. Gordon, 16 Phila. 185; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370; Foley v. Phelps, 1 App. Div. 551, 37 N. Y. Supp. 471; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. St. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506; in re Widening Beekman St., 4 Bradf. Sur. 503.

The appellant Lippitt in his answer bases his alleged right on the directions given by the deceased in his will and verbally, and not upon his authority as executor, independent of such directions, and the arguments of counsel for appellants rest mainly on that basis; but there is in their briefs some shadow of contention that an executor or administrator has, by mere virtue of his office, the right to bury the body, and to the possession of it for that purpose. There are expressions to that effect in the English books and particularly in the older ones, and they may also be found in some American authorities, but the current of American authorities is the other way. Those expressions are found generally in cases where there was no contest between executors and next of kin, as in Williams v. Williams, supra, where the body had been buried by the executors by the direction of the next of kin. Of course, it is generally provided by statute, as in this state by section 1643, Code Civ. Proc., that executors or administrators must pay "funeral expenses"; but it has certainly been the custom in this country for the next of kin, and not the executor or administrator, to have the custody of the dead body before the funeral, and to bury it. Indeed, under our probate system, it cannot be determined who the executor or administrator is until after the appropriate time for the funeral has elapsed, and the burial of the dead body is not to be found in the statutory enumeration of the rights and duties of executors and administrators. In 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 837, it is said in the text as follows: "In England it has been held that an executor has the right to the custody and possession of the body of his decedent until it is properly buried, but this doctrine has no support in the United States." And the cases cited support the text. In Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 25 N. E. 822, 9 L. R. A. 514, 21 Am. St. Rep. 249, the court, after an elaborate discussion of the subject and review of the authorities, say: "Our conclusion is that the custody of the corpse and the right of burial do not belong to the executor or administrator, but to the next of kin, and that the courts of this state possess the power to protect such next of kin in the exercise of such rights."

We have considered the subject as presented in the general authorities because appellants contend that there are no statutory provisions here which are determinative of the question involved, but we think that our statutory law does definitely settle the question against appellants' contention. Section 292 of the Penal Code provides that "the duty of burying the body of the deceased person devolves upon the person hereinafter mentioned." Then follow four subdivisions of the section. Subdivision 1 provides that in the case of the death of a married woman the duty of burial devolves on the husband, and subdivision 2 is as follows: "If the deceased was not a married woman, but left any kindred, the duty of burial devolves upon the person or persons in the same degree nearest of kin to the deceased, being of adult age and within this state, and possessed of sufficient means to defray the necessary expenses." And section 294 provides that "the person charged by law with the duty of burying the body of a deceased person is entitled to the custody of such body for the purposes of burying it." It is also provided in another section that, if the person upon whom the duty of burial is imposed neglects to perform it in a reasonable time, he is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is also liable in a civil action to the person who does perform it in treble the expense incurred. These provisions are very clear and explicit, but appellants contend that they should not be considered in a civil action, because they are in the Penal Code. This position is not tenable. We have here a Code system which is, for convenience and partial classification, divided into four Codes, to each of which a name is given; but they are inseparably interwoven with each other, and no one of them is complete in itself, or absolutely confined to a particular subject. Therefore clear enactments of substantive law establishing rights, like section 294, are not to be held inoperative because found in any particular Code. If the provision in one Code were in conflict with a provision on the same subject in another Code, perhaps a consideration of the general purpose of each of the Codes might afford some aid in solving the difficulty; but there is no such difficulty here, for there is no provision in any of the other Codes touching the question here involved. The fact that a penalty for not burying a dead body is also imposed upon the one whose duty it is to bury it does not affect the right of custody which the law gives. If the duty and the right had been declared in some other Code, and the Penal Code had merely provided the penalty, there would be, we suppose, no objection to the appropriateness of the legislation; but there is no reason in law why any part of this legislation is invalid because found in the Penal Code instead of one of the others. It would hardly be contended that the provision about liability in a "civil action" is inoperative because found in the Penal Code. The subject is one peculiarly appropriate for legislative direction, and it may be assumed that the legislature has looked upon the provisions of the Code above cited as sufficiently expressive of the legislative intent. The judgment is affirmed.

TULARE SAV. BANK et al. v. TALBOT
et al. (Sac. 616.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1900.)
CORPORATIONS—LIABILITY ON STOCK—OVER-ISSUE—SUBSCRIPTION—RELEASE—CON-TRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

1. Where persons take stock of a corporation from it, pay value therefor, and act in all respect as stockholders during the time debts of the corporation are contracted, it is immaterial, on the question of their liability to creditors for any balance due on the par value of the stock, whether they were original subscribers or not.

2. There is not an overissue of stock where there was to be 500 shares of stock, and no more than this was issued, though when the articles of incorporation were drawn, all the stock subscription lists not being at hand, L., the organizer, put himself down in the articles for 183 shares, to make up the full total of 500, he in so doing regarding himself as the agent of the subscribers whose names were not at hand, and the sum of the subscription lists and the amounts set down in the articles exceeded 500 shares, the shares being issued to such subscribers from the amount put down to L., with the acquiescence of him and all the other stockholders.

3. Release of a subscription for stock may be proved as well by the acquiescence of the stockholders, and the fact that the corporation did not regard it as binding, as by the records.

4. In case of ambiguity, an agreement of one taking stock from a corporation to pay $1 per month, for 34 months, will be held merely to be an arrangement to avoid necessity for calls and assessment, rather than a sale for less than par; the directors not being shown to have authority to so sell.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Action by the Tulare Savings Bank and others against A. P. Talbot and others. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Jordan and E. T. Cosper, for appellants. C. L. Russell, W. B. Wallace, Richards & Carrier, R. M. F. Soto, Oliver Ellsworth, Hendrickson & Tam, G. W. Zartman, and E. M. Morgan, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs and interveners, judgment creditors of the Packwood Vineyard & Fruit Company, an insolvent corporation, to compel payment by the stockholders of that corporation of the unpaid portion of their stock. The defendants Pope, Talbot, and Fagan appeal from the judgment given against them, and in support of their appeal Talbot and Pope urge that they were not original subscribers to the stock of the corporation, that they purchased their stock from the corporation under written contract and at the agreed price of $53 per share, which they had fully paid, and that this purchase was made with the full knowledge of most of the plaintiffs and interveners, who after that knowledge gave credit to the corporation. They contend still further that plaintiffs and interveners, having elected to treat them as original subscribers, must be refused any relief in this action upon a showing that they were not such; and, finally, they insist that the stock which they purchased was an illegal and void overissue, wherefor they are not liable.

The position of the appellant Fagan differs from that of Pope and Talbot only in this: He admits that he was an original subscriber to shares of stock of the corporation to be formed, but asserts that the full 500 shares of the stock of the corporation was taken before the amount for which he had subscribed was issued to him, and therefore his stock was an overissue and void.

R. Linder was the owner of a tract of land in Tulare county. He conceived the idea of forming a corporation, and selling to it his land, which was to be planted with trees and vines. In furtherance of his idea, he sought subscriptions to the capital stock of the prospective corporation. This capital stock was to be divided into 500 shares, of the par value of $200 per share. Several subscription papers were circulated, and to them signatures obtained. The corporation was then organized, and in the articles of incorporation the names of Pope and Talbot were inserted for 40 shares each, and Linder was put down as the owner of 183 shares. Pope's and Talbot's names likewise appeared upon one of the subscription papers. Much discussion is devoted to the question whether or not the names of Pope and Talbot were thus placed upon the subscription list and in the articles of incorporation by their authority; but we think, in the light of what was actually done, the determination of this question becomes immaterial; for it is unquestionably true that Pope and Talbot and Fagan took the stock of the corporation, paid value for it, and acted in all respects as stockholders, before and during the time the debts of the corporation to plaintiffs and interveners came into existence. If, then, these appellants were bona fide stockholders and holders of bona fide stock, it would be immaterial whether they be considered as original subscribers or not. Under section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiffs were entitled to any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint, and embraced within the issues. The averments in the complaint are broad enough to justify a recovery against the defendants as holders of the stock, whether they be original subscribers thereto or not.

The contention that the stock of these appellants was an overissue, and therefore void, is based rather upon figures than upon facts; for in truth there was never issued by the corporation a single share more than the 500 authorized by its articles of incorporation. The argument of appellants here is that the aggregate subscription lists showed more than 500 shares; that Linder, in the articles of incorporation, was down for 183 shares; that the subscribers and incorporators acquired rights to this stock of which they could not be deprived without their consent, and without the unanimous consent of the stockholders; and that, casting up the totals of the subscription lists and the amounts set down in the articles of incorporation, the result is a sum far exceeding 500 shares. The facts appear to be that at the time the articles of incorporation were drawn all the subscription lists were not at hand, and that Linder, the organizer and promoter of the corporation, put his name down for 183 shares to make up the full total of 500. In so doing he constituted and regarded himself as the self-appointed agent of other subscribers whose names were not at hand, and the fact is that no subscriber was refused the amount of stock which he demanded, but such stock was issued to him directly by the corporation, it being taken in some instances from the amount of Linder's 183 shares. In this there was complete acquiescence upon the part of Linder and the other stockholders. While it is true that a contract of subscription may be modified or annulled only by the unanimous consent of the stockholders, or by the board of directors duly authorized thereto (Fruit Co. v. Coon, 107 Cal. 452, 40 Pac. 542), such release may be proved not only by the records, but as well by the acquiescence of the stockholders of the corporation, and by the fact that the corporation itself did not regard it as binding. Stuart v. Railroad Co., 32 Grat 146; Cook, Stocks & S. § 169. Nor is any formal assignment necessary to substitute one stockholder for another. Weinman v. Railway Co. (Pa. Sup.) 12 Atl. 288. There is not the slightest suggestion that Linder was acting or attempting to act in fraud of the rights of any one. Before the organization of the corporation, Pope and Talbot had agreed to take stock in it. The amount had not been definitely decided upon. The stock subsequently taken by Pope and Talbot concluded the agreement, and in this subscription for 183 shares Linder may be regarded as having acted as their agent, as well as the agent of others to whom the stock was afterwards issued. Water Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 79, 35 Pac. 349; Burr v. Wilcox, 22 N. Y. 551; Terwilliger v. Telegraph Co., 59 Ill. 249; Bates v. Telegraph Co., 134 Ill. 536, 25 N. E. 521.

Coming to consider the further contention of appellants that Pope and Talbot were not original subscribers to the stock, but purchased directly from the corporation at an agreed price of $56 per share, evidenced by a written contract with the corporation, and that Fagan, though an original subscriber, stands in the same position in this regard as do Pope and Talbot, by reason of the fact that his contract of original subscription was waived by the corporation, which entered into a contract identical in its terms with that of Pope and Talbot, the facts bearing upon this contention are the following: At the time of the issuance of the stock, Pope, Talbot, Fagan, and all the other stockholders as well, signed upon the stub of the certificate book of the corporation a receipt for their stock, acknowledging that it was taken subject to the provisions and conditions of the by-laws, and continuing: "I hereby agree and contract to pay to the corporation on the 15th day of February next the sum of one dollar per share of said stock, and thereafter a like sum on the 15th day of each and every month, for thirty-four months." It is insisted by appellants that this was their contract, and their only contract, with the corporation; that they were to pay and did pay originally $20 per share for their stock; and that the 34 monthly payments, of $1 for each share, were the total amount of the purchase price. It would unduly prolong this discussion to detail at length the evidence supporting the conclusion of the trial court that this receipt and agreement was not a contract of purchase between the corporation and the stockholders. It was merely an agreement, not unusual in such corporations, by which the stockholder stipulated to pay to the corporation a certain monthly amount to defray the operating expenses, until such time as it was estimated it would be self-supporting. It was designed to relieve, and was a convenient method of relieving, the corporation from the necessity of making calls and assessments upon the stock. West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 19, 21 Pac. 1123; Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 14, 33 Pac. 741; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203. Moreover, no authority on the part of the directors of the corporation to sell the stock for less than par is anywhere shown, and, if it should be conceded that the contract in question is ambiguous, in the absence of evidence of authority it would not be presumed that the construction contended for by the appellants was the true one. As the contract in question, therefore, is not to be construed as a contract of purchase between the corporation and the stockholder, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the plaintiffs and interveners were charged with knowledge of its character. We can perceive no just ground for complaint that the findings are erroneous and conflicting. As has been said, even conceding that Pope and Talbot are not original subscribers, they were still owners and holders of the stock under circumstances entitling these plaintiffs and interveners to the relief prayed for. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

LA SOCIETA ITALIANA DI MUTUA BENEFICENZA v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 1,701.)¹

PUBLIC CEMETERY—GRANT TO PRIVATE CORPORATION—POWER OF SUPERVISORS—BURIAL PERMITS.

1. San Francisco city ordinance, known as "Order 800," which was ratified by the legislature (St. 1867-68, p. 379), provided that a certain tract of land set aside as a cemetery should be deemed absolutely dedicated as such. Udd, that a grant of a portion of such cemetery to the plaintiff, which is an incorporated beneficial association, to be used for cemetery purposes, is not within the power of the supervisors, even though plaintiff cared for certain persons who would otherwise be a public charge.

2. The grant was not rendered valid by the fact that the plaintiff gave a bond to secure the erection of fences and other improvements on the portion of the cemetery granted to it.

and did erect such improvements, as it was bound to know that the supervisors had no power to make such disposition of the land.

3. Pol. Code, § 3035, making it the duty of the health officers of a city to issue a burial permit on receipt of a certificate of the cause of death, does not render an ordinance invalid which prohibits an interment in a certain cemetery as being detrimental to public health, since such statute does not authorize a permit to inter a body in a place prohibited by lawful authority.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Suit by La Società Italiana di Mutua Beneficenza, a corporation, against the city and county of San Francisco and others. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James A. Devoto and Devoto & De Martini, for appellant. G. W. McEnerney and Jas. L. Gallagher, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained, and judgment thereon entered against the plaintiff, who appeals from said judgment. The other defendants are the mayor, the board of supervisors, the board of health, and the individuals composing said boards, and the health officer of the city and county of San Francisco; and the principal question involved is the validity of an ordinance of said city passed by the board of supervisors in June, 1897, and approved by the mayor, and which, with the preamble, is as follows: "Whereas, the burial of the dead within the City Cemetery is dangerous to life and detrimental to public health, therefore the people of the city and county of San Francisco do ordain as follows: Burials within the City Cemetery Prohibited. Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, association or corporation from and after the first day of January, 1898, to bury or inter, or cause to be buried or interred, the dead body of any person in the City Cemetery of the city and county of San Francisco." The second section declared a violation of this order to be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both fine and imprisonment. The time when this ordinance should take effect was afterwards extended to March 1, 1898.

Briefly stated, the complaint alleges the following facts: That plaintiff is an incorporated benevolent society having for one of its purposes the maintenance and care of the sick who are members of the corporation; that since its incorporation, in the year 1867, a large number of deaths have occurred among its members; that of the members so dying a number, averaging about 25 per year, were poor, and their bodies, by reason of their membership or for other reasons, are cared for and by the plaintiff at its expense; that in January, 1879, the said city and county, being the owner of a tract of land designated on the official map of said city and county as the "Golden Gate Cemetery," adopted a resolution (No. 13,244, New Series), and thereby granted to the plaintiff blocks numbered 9 to 21, inclusive,—part of said Golden Gate Cemetery,—for burial purposes, "on condition that plaintiff should construct and maintain such walls or fences and make such improvements as might thereafter be designated or required by said board of supervisors on and around the lots so granted as aforesaid"; that plaintiff accepted the said grant and said conditions; that by a subsequent resolution (No. 13,479), adopted in 1879, plaintiff was required to enter into an agreement whereby it undertook, in the sum of $500, with two good and sufficient sureties, to perform all the requirements of said first-named resolution, and particularly to construct and maintain said walls or fences and to make such improvements as might be required by said board, and also that plaintiff should pay its pro rata assessment for the improvement of the avenues of said Golden Gate Cemetery; that plaintiff has performed all of said conditions, and has used said land for said burial purposes, and has expended a large amount of money in making said improvements, aggregating not less than $2,000; and that the Golden Gate Cemetery is now known as the "City Cemetery," and is so designated in said ordinance. The prayer is for the annulment of said ordinance, that plaintiff's title be quieted, for an injunction, and other relief.

Appellant contends (1) that said resolution of the board of supervisors was a grant of said lands to the plaintiff; (2) that, even though it be not a grant, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded; and (3) that said ordinance is in conflict with general laws.

Neither of these contentions can be sustained. The tract of land containing 200 acres, and designated originally as the "Golden Gate Cemetery," and afterwards known as the "City Cemetery," included the lands here in controversy, and the whole tract of 200 acres is a portion of the land referred to in the act of congress of March 8, 1866 (14 Stat. 4). After the passage of this act, the supervisors passed an ordinance known as "Order 800," which was ratified by the legislature by an act approved March 27, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 379). By the first section of this ordinance, the board of supervisors were authorized and directed to devise and adopt a plan for the subdivision of the outside lands referred to in said act of congress into blocks and lots, "and to select and set apart for public uses such lots and portions of said land as said board may deem necessary." The second section of said ordinance provided that after the adoption of the plan the board of supervisors should cause a map of the lands to be made according to this plan, "and upon said map shall be designated the lots and portions of land set apart for public uses, and the particular use for which each lot or portion of land shall have been set apart." Section 6 of said ordinance further provided that "the tract or portion of land set apart and designated thereon as a cemetery, and lots for a hospital, * * * shall be deemed absolutely dedicated as such." The alleged grant to the plaintiff was made by ordinance in 1879, and, though not set out in full in the complaint, it may be conceded that it was sufficient in form to vest in the plaintiff the rights and privileges contended for, but the board of supervisors had no power to make the grant.

That the city held said cemetery lands in trust for public uses as a cemetery cannot be questioned, and it is equally clear that the plaintiff is a private corporation, and that a grant to its use is not a grant to a public use, even though the corporation uses it only for burial purposes. The fact that some of its members are buried at the expense of the corporation, who, if they were not members of the corporation, would be buried at the expense of the city, does not affect the question. The grant and use, each, were for and to the corporation. The cases of California Academy of Sciences v. City and County of San Francisco, 107 Cal. 334, 40 Pac. 426, and Home for the Care of the Inebriate v. Same, 119 Cal. 534, 51 Pac. 95, are in point, and conclusive of this case, unless appellant's second or third point makes those cases inapplicable.

Appellant's second contention is based upon the fact that a contract was entered into and a bond executed to secure the erection of walls or fences and other improvements on the lands described in the complaint. It is sufficient to say in reply that the board of supervisors had no power to devote the land to any other than public uses, and the plaintiff was bound to know that they had no such power. The city and county cannot be bound by the unauthorized acts of its agents. In Hoadley v. City and County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 275, it was said of the property there in controversy: "It was granted to the city for public use, and is held for that purpose only. It cannot be conveyed to private persons, and is effectually withdrawn from commerce; and, the city having no authority to convey the title, private persons are virtually precluded from acquiring it;" and private corporations are in the same category. The case above cited was approved in Sawyer v. City and County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 375, and in Hoadley v. Same, 70 Cal. 320, 12 Pac. 125, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the United States, upon writ of error, in 124 U. S. 646, 8 Sup. Ct. 659, 31 L. Ed. 553. See, also, City and County of San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 59, 22 Pac. 74.

Lastly, it is said that this ordinance is in conflict with general laws. It is alleged in the complaint that the board of health of said city, in December, 1897, passed an order providing that, in compliance with said ordinance, no burials should be permitted in said City Cemetery from and after the time specified by the board of supervisors. Appellant's contention is not very clear, but as we understand counsel that, under section 3035 of the Political Code, the health officer must obtain a certificate of the cause of death, and that upon receiving it it is his duty to issue a permit for the interment. Undoubtedly that is true; but it does not follow that the health officer may grant a permit for interment in a place prohibited by the lawful authority of the city. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SMITH, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

LAWRENCE v. JOHNSON et al. (L. A. 758.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1900.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY—REVIEW.

1. A finding in foreclosure that a cross complainant was not the owner of the mortgage, and had no interest therein, is insufficient, where his cross complaint averred that the mortgage was assigned to him as security for a loan, since the first part of the finding does not negative the fact that the mortgage had been assigned as security, and the latter part is only a conclusion of law therefrom.

2. A finding in foreclosure that there was due a cross complainant a certain sum on a note described in his cross complaint is insufficient, where the facts on which it is based do not appear, as it is merely a conclusion of law.

3. A finding in foreclosure that the allegations of a cross complaint were true is insufficient to establish ownership of the note, where such cross complaint contained no allegation as to ownership.

4. A finding in foreclosure that a cross complainant was not the owner of the mortgage is not supported by the evidence, where there was evidence that the mortgage was assigned to him as security for a loan.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by George W. Lawrence against Isaac Johnson and others. Defendants the Imperial Savings & Loan Society and Henry S. Baldwin by cross complaint sought to foreclose a subsequent mortgage on the same premises executed by defendants Johnson. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and in favor of defendant the Imperial Savings & Loan Society, Henry S. Baldwin appeals. Judgment as to plaintiff affirmed, and the judgment in favor of said defendant reversed.

E. C. Bower, for appellant. F. W. Burnett, for respondents.

SMITH, C. The suit was brought to foreclose a mortgage executed to the plaintiff by the defendants Johnson May 17, 1893, for $300, etc. The defendant corporation and the defendant Baldwin filed cross complaints to foreclose a subsequent mortgage on the same premises, executed by the defendants Johnson to the former, and claimed by the latter to have been assigned to him. The mortgagors made default. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of his mortgage, and in favor of the defendant corporation for the foreclosure of the subsequent mortgage. The defendant Baldwin appeals from the judgment. The appeal is from the whole judgment, but no point is made in the brief of appellant as to the validity of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff; which, indeed, is not open to question. The appeal, therefore, involves only the conflicting claims of the defendant corporation and Baldwin to the junior mortgage. On this issue the findings and judgment are in favor of the former, but it is claimed by appellant that the findings are insufficient, and that they are in fact unsupported by the evidence. Both points, I think, must be sustained.

The cross complaint of the appellant alleges that the note and mortgage executed by the Johnsons to the respondent corporation was assigned and delivered to him by the said respondent as a pledge and security for $500 loaned by him to the corporation. There is no finding on this allegation. It is found "that the defendant * * * Baldwin is not, and never was, the owner of the said mortgage," etc., "and has no interest in or right to said mortgage, or proceeds thereof." But the first part of the finding does not negative the alleged fact that the mortgage had been assigned to him as pledge or security for a loan, and the latter part is but a conclusion of law, apparently based on the fact found. It is also found "that there is due to the Imperial Savings & Loan Society * * * from said defendants Isaac Johnson," etc., "upon the promissory note described in said cross complaint the sum of $233.50." But this also is a mere conclusion of law, and the facts upon which it is based do not appear. Hayne, New Trials & App. p. 718 et seq., § 239 et seq. Nor does the finding that the allegations of the cross complaint of the defendant corporation are true touch the issue. There is no allegation in the cross complaint as to the ownership of the note. Nor does it seem that the actual findings are sustained by the evidence, which seems to support the claim of the defendant Baldwin that the mortgage was assigned to him as pledge or security for a loan. It appears, indeed, from appellant's brief, that questions were raised as to the power of the officers of the company to make the assignment; but, as it received and retained the consideration, the objection seems to be met by the authorities cited by appellant. Main v. Casserly, 67 Cal. 127, 7 Pac. 426. At least, in the absence of a brief or oral argument on behalf of respondent, we must regard the findings as unsupported by the evidence.

Kelly v. Bradbury, 104 Cal. 237, 37 Pac. 872, and cases cited. The judgment in favor of the Imperial Savings & Loan Society should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial of the issues between it and the defendant Baldwin. The judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of his mortgage should be affirmed, both as to the defendants Johnson and the other defendants.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment in favor of the Imperial Savings & Loan Society is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial of the issues between it and the defendant Baldwin. The judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of his mortgage is affirmed, both as to the defendants Johnson and the other defendants.

STEWART v. CALIFORNIA IMP. CO. et al.
(S. F. 1,544.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1900.)
MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO THIRD PERSON—RELATION OF PARTIES.

A street-roller outfit, consisting of a roller, engine, and engineer to operate the same, was hired by a city from the defendant, the owner, for a stipulated price per day. The city's agents, the superintendent of streets and his foreman, only directed how and where the streets should be rolled, and neither of them had the control or management of the engine, which was controlled and managed by the engineer, the servant of defendant, who had selected and employed him for that special purpose, paid him his wages, and had the sole right to discharge him. Held, that defendant, and not the city, was liable for injuries to a third person, caused by the engineer's negligence in the management of the engine, since he was an employé of the defendant, and not of the city.

In bank. Judgment in department (61 Pac. 280) reversed, and that of trial court affirmed.

VAN DYKE, J. Action for personal injury. The trial was by the court without a jury. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

The court found that defendant Conger was, on the 4th day of March, 1896, employed by the defendant California Improvement Company as engineer to manage a steam roller owned by said company, and used by it in rolling and leveling streets. The said roller was then in the use of the city of Oakland; the same, with the engineer in charge, having been hired by the city of Oakland from the defendant California Improvement Company. At the time that the accident occurred the roller was being used under the direction of the superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland in rolling and leveling Twelfth street where it forms a dam at the lower end of Lake Merritt; and the court finds that at that time said Twelfth street was the only safe public highway for the passage of vehicles between the eastern and central parts of Oakland, and that the plaintiff was then driving a well-trained, steady, and reliable horse on said street. "While the defendant Conger was in charge of said engine, and standing thereon, and in control thereof, steam escaped from the engine through the safety valve in front of plaintiff's horse. It had been necessary to generate all the steam which the engine could safely carry, and the defendant Conger had wrongfully and carelessly failed and neglected to give any warning of the said letting off of steam, or that there was any danger of its escape through the safety valve, although he (the said defendant) saw the danger to the plaintiff, and had the opportunity and power to give him warning thereof; and the escaping of the steam so frightened the plaintiff's horse that it became unmanageable, and wheeled short around, and tilted over plaintiff's cart, and the plaintiff, without any fault on his part, was thrown out, and dashed violently upon the ground." The main contention on the part of the defendant company was and is that the injury to the plaintiff was not caused by its negligence, but, if it resulted from any negligence, it was upon the part of the city of Oakland. But the court below found that said defendant California Improvement Company had selected the said engineer, and his services were to be paid by said company, and said company had the right to remove him; that the relation of master and servant existed between said defendant company and the defendant Conger, and not between the city of Oakland and defendant Conger. The testimony supports the finding and conclusion of the court below that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by the negligence of the defendants, and not of the city of Oakland. Mr. Miller (at the time superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland), called as a witness on behalf of the defendants, says: "This roller was in the employ of the city of Oakland the day of this accident. It was hired from the California Improvement Company. Mr. Sherman, my foreman, had charge of the work, together with myself." On cross-examination he was asked: "Did Mr. Sherman assume to have such control over the roller as to affect the engine—affect the movements of the engine?" After an objection to such question had been overruled, the witness answered: "I think not. * * * Nothing was said in the lease of the engine to the city about discharging the engineer. I secured the engine under the authority of the board of public works. We had to have a roller, and this was the most available one. I telephoned to the office of the California Improvement Company that we would like to have their roller upon the Twelfth street dam. They replied that they would have the roller there. We said nothing about anybody to run it, or about the pay. The understanding was that the machine, with the fuel and engineer, should be supplied at so much per day." And being asked whether, as a matter of fact, the roller, while operating upon the street, was not entirely under the direction of himself or foreman, answered: "Yes, sir. We controlled to the extent of notifying what portion of the street we wanted rolled. I exercised the judgment as to when the road was rolled enough and when it was not. I did not stipulate as to any particular engineer." This is substantially the testimony in reference to the terms of the contract between the superintendent of streets and defendant California Improvement Company. The company was to furnish the roller and engineer and fuel for so much a day, and the superintendent of streets was to control the movements of the roller by directing as to what portion of the street should be rolled, and when sufficiently rolled. Neither the superintendent of streets nor his foreman presumed to direct the engineer in reference to the management of the engine in regard to the pressure of the steam, or how or when it should be applied or shut off, or in reference to the escaping of steam through the safety valve. No one not an engineer, or having some knowledge or experience in reference to the management of an engine, would assume to direct the engineer in reference to such matters. As he was the one to know, and not the superintendent of streets or his foreman, whether there was danger in the escaping of steam through the safety valve, the duty devolved upon him to give people warning in case there was such danger; and for injury resulting from negligence in this respect he, and the owner of the engine, who put him in charge of the same, would be responsible.

One who should hire a hack and driver from a carriage company, and in the use thereof should direct on what streets to drive, where to go, and when to stop, and in fact have the entire control of the movements of the carriage, would not thereby become liable for damages resulting from the negligence of the driver in the management of his team. The driver is hired by the carriage company presumably for his fitness in the line for which he is employed, the same as was the engineer in this case by the California Improvement Company. If damages accrue through his negligence or carelessness, such company is liable, and not the one who may have hired and used the carriage. In Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, the question here presented was thoroughly discussed, and in the opinion there it is said: "The relation between parties to which responsibility attaches to one for the acts or negligence of the other must be that of superior and subordinate, or, as it is generally expressed, of master and servant, in which the latter is subject to the control of the former. The responsibility is placed where the power exists. Having power to control, the superior or master is bound to exercise it to the prevention of injuries to third parties, or he will be held liable. The responsibility attaches to the superior upon the principle "Qui facit per alium facit per se." To determine the responsibility, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain whether the relation existing between the party charged and the party actually committing the injury be in fact that of superior and subordinate, or master and servant." This case was referred to in Du Pratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691, as laying down the correct rule on this subject. The court there say: "That where there is no power of selection or direction there can be no superior; and that where a man is employed to do the work with his own means, and by his own servants, he has the power of selection and direction; and he, and not the person by whom the work is primarily done, is the superior." In referring to the doctrine as laid down in Boswell v. Laird, supra, the court say: "We are entirely satisfied with it, and find no occasion to renew the discussion." In Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, the court say: "The rule of respondeat superior, as its terms imply, belongs to the relation of superior and subordinate, and is applicable to that relation wherever it exists, whether between principal and agent or master and servant, and to the subjects to which that relation extends, and is coextensive with it, and ceases when the relation itself ceases to exist." In Coyle v. Pierrepont, 37 Hun, 379, a stevedore, who was employed to unload a vessel at defendants' docks, hired from the defendants a portable engine, with an engineer to run it, for the purpose of hoisting the cargo from the vessel and lowering it upon the wharf. An employé of the stevedore was injured by the negligence of the engineer, and the court below charged the jury that the defendants, from whom the stevedore had hired the engine, with the engineer to operate it, were responsible for the negligence of such engineer. The appellate court held the instruction correct, and that the defendants were the masters of the engineer, and not the stevedore, in whose employ he was at the time in unloading the vessel. In Huff v. Ford, 126 Mass. 24, a wagon and horses and driver were hired by the city from the defendants, and the driver, while thus employed, struck one of the horses a violent blow, causing it to kick a loose shoe through a window. The decision reads: "The driver, employed and paid by the defendants, and who had entire management of the horses as to the manner of driving them, and whose duty it was to see that they were properly shod, was a servant of the defendants in so driving the horses; and for injuries to third persons by his negligence in these respects the defendants were responsible." The cases cited by appellant do not hold that in a case of this kind, where a person has not the control of the conduct of the other in the particular matter in question, he is liable for the negligence of such other. The test in all these cases is, who conducts and supervises the particular work, the doing of which, or the careless and negligent doing of which, causes the injury or damage? Here the city simply hired the use of the street roller outfit from the defendant company—to wit, the roller, engine, and the engineer to manage the same—for so much a day. The city's agent—foreman of the street superintendent—only directed or supervised how and where the street should be rolled. He did not have the control or management of the engine. This was subject entirely to the judgment of the engineer, the servant of the owner, the defendant company, who had selected and employed him for that special purpose, paid him his wages, and had the sole right to discharge him. We think the conclusion of law deduced by the court below from the facts found that the defendants are liable, and not the city of Oakland, is correct. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

McPIKE et al. v. HEATON. (S. F. 1,463.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1900.)
COVENANTS—OPERATION—INCUMBRANCES—TAX LIENS.

A covenant in a deed that the land conveyed is free from tax liens is a personal covenant of the same character as a covenant against any other incumbrances, and does not run with the land, or pass to the covenantee's assignee.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by Lillian M. McPike and others against Warren D. Heaton. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Warren Heaton and Davis & Hill, for appellant. Dunne & McPike, respondents.

HARRISON, J. The defendant was the owner of the undivided half of a certain tract of land in Alameda county on the first Monday of March, 1897, and for many years prior thereto, and on March 24, 1897, he made a grant, bargain, and sale deed of his interest in the land to one Jackson. On the next day Jackson conveyed the land to the plaintiffs by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, and the plaintiffs have since remained the owners thereof. The land was assessed to the defendant for the purposes of revenue for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1897, and taxes were levied thereon for that year by the city of Oakland and the county of Alameda, and on November 29, 1897, the plaintiffs, for the purpose of removing the lien of these taxes from said land, paid the same to the proper officers, amounting to $424.83. The present action is brought to recover from the defendant the amount thus paid. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant has appealed.

By section 3718 of the Political Code the taxes which were paid by the plaintiffs were a lien upon the land, and attached thereto as of the first Monday of March of that year, and the covenant implied from the defendant's grant of the land that the estate conveyed by him was at the time of such conveyance free from all incumbrances done, made, or suffered by him (Civ. Code, § 1113) embraces the lien of these taxes. Such covenant was, however, a personal covenant of the same character as would be a covenant against any other incumbrance, and the rule is of ancient authority that a covenant that the land conveyed is free from incumbrances, whether express or implied, does not run with the land, or pass to the assignee. Lawrence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 183. The plaintiffs had no contractual relation with the defendant, and his covenant with Jackson did not pass to them. They could have protected themselves against these taxes, either by assuming their payment as a part of the consideration for the purchase, or by suitable covenants with Jackson; but they have no right of action therefor against the defendant. San Gabriel Val. Land & Water Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co., 96 Cal. 623, 29 Pac. 500, 31 Pac. 588, 18 L. R. A. 465, cited by the respondents, involved a consideration of the relative obligations between a mortgagee and the owner of the land mortgaged by reason of the peculiar provisions of the constitution in reference to assessment and payment of taxes upon these respective interests in the land, and was determined upon the ground that by virtue of these provisions there is a personal obligation upon the mortgagee in favor of the mortgagor for the payment of the taxes assessed upon the mortgage, and that, if these taxes are paid by the owner of the land, he may reimburse himself therefor, either by deducting the amount from the mortgage debt, or in a separate action therefor. There is, however, no personal obligation upon the owner of land for the taxes levied against it, and the payment of these taxes can be enforced only by a sale of the land in the mode prescribed by the statute. The defendant was under no personal liability for the taxes paid by the plaintiffs, and the case cited is not applicable to the present case. The judgment is reversed, and, the appellant having died since the submission of the appeal, the judgment of reversal will be entered nunc pro tunc as of August 24, 1900.

I concur: VAN DYKE, J.

GAROUTTE, J. (concurring). At the oral argument of this case I was impressed with the soundness of respondents' position, but upon further consideration my conclusion has undergone a change. Respondents say: "Suppose Heaton's deed to Jackson had been a mere quitclaim, instead of a bargain and sale, would Jackson's right of recovery, if he had continued to be the owner on the date of the delinquency of the tax, and had then paid it, been lessened in the least?" I am satisfied an affirmative answer to this question must be returned. In the absence of some covenant from Heaton, Jackson, under a quitclaim deed, would take the land just as it was, regardless of the nature of the title, or the number or character of liens resting upon it. If the lien upon the land had been a judgment or mortgage lien, and Heaton had given Jackson a quitclaim deed, Jackson would have had no claim against Heaton; and the fact that the lien here was one for taxes, rather than that of a mortgage, judgment, or attachment lien, cannot affect the principle involved. It seems to be conceded by respondents that they are in no better position than Jackson would be under a quitclaim deed from Heaton; and, as we have seen, Jackson, under those circumstances, would have no recourse against Heaton for liens resting upon the land at the time Heaton gave his quitclaim deed. I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice HARRISON, and also in the judgment of reversal.

JENKIN v. PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 1,641.)¹

INSURANCE—ACCIDENT—CAUSE OF DEATH—AFFIRMATIVE PROOF—PRIMA FACIE CASE—DECLARATIONS OF INSURED—HEARSAY.

1. Where no one was present when an insured person received a mortal wound, his subsequent statements to a physician and others as to the manner in which he was wounded were properly stricken out on motion of defendant insurance company.

2. Declarations of an insured person tending to show that he contemplated suicide, not accompanying nor explanatory of any act, were not competent evidence in favor of defendant insurance company against the beneficiary and her assignee.

3. Where a witness testified that the death of the insured made quite a sensation, owing to the question whether it was murder or suicide, such evidence was hearsay, and incompetent.

4. An insurance policy provided that the insurance should not cover death resulting from intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person; also that the claimant under the policy should affirmatively show that death resulted from actual accident according to the policy. The holder of such accident policy died of a gunshot wound received in some manner which was not shown by the evidence. Held, that such showing made a prima facie case for recovery under the policy, since the courts would not presume murder or suicide, but would presume that the death was accidental, nothing to the contrary being shown.

fornia. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wilbur G. Zeigler, for appellant. Fox, Kellogg & Gray, for respondent.

GRAY, C. On the trial of this case before the court without a jury the judgment was for defendant, and the plaintiff brings this appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

This action is brought by the assignee of the beneficiary of an accident policy issued by defendant to George Douglas Atcherly Crosbie in the lifetime of said Crosbie. By the terms of the policy the sum of $10,000 was to be paid to Mrs. Annie Mercer George (grandmother), "after due notice and satisfactory proof that the insured has, during the continuance of this policy, sustained such violent and accidental injuries as shall externally be visible upon his person, and which alone shall have caused his death within ninety days from the time of the happening of such accident." The agreement under which the policy issued provides that the insurance shall not cover death resulting from "intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person"; also that "the claimant shall establish affirmatively under any claim or proceeding thereunder that the injury or death resulted from actual accident according to the policy." In the specification of particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to support the findings appellant attacks the following finding of the court: "The said George D. A. Crosbie did not, prior to his death, or at the time thereof, receive any accidental injury, and did not die of accidental injury." In his brief, also, appellant's principal contention is directed against this finding. The evidence without conflict shows that the insured died of a gunshot wound some two days after the same was inflicted; that a bullet entered his body from the front between the sixth and seventh ribs, or thereabouts, wounding the pleura and lung. The manner in which the wound was inflicted does not appear from the evidence, except as it may be inferred from the nature and location of said wound. No person is shown to have been present with the insured at the time he received the mortal injury; and his statements to the physician and others as to how he came to be wounded were—properly, we think—stricken out by the court on motion of defendant. Some testimony was elicited on behalf of the defendant to the effect that an indefinite number of days before he was shot insured had made several declarations tending to show that he contemplated suicide. As against the beneficiary and her assignee, these declarations, not accompanying nor explanatory of any act, were not competent evidence, and the court erred in refusing to strike them out on motion of plaintiff. Yore v. Booth, 110 Cal. 238, 42 Pac. 808; 2 Bac. Ben. Soc. § 460; Insurance Co.

v. Applegate, 7 Ohio St. 292; Insurance Co. v. Haney, 10 Kan. 525; Dial v. Association, 29 S. C. 560, 8 S. E. 27; Schwarzbach v. Union, 25 W. Va. 622; Griffith v. Insurance Co., 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113. It is also clear that the testimony of Col. Green that Crosbie's death made quite a sensation, "owing to the question which was brought up as to whether it was suicide or murder," should have been stricken out, as requested by plaintiff. This hearsay and incompetent evidence as to the declarations of the insured, and the gossip concerning the cause of his death, should, therefore, be ignored; and all the evidence left us, then, from which to determine whether the wound on the insured was inflicted accidentally or purposely, is the nature and character of the wound itself. The burden is undoubtedly on the plaintiff by the very terms of the contract to show that the wound was inflicted accidentally, but it is not necessary, for him to make out his case, that he should produce the direct testimony of eyewitnesses. If the circumstances placed in evidence, and the inferences to be drawn therefrom, and the presumptions arising thereon, point clearly to an accidental injury, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, and is entitled to a finding in his favor. There is nothing, perhaps, in the character or location of the wound to indicate from a mere inspection of it that it was inflicted accidentally, rather than willfully; but when we consider that it is contrary to the general conduct of sane men to take their own lives, and that all the presumptions are in favor of sanity and against crime, we are impelled to the conclusion that the insured must have received his injury as the result of an accident. In the absence of evidence to that effect, it will not be presumed that the insured purposely took his own life, nor that he was murdered; and, if he did not take his own life willfully, and his life was not taken by another under circumstances making it a crime, then, we think, his death must be attributed to accidental causes. Richards v. Insurance Co., 89 Cal. 170, 26 Pac. 762. That the courts will presume that the death was the result of an accident, when nothing more is shown than that it was brought about by a violent injury, and the character of such injury is consistent with the theory of accident, seems to be a rule upheld by the great weight of authority. Insurance Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360, 32 L. Ed. 308; Mallory v. Insurance Co., 47 N. Y. 52; Cronkhite v. Same, 75 Wis. 116, 43 N. W. 731; Insurance Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 802, 12 S. McCLAIN v. HUTTON et al. (Sac. 712.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—STATEMENT—SPECIFICATION OF MATERIAL—VARIANCE—TERMS OF CONTRACT—SPECIFICATION OF ITEMS—LIEN FOR CONSTRUCTING SIDEWALK—TIME OF FURNISHING MATERIAL—HAULING BRICK—RIGHT TO LIEN—STATEMENT OF NAME OF OWNER—DESCRIPTION OF LAND.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, providing "that, where a contract for labor for which a mechanic's lien is claimed is not filed, the labor should be deemed to have been performed at the personal instance of the owner," a lien was not objectionable because it named the owner as the person by whom the claimant was employed instead of the contractor.

2. Where a claim for a mechanic's lien stated that the materials furnished were used on the building, it was not objectionable because it did not specifically set out the kind of material furnished and the price of the several items.

3. A claim for a mechanic's lien stated that the material was to be paid for within 60 days from the time of the purchase of each item, and if not paid for within such time to draw interest at 10 per cent., and the agreed statement of account read in evidence was the same, except that it omitted the reference to the rate of interest, and the court found that the claim attached to the complaint contained a true statement of the demand. Held, that the objection that there was a variance between the claim and the evidence and findings cannot be sustained.

4. Where a claim for a mechanic's lien stated that there was no agreement as to price when the claimant began work, but that it was subsequently fixed at four dollars per day, and the written certificate of the foreman read in evidence was to the same effect, the contention that the claim did not truthfully state the contract was without merit.

5. A claim for a mechanic's lien on a building was not objectionable because it included items for material used in building an adjacent sidewalk, since the walk must be considered a part of the building.

6. Claims for mechanics' liens were not objectionable in not stating the time specified in the contract for the payment of material, since in such a case it will be presumed in law that no time was given.

7. Where claims for mechanics' liens stated the making of the contract, the material furnished, the agreed price, the number of days' labor performed, the rate per diem, or that the usual rates were to be paid, such claims contained a sufficient statement of the terms of the contract.

8. A person who was employed by the agent of the owner to haul bricks for the construction of a building was entitled to a mechanic's lien on the building for his services.

9. The fact that a claim for a mechanic's lien stated that C. H. and F. H. were the names of the owners of the building, while F. H. had no interest in it, did not affect the validity of the lien.

10. Where a claim for a mechanic's lien gave a correct description of the land on which the building was situated, and the land was triangular in form, the fact that the correct description was followed by the further clause, "together with a certain triangular piece deeded to C. H.," etc., did not invalidate the lien, since such clause may have been another description of the same lot, and, if not, should be rejected as repugnant to the rest of the document.

In bank. On rehearing. Modified.

For opinion in department, see 61 Pac. 273.

Coglan & Harvey, W. H. Jordan, Raleigh Barcar, and Hudson Grant, for appellants. Percy S. King and J. M. Gregory, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing of this cause in bank was ordered on the ground, among others, that the work done and materials furnished by the defendants Holt and Chandler were commenced prior to the date of the mortgage of the Continental Building & Loan Association, and not afterwards, as stated in the decision heretofore filed. Hence, assuming the claim of these defendants to be valid, a new trial of the case as to them will be unnecessary. This renders necessary an examination of the validity of these claims, and at the same time we will consider the other claims, omitting that of Waggoner Bros., with reference to which the former opinion will stand.

1. The material objections to the claim of Chandler are, in effect—First, that Mrs. Hutton is named in the claim as the person by whom he was employed, instead of the contractor, Waggoner, with whom the contract was in fact made; second, that an undetermined part of the materials furnished by the claimant were not used on the Hutton Block, but on another building of the owner; third, that "the kind of materials furnished"—whether "iron, stone," etc.—is not stated; fourth, that the claim fails to "state the price at which either lumber or lime was sold," or that the articles were sold at an agreed price; and, finally, fifth, that there was a variance between the claim and the evidence, and between the claim and the finding. None of these objections is well taken. Mrs. Hutton was properly named as the person by whom the claimant was employed. It is expressly provided by the statute that, where the contract is not filed, the labor and materials "shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1184); and there is no objection to the use of this form of statement (Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588). With regard to the materials furnished, the claim unequivocally states that all of them were used on the building, and, from the stipulation read in evidence, this appears to have been the fact. It was unnecessary to state specifically the kind of materials furnished, or the prices of the several items. Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 141; Seldon v. Meeks, 17 Cal. 129; Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 287; Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 150, 23 Pac. 139. The claim is, in effect, a sufficient statement of a special contract to pay for the materials furnished, and would be sufficient as a complaint in indebitatus assumpsit, or debt. 1 Chit. Pl. 350, notes (f), (g); Id. 351, 352. Finally, there is no variance between the claim and the evidence or the finding. In the claim the statement is that the materials were to be paid for "in cash within sixty days from time of purchase of the item, and any item not paid for within that time was to bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum until paid." The agreed account read in evidence agrees accurately with this, and the finding is precisely to the same effect, except that it omits reference to the rate of interest. This, however, is, in effect, found in the finding that the claim—which is attached to the complaint, and the filing of which is not denied—"contained * * * a true statement of [the] demand," etc. The first of the above objections is made also to the claims of Holt, Moore, the Vacaville M. & L. Company, and Dresser, and what is said with reference to it will be understood as applying to those claims. The remaining objections to the claim of Holt are, in effect, that it does not truthfully state the terms of the contract, and that part of the labor was performed, not on the building, but on the adjacent sidewalk. With regard to the former point, the statement of the claim is that at the time of the work there was no agreement as to price, but it was agreed he was to be paid what his labor was reasonably worth, but afterwards the sum of four dollars per day was agreed upon by Holt and Waggoner as a reasonable sum; and the statement is sustained by the written certificate of Waggoner, as foreman, read in evidence. With regard to the other objection, the cement sidewalk must, under the circumstances of the case, be regarded as part of the building. The claims of Holt and Chandler must therefore be regarded as sufficient.

2. The principal objection urged to the other claims is, in effect, that they fail to state, or to state truthfully, "the terms, time given, and conditions of [the] contract." To simplify the question, it may be observed generally that in some of the claims the time of payment is stated; in others, not. In the latter class of cases the presumption of the law is that no time was given. Hills v. Ohlig, 63 Cal. 104; Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 144, 23 Pac. 139. Also it may be stated that in some of the claims it is said that the contract of employment was made with Mrs. Hutton; in others, that it was made with Waggoner, as contractor and agent. But this, as we have held, is to be regarded as immaterial. The question to be considered relates, therefore, to the sufficiency of the statement of the terms of the contract in other respects.

In this regard all that can be required is the statement of the fact that a contract was entered into and such a statement of its terms as to show the indebtedness claimed. These conditions are sufficiently complied with in all the claims. In each of them the making of the contract, and the labor performed or materials furnished, are stated. In one of them (that of Trower) the labor was to be performed "at the usual rates," which is but another way of saying, "for what it was reasonably worth" (Reed v. Norton, 90 Cal. 596, 597, 26 Pac. 767, 27 Pac. 426), and its value was accordingly stated. In all the other claims the agreed price is stated either in the aggregate, or, in the case of labor, the per diem rate, and the number of days. In this respect, therefore, the claims are sufficient. There are, however, some other objections to be considered.

The claim of Trower was for "the hauling of materials used in the construction of [the] building"; and it is objected, on the supposed authority of Adams v. Burbanks, 103 Cal. 646, 37 Pac. 640, that he was not entitled to a lien for labor of this kind. The case cited, however, has no application. There the claimant "was employed by the brick men to haul brick for them, and he had no connection with the contractor, who owed him no liability. His position [was] not different from that of the laborers who made the brick." But the claimant here was directly employed by Waggoner, as the agent of Mrs. Hutton, and his labor was performed on the building in the same sense as that of the men who lifted the brick from the ground to the upper parts of the building. Malone v. Mining Co., 76 Cal. 578, 18 Pac. 772.

The claim of Harrison and that of Hubert each contains the statement "that Charlotte A. Hutton and Fred Hutton are the names of the owners and reputed owners of said premises," and it is objected that the latter has no interest, and that the claims are therefore invalid. The statute requires the statement of "the name of the owner, or reputed owner, if known." "If the names are not known, the claim is sufficient if it is silent on the subject." Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 277, 22 Pac. 231. The claimant "may not know the owner, and if he is ignorant of his name he is not required to state it." Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 183, 41 Pac. 873. Still less can the validity of the claim be affected by a mistake in attempting to carry out the requirements of the law.

Finally, it is objected to Frick's claim that it does not describe the property "with sufficient certainty for identification." The claim is "for labor and services in the erection and construction of that certain building * * * now upon that certain lot situate," etc., "and described as follows," etc. Then follows a description of the land on which the building was in fact erected, and then the further clause, "together with that certain triangular piece deeded to Charlotte Hutton by the trustees of the town of Vacaville, situate on the easterly side of Dobbins street." Possibly the latter clause may be but another description of the land on which the building was erected, which is also "a triangular piece * * * situate on the easterly side of Dobbins street"; otherwise, the clause must be rejected as repugnant to the rest of the document, which unequivocally refers to one building built on one lot, and in fact to the building in question. The objections to the claims of these defendants, so far as they refer to defects, or supposed defects, appearing on their face, must, therefore, be regarded as untenable.

With regard to the costs of appeal, they should be apportioned as follows: The costs should be allotted, one-half to the appeals of Mrs. Hutton, and one-half to those of the building and loan association, but a single memorandum of costs to be filed by appellants. The former half of the costs should be paid by the respondents and the appellant Chandler in amounts proportionate to their respective claims, the latter by the respondents—excluding the appellant Chandler—in the same proportion; and it is so ordered. But as the transcript on appeal is unnecessarily voluminous by at least a third, only two-thirds of the expense of printing will be allowed in the costs. Otherwise than as above indicated, we are satisfied with the former decision, which accordingly will be modified by adding thereto the words, "except as to the issues raised by the cross complaints of the defendants I. H. Holt and F. P. Chandler, as to whom the findings will be allowed to stand," and as thus modified will stand as the decision of this court.

In re LEVIN et al. (S. F. 1,304.)

INSOLVENCY — MARSHALING ASSETS — MORTGAGE FOR PART OF CLAIM — DEDUCTION — RIGHT OF CREDITORS.

St. 1895, p. 146, provides that, when a creditor has a mortgage securing payment of a part of his debt, he shall be admitted as a creditor in insolvency proceedings against the debtor only for the balance of his debt after deducting the value of the mortgaged property. L. and others, doing business as L. Bros., were adjudged insolvent, and property occupied by L. was set off to him as a homestead. Prior to the insolvency proceedings, appellant procured a mortgage on the homestead, signed by L. and wife, securing a part of the firm's indebtedness to appellant. The members of the firm had no individual creditors. Held, that appellant was entitled to be admitted as a creditor in the insolvency proceedings only for the balance of his claim after deducting the mortgage.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, Judge.

Voluntary proceedings in insolvency by Isidor Levin and others, co-partners as Levin Bros. From an order settling the final account of the assignee in insolvency, the Anglo-Californian Bank appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse W. Lillenthal, for appellant. Joseph Kirk and Walter D. Mansfield, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. Voluntary proceedings in insolvency were commenced herein on January 7, 1897, and said firm and the individual members thereof adjudged to be insolvent. Prior thereto, to wit, April 20, 1893, the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, procured from Isidor Levin and his wife, to secure to it the payment of all sums due or to become due from said Levin Bros., a mortgage on a piece of property owned by said Isidor Levin, individually, and occupied by him and his wife as a domicile, but no declaration of homestead had been filed prior to the commencement of the proceedings in insolvency. Under section 64 of the insolvent law of 1895, the court in such insolvency proceeding, on March 24, 1897, set apart to said Isidor Levin the property so mortgaged as a homestead. The said mortgage which was so held by said bank is of the value of $6,000, and in the settlement of the final account of the assignee in said insolvency proceedings the court below held that the amount of said mortgage security should be deducted from the claim of said bank. From this portion of the order settling the said final account the bank appeals. The mortgage held by the appellant was not displaced by the homestead, but is superior and paramount thereto. Further, it appears there are no separate creditors of any of the members of said partnership firm. The claims of 182 creditors are approved, ranging in amount from a few dollars to over $27,000; the largest being the claim of said appellant, after deducting $6,000 covered by its security. The net amount to be distributed among these numerous creditors was only $21,714.82. Section 48 of the insolvency act provides: "When a creditor has a mortgage or pledge of real or personal property of the debtor, or a lien thereon, for securing the payment of a debt owing to him from the debtor, he shall be admitted as a creditor only for the balance of the debt, after deducting the value of such property," etc. St. 1895, p. 146. It is also provided by section 39 of the same act that the assignee shall keep separate accounts of the joint stock or property of the co-partnership, and the separate estate of each member thereof, and the net proceeds of the joint stock shall be appropriated to pay the creditors of the co-partnership, and the net proceeds of the separate property of each partner shall be appropriated to his separate creditors; and if there shall be any balance of the separate estate of any partner, after the payment of his separate debts, such balance shall be added to the joint stock for the payment of the joint creditors.

It is contended on the part of the appellant that the security held by it is no part of the assets of the partnership, "the debtor," and that such security was upon property excluded from the jurisdiction of the insolvency court. But in section 66 of the insolvency law it is expressly provided that "words used in this act in the singular include the plural, and in the plural the singular, and the word 'debtor' includes partnerships and corporations." The individual members, as well as the partnership, are before the court in the insolvency proceeding, and subject to its jurisdiction. "Each partner owes all the debts of the partnership, and his goods may be taken to pay them." In re Straut, 125 Cal. 417, 58 Pac. 62. The general purpose and policy of the law is to produce equality, as far as possible, among the creditors of the insolvent debtors; and in the marshaling of assets to bring about this result our Civil Code lays down the following rule: "Where a creditor is entitled to resort to each of several funds for the satisfaction of his claim, and another person has an interest in, or is entitled as a creditor to resort to some but not all of them, the latter may require the former to seek satisfaction from those funds to which the latter has no such claim, so far as it can be done without impairing the right of the former to complete satisfaction, and without doing injustice to third persons." Civ. Code, § 3433. See, also, section 2899, Id. This declaration of our Code represents an old established principle of jurisprudence in reference to marshaling of assets. In Kent v. Williams, 114 Cal. 541, 46 Pac. 462, it is said: "The doctrine of the marshaling of assets, under which, if one creditor has a lien on only one of them, the former must first proceed against that upon which the latter has no lien, is not only fully established by general authority, but is also expressly declared in sections 2899, 3433, Civ. Code." We are of opinion that the court below correctly held that the amount of security in question should first be deducted from appellant's claim, and that it should be allowed to participate in the distribution only upon the balance of such claim. Whatever may have been held to the contrary in other jurisdictions in reference to such proceedings, the statute provisions and our own decisions thereunder must control here. Order affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

CONTRERAS v. MERCK et al. (S. F. 1,600.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)

EJECTIONMENT—MINING CLAIM—COMPLAINT—DEMURRER FOR UNCERTAINTY—HARMLESS ERROR—GENERAL ISSUE—FACTS PROVABLE—JUDGMENT—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Plaintiff sued for possession of a mining claim, alleging that defendants unlawfully took possession of and ousted plaintiff therefrom, that defendants were engaged in extracting ore, and that the value of the ore wrongfully taken was $1,000. Defendants demurred to the complaint for uncertainty, objecting that the ouster was alleged to be from only a portion of the mine, and did not describe the portion, that the damages were alleged on information and belief, and that there was no allegation that any cuts had been made by defendants. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendants answered, alleging ownership and right of possession in the whole claim. Held, that the overruling the demurrer was not reversible error, since the defendants could not have been misled by the uncertainty in the complaint.

2. In ejectment for a mining claim the complaint contained the usual allegations of plaintiff's ownership and ouster by defendants, but did not allege any forfeiture or abandonment of the claim by defendants; while the answer alleged defendants' ownership of the entire claim. Held, that findings that on a given date defendants claimed to own the tract under the United States location laws, but that such location had lapsed, and become void, and the land was at that time vacant public mineral land, and that on that date plaintiff located such claim, thereby becoming the owner, and was such owner at the time of ouster, were within the issues raised by the pleadings.

3. Defendants' contention that such findings were equivalent to a finding of abandonment or forfeiture by defendants, which must be specially pleaded, could not be sustained, since the term "lapsed" in the finding had no well-defined significance in mining law, and might be rejected as surplusage, and the judgment allowed to rest on the finding that the land was vacant public mineral land.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county; John M. Corcoran, Judge.

Action by T. G. Contreras against Emelie Merck and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank H. Farrar, for appellants. Congdon & Congdon and G. G. Goucher, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover possession of a mining claim, for damages, and for an injunction. Plaintiff had judgment for possession, for one dollar damages, and perpetually enjoining defendants from trespassing upon the premises in controversy. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll.

1. Appellants contend that their demurrer for uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility should have been sustained. The complaint alleged ownership and right of possession of plaintiff in and to a certain mining claim known as the "St. Gabriel Mine," and alleged that defendants unlawfully "entered upon and took possession of a portion of said mining claim and premises, and ousted plaintiff from said portion, * * * and are now engaged in wrongfully digging, mining, and extracting gold-bearing quartz, gold specimens, and gold from said mining claims, and converting the same to their own use." The complaint further alleges that plaintiff, being uninformed as to the exact value of said gold-bearing quartz * * * so wrongfully and unlawfully dug, mined, * * * converted by defendants, alleges, on said lack of information and on his belief, that the value thereof is one thousand dollars." Appellants claim uncertainty, for (1) that the complaint alleges unlawful possession by defendants of only a portion of the mine, and does not describe such portion; (2) the allegations of damage are on information and belief; and (3) there is no direct allegation that "any holes or cuts have been made and done" by defendants. The answer claimed ownership and right of possession of the entire premises to be in defendant Merck, and the answer admitted having taken possession, and by the form of denial as to the alleged extracting of ores therefrom admitted having done so, and by the same form of denial admitted an intention to continue extracting ores. In short, the answer put in issue the question of ownership or right of possession of the entire premises, and the resulting right of defendants to occupy the premises, and do with them as they liked. The cause was tried on the issues presented by the complaint and answer, and we cannot see that appellants could have been misled or injured by the form of the complaint. In speaking of the rule where the demurrer is for uncertainty, the court, in Alexander v. Mill Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410, said: "It must not be mere abstract error, but it must be prejudicial and injurious error, in order to avail appellant; for otherwise he has no cause of complaint." See, also, Jager v. Bridge Co., 104 Cal. 542, 38 Pac. 413.

2. It is contended that the findings are not within the issues. The claim seems to be that the court finds forfeiture as a fact on the part of defendant Merck, whereas there is neither allegation of abandonment nor allegation of forfeiture on her part in the complaint. The finding is "that on the 19th day of February, 1898, the defendant Emelie D. Merck claimed to hold the tract of land described * * * under the location laws of the United States relative to quartz claims, * * * but the said location had lapsed and become void, and said tract of land was at that time vacant public mineral land." The court then finds that plaintiff was, on February 19, 1898, a qualified mineral locator, and located the premises in question on that day, and thereby became the owner and entitled to possession thereof, and was such owner when subsequently defendants entered upon said premises and ousted plaintiff therefrom. The principal fact at issue was the ownership of the mine. It was not necessary for plaintiff to allege forfeiture or abandonment by defendant Merck. The complaint contained sufficient allegations in an action in ejectment, which defendants concede this to be. As was said in Harris v. Kellogg, 117 Cal. 488, 49 Pac. 708: "A mining claim is real estate, and the rules of pleading relative to real estate are applicable to it. In the ordinary action of ejectment it is sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that he was the owner of the land in question. Such an averment carries with it all the facts essential to establish his ownership, and the means by which he became the owner would be only evidence of his ownership, and should not be alleged." The same rule would apply to the defendants in setting up ownership in their answer. In the present case defendants averred ownership in defendant Merck, and the answer is deemed to be denied. It was competent for plaintiff to show that the location under which defendant Merck claimed ownership "had lapsed and become void," and that when plaintiff initiated his claim the land was "vacant public mineral land of the United States." What the evidence was from which the court made its finding we do not know, and we must, on this appeal, presume that it was sufficient. Appellants contend that the finding that the defendants' claim had "lapsed" was equivalent to a finding that it was "forfeited," and this, it is contended, could not be proved under the general issue, but must be specially pleaded. Precisely what the court meant by the term "lapsed" may not be easily conjectured, as it is a term unknown to mining usage or laws; but we have no right to assume that it meant a technical forfeiture. The judgment may rest on the finding that "the land was vacant public mineral land," and the finding that the claim had "lapsed" may be rejected altogether. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. DAUER et al.
(L. A. 789.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)
COUNTY TREASURER—LIABILITY ON OFFICIAL BOND—LIMITATIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 337, limits the right of action on any contract obligation to four years; and County Government Act, § 87 (St. 1891, p. 318), requires the county treasurer to keep the county funds in his own possession until disbursed according to law. Held, that an action in 1896 on a county treasurer's official bond for money lost by him by deposit in a bank in 1891, which was then known to the county, was barred by limitations, though his term of office did not expire until 1893, since the cause of action arose when he lost control of the money, and not at the expiration of his term of office.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrence, Judge.

Action by the county of San Diego against C. R. Dauer and others to recover on his official bond as treasurer. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and T. L. Lewis, for appellant. Sam Ferry Smith, Haines & Ward, McDonald & McDonald, H. E. Doolittle, and Oscar A. Trippet, for respondents.

GRAY, C. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The defendant Dauer was the treasurer of San Diego county from the first Monday in January, 1891, to the 2d day of January, 1893. This action is on his official bond, and was commenced against him and the sureties on said bond on the 31st day of December, 1896, to recover the sum of $24,108.87, which it is alleged in the complaint he received during his term of office, and did not deliver to his successor or leave in the treasury, but converted the same to his own use. Among many other defenses, the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations (section 337, Code Civ. Proc.), limiting the right of action upon any contract obligation or liability founded upon an instrument in writing executed in this state to four years, and also subdivision 1 of section 338, Id., limiting an action upon a liability created by statute to three years. The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, from which we gather the following: On account of state school money due the said county the defendant Dauer on the 13th day of August, 1891, received from the state three warrants aggregating $15,987.70, drawn by the state controller upon the state treasurer, and payable to Dauer's order as county treasurer. On the same day Dauer indorsed and delivered these warrants to the California National Bank, and received certificates of deposit therefor from said bank to the extent of $10,975.70, and the balance, $5,012, in cash. Dauer entered in his books the whole amount of said $15,987.70 as received in cash. Again, on the 2d day of November, 1891, said Dauer, as county treasurer, received from H. W. Weineke, the county tax collector, in making his monthly settlement, certificates of deposit for $26,114.85, issued by the said California National Bank to said Weineke for county tax collections deposited by him in said bank. At the same time, and on the same monthly settlement, the said treasurer received from said tax collector over $10,000 in coin, and receipted for the whole amount, including the certificates of deposit, as cash, and so entered it in his books. On the close of business on the 11th day of November, 1891, and while said sums aggregating $37,090.55 were yet on deposit therein, no demand for the same having been made by Dauer, said bank closed its doors and ceased to do business, and has not since resumed business. Thereafter a receiver of said bank was duly appointed under the provisions of the national banking laws, and a suit was commenced on March 4, 1892, by the said plaintiff herein against said bank and its officers, and such proceedings were therein had that the claim of the said county, plaintiff, was allowed against said bank, and dividends amounting to the sum of $12,981.68 have been paid thereon to said county, which amount, being credited on the aggregate amount of $37,090.55 on deposit when the bank closed, leaves $24,108.87 unpaid, which is the amount sought to be recovered herein. On January 30, 1892, the chairman of the board of supervisors, together with the county auditor and district attorney of said county, made an actual count of the funds of the county treasury in the hands of said treasurer, and found that he had on hand in coin $139,882.17, and the aforesaid certificates of deposit, representing $37,090.55, and that he should have had on hand $176,972.70. Each month thereafter during said treasurer's term of office the said chairman, district attorney, and auditor made a similar count of said funds, and found and certified to the fact of the treasurer having said certificates of deposit on hand, and having an amount in coin less than he should have, in the amount represented by said certificates of deposit. The board of supervisors of plaintiff on December 19, 1892, passed a resolution reciting, in substance, that "whereas, by an official count of the money on hand it appears that Chas. R. Dauer, county treasurer, has certificates of deposit in his possession issued by the California National Bank (which bank has suspended payment) aggregating $37,090.55; that all of said money is county money, that should be in possession of said official: Therefore, be it resolved that the district attorney be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to forthwith bring an appropriate action against Treasurer Dauer and the sureties on his official bond to recover the money deposited by him in the California National Bank at the time of its suspension." In pursuance of the foregoing directions, and on the 20th day of December, 1892, the said district attorney filed a complaint and commenced an action, in which the same parties were plaintiff and defendants, respectively, as in the present action. This complaint was on the said official bond of said treasurer, and sought to recover the said $37,090.55 from said treasurer and his sureties. On the 31st day of December, 1892, the board of supervisors, by a vote of three to two, directed the district attorney to dismiss the said action they had so recently ordered him to begin, and the said action was accordingly dismissed on said last-mentioned date. It will be seen that the recovery sought in the present action is on account of the failure of said treasurer to turn over to his successor in office at the conclusion of his term that portion of the said $37,090.55 sought to be recovered in the action of December 20, 1892, which had not been collected from the said bank. The court found in favor of defendants on their defenses of the statute of limitations mentioned above.

It is contended by appellant that the statute of limitations did not commence to run until the expiration of Dauer's term of office, and that the action would not be barred until the expiration of four years from that time, but we think this contention cannot be upheld. Section 87 of the county government act (St. 1891, p. 318) provides: "The county treasurer must keep all moneys belonging to this state, or to any county of this state, in his own possession, until disbursed according to law. He must not place the same in the possession of any person, to be used for any purpose; nor must he loan, or in any manner use, or permit any person to use, the same, except as provided by law; but nothing in this section prohibits him from making special deposits for the safe keeping of the public moneys, but he shall be liable therefor on his official bond." That was the law in force at the time of the acts complained of, and thereunder it was the duty of the treasurer to keep the funds of the county under his own personal control; and when he lost that control by his own neglect of official duty a cause of action arose on his official bond at once, and the statute of limitations began to run against such cause of action certainly as early as that condition of affairs was brought to the knowledge of plaintiff. Certainly the statute began to run as early as the date of the commencement of the first action on the treasurer's bond, December 20, 1892; and, more than four years having elapsed thereafter before the commencement of the present action, the court below was correct in the conclusion that the cause of action was barred. The failure of Dauer to turn over to his successor at the conclusion of his term of office the funds which he had lost some months prior to that time did not constitute a new or different cause of action on behalf of the county, so as to affect the running of the statute of limitations. Whether the suit were begun before or after the expiration of said term, the judgment must be the same, and the damages in either case would be measured by the amount of money which had been lost by the treasurer and not previously recovered from the bank; and, if a full recovery were had in a suit brought before the expiration of Dauer's term, it would preclude any recovery thereafter, as the amount in which the treasurer was in default could be recovered but once. Under our statutes the treasurer is the mere custodian or bailee of the funds of the county, and his failure to have certain funds in the treasury at the conclusion of his term of office adds nothing to his previous transgression of having allowed the same funds to remain out of the treasury and become lost to the county. It is only because of the original conversion or loss of the funds that suit can be maintained at any date. The continuance of the loss, conversion, or absence of the funds from the treasury can no more be treated as a new cause of action than can the failure to pay a debt on June 1, 1900, that was due a year before, be treated as a new debt for the purpose of fixing the period of limitations.

Appellant cites People v. Van Ness, 79 Cal. 84, 21 Pac. 554, to show that the statute of limitations for the breach of an official bond does not commence running until the expiration of the official term, but an examination of that case will show that no breach of official duty occurred therein until the expiration of the official term. This is clearly pointed out in People v. Weineke, 122 Cal. 535, 55 Pac. 579, wherein it is said of the former case: "Van Ness was a commissioner of immigration. The question as to whether the statute commenced to run when he converted the funds was not considered, but it was assumed, as the most favorable to defendants, that it did not commence to run until the close of the term of office. When this default arose there was no law requiring the commissioner to pay over to the state treasurer monthly the moneys received by him. Section 2969 of the Political Code, requiring him to do so, was passed March 15, 1883." It is clear that the case cited furnishes us no guide herein. Appellant also cites Mason v. Luce, 116 Cal. 232, 48 Pac. 72, and other cases of the same character, holding that, where there is a provision in a note that the same shall become immediately due and payable on default in the payment of any installment of interest, the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of the expiration of the term of credit, and not from the default in the payment of interest. An examination of those cases discloses that they are based on the theory that the stipulation as to default in the payment of interest "is evidently in the nature of a penalty inserted for the benefit of the creditor, and when he does not properly claim the benefit of such penalty he waives it," and thereafter the rights and obligations continue, without regard to the forfeiture. Of course, no such principle can apply to this case.

There was no prejudicial error in the trial court refusing to exclude portions of the agreed statement as requested by appellant. It becomes unnecessary to determine any of the other interesting questions discussed in the briefs, because the cause of action, as it appears from the agreed statement, is barred by limitations, whichever statute may be held applicable; and this defeats appellant's right to recover, however correct it may be as to other contentions in the case. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re SHAVER'S ESTATE et al. (S. F. 2,421.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)
JUDGMENT—CONSENT—APPEAL AND ERROR—ESTOPPEL—AFFIDAVITS.

1. Where distributees filed their consent to the settlement and distribution of the estate of a decedent, and accepted the benefits going to them under judgment of final settlement of the administration of the estate, they could not then appeal from such judgment.

2. Affidavits of appellants, tending to show that they consented to the judgment from which they appealed under a misapprehension of fact, will not be considered on a motion to dismiss their appeal, when not presented to the court which rendered the judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; F. M. Angellotti, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Aaron Shaver, deceased. From a decree of distribution, Annie J. Shaver and Jacob Shaver, distributees, appeal. On motion, the appeals were dismissed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellants. Lennon & Hawkins, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. The executor of the last will and testament of the above decedent presented to the superior court for final settlement an account of his administration of the estate, and at the same time a petition for the distribution of the estate remaining in his hands, setting forth therein the provisions of the will, and the names of the persons entitled to receive distribution, and also the shares of the estate to which they were respectively entitled. After due notice of the time and place appointed for hearing the same, the court heard the testimony and proof submitted in support of the account, made an order settling the same, and thereupon made an order distributing the estate in accordance with the terms of the petition. The decree of distribution was entered April 24, 1900. June 20th, Annie J. Shaver and Jacob Shaver, two of the distributees named in the decree, appealed therefrom to this court, bringing as the record here the petition and decree, without any bill of exceptions. The respondents have filed herein copies of certain records and papers on file in the superior court in the matter of the administration of said estate, showing that after the above-named petition was filed, and prior to the day appointed for its hearing, the appellants signed their consent to the settlement and allowance of the account, and to the distribution of the estate in accordance with the prayer of said petition, and that the same was filed in court before the hearing upon the said petition; and that on the next day after the said decree of distribution was entered of record, viz. April 24th, the executor paid and delivered to each of said appellants all of the personal property, and the possession of the real estate distributed to them by said decree, and that their voucher therefor was filed in said court, and that thereupon, on April 25th, the court made an order discharging the said executor from all further duties and responsibilities of his trust as such executor. Upon these facts the respondents have moved for a dismissal of the appeals upon the ground that the appellants, having accepted the provisions of the judgment and voluntarily satisfied the same, were not at liberty thereafter to appeal therefrom.

The right to accept the fruits of a judgment, and the right of appeal therefrom, are not concurrent. On the contrary, they are totally inconsistent. An election to take one of these courses is therefore a renunciation of the other. Bennett v. Van Syckel, 18 N. Y. 484. The precise question involved herein was presented in Re Baby's Estate, 87 Cal. 200, 25 Pac. 405, and upon the motion of the respondents therein the appeal was dismissed, the court saying: "When a judgment has been satisfied it has passed beyond review, for the satisfaction thereof is the last act and end of the proceeding." And upon the authority of that case the motion must be granted.

The appellants have presented herein certain affidavits tending to show that their consent to the settlement of the account and the entry of the decree of distribution was signed by them under certain misapprehension and misinformation of fact, and that they received the property distributed to them and signed their receipt therefor by reason of the same misapprehension. The matters presented in these affidavits cannot, however, be considered upon this motion to dismiss the appeal. Whether they could have been considered upon a motion in the superior court to set aside the decree of distribution need not be determined. If such motion had been made in that court, the affidavits would then have formed a part of its records, and could have been authenticated in a bill of exceptions, and would form a part of the record on appeal from the order made upon the motion. No motion of this nature was, however, made before that court, nor was any matter presented for its consideration tending to impair the validity and correctness of the decree, and, while the decree remains as the judgment of that court, this court has no jurisdiction to question its sufficiency or force by reason of any matters which are not of record. The appeals are dismissed.

MOHR v. BYRNE et al. (KOWALSKY, Intervener. S. F. 1,843).

APPEAL AND ERROR—NOTICE—SERVICE ON ATTORNEY—PROOF—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 940, 1015, 1011, provide that service of notice of appeal may be made on a party's attorney, if personal, by delivery to him, and, if delivery cannot be made, it may be left at his office during his absence, by leaving the notice with his clerk therein, or with a person in charge thereof, or, if no person is in the office, by leaving the notice between the hours of 8 in the morning and 6 in the afternoon in a conspicuous place in the office, or, if the office is not open, by leaving it at the attorney's residence, in charge of some person of suitable age and discretion. The affidavit of service of such a notice stated that a copy of it was left at the office of the adverse party's attorneys, but did not show whether the attorneys were absent therefrom; whether a clerk or anybody else was in charge thereof; whether the office was open or closed; whether the notice was left in a conspicuous place therein, or at what time in the day it was left. Held, that the affidavit was insufficient to show service of the notice of appeal, since it did not show compliance with the statutory requirements for service, or the existence of conditions authorizing service in the mode adopted, and therefore the appeal should be dismissed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Henry Mohr against Kate C. Byrne and others, in which Henry I. Kowalsky intervened. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, intervener appeals. Dismissed.

W. A. Kirkwood and W. C. Shepard, for appellant. Hepburn Wilkins, Wilson & Wilson, T. J. Crowley, W. H. H. Hart, and Aylett R. Cotton, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. This action was brought to recover the amount of certain promissory notes executed by the respondent Kate C. Byrne, and held by the plaintiff. A complaint in intervention was filed by Henry I. Kowalsky, in which he claimed an interest in one of said notes. Judgment was rendered in the action in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants, and that the intervener, Kowalsky, "take nothing by this action." From this judgment the intervener has taken an appeal.

A motion is now made in behalf of the defendants Kate C. Byrne and John E. Byrne to dismiss the appeal upon the ground, among others, that no notice of the appeal was served upon them.

The only evidence of service of the notice of appeal upon them, or either of them, is contained in an affidavit of Isidore Golden, a clerk of Kowalsky, who states therein that on the 2d day of December, 1898, he prepared typewritten notices of the appeal, and "left a copy at the office of Wilson & Wilson, attorneys for Kate C. Byrne et al." It appears from the record that Wilson & Wilson were the attorneys for the respondents Kate C. Byrne and John E. Byrne. It is not shown that the notice of appeal was ever received by these attorneys.

Section 940, Code Civ. Proc., requires the notice of appeal to be served "on the adverse party or his attorney"; and section 1015 declares that, "in all cases where a party has an attorney in the action or proceeding, the service of papers when required must be upon the attorney instead of the party." Section 1011 provides that, if the service is personal, it is to be made by a delivery of the notice or other paper to the party or attorney on whom the service is required to be made. The section, moreover, provides for service in certain instances where such delivery cannot be made, as follows: "If upon an attorney, it may be made during his absence from his office by leaving the notice or other paper with his clerk therein, or with a person having charge thereof; or, when there is no person in the office, by leaving them between the hours of eight in the morning and six in the afternoon, in a conspicuous place in the office; or, if it be not open so as to admit of such service, then by leaving them at the attorney's residence with some person of suitable age and discretion." The affidavit of service must show that all the requirements of the law to effect service have been complied with, and also the existence of the conditions authorizing service in the mode adopted. In the present case the affidavit fails to show whether the attorneys for the respondent were absent from their office, or whether any clerk was present, or anybody in charge of the office, or at what time in the day the copy was left. Neither does it show whether the office was open or closed, and the statement that the affiant left it at the office is consistent with the fact that the office was closed, and that it was left at the outside of the door. If the office was open, the affidavit does not state that the notice was left "in a conspicuous place in the office"; and, as was said in Doll v. Smith, 32 Cal. 476: "For aught that appears to the contrary, it may have been put in the stove or some other place where it was not likely to be found." In that case the statement in the affidavit that the affiant "served the within notice on the plaintiff by leaving a copy of the same at the office of J. G. Doll, plaintiff's attorney in the town of Red Bluff, on the 23d day of July, 1866," was held to be insufficient proof of service, and the appeal was dismissed. In Gallardo v. Telegraph Co., 49 Cal. 510, the statement of the affiant that he "left a true copy of the notice at the office of Crane & Boyd, the attorneys for the defendant," was held not to show service of a notice of the settlement of a bill of exceptions. See, also, Dalzell v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. 453, 7 Pac. 910. Under these authorities it must be held that there is no proof of the service of the notice of appeal. The appeal of the intervenor, Kowalsky, is dismissed as to the respondents Kate C. Byrne and John E. Byrne.

(Sac. 687.)¹

LEVEE DISTRICTS—SPECIAL LAWS—VALIDITY.

1. A levee district was organized under Act March 25, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 316), providing a method for the organization of such districts, and, such act being declared void as to the method of organization, the legislature, by Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 734), recognized the existence of such district. Held, that such legislative recognition gave legal existence to such district, though it was irregularly created, since the legislature, having power to create such districts, on the law under which it was created being held invalid could give it legal existence by positive recognition.

2. Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 235), providing a new form of government for a certain levee district, is not violative of Const. art. 11, § 6, and art. 12, § 1, declaring that neither municipal nor private corporations shall be created by special laws, since such levee districts are neither municipal nor private corporations, but are mere governmental agencies having certain of the attributes and functions of corporations.

3. Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 235), providing a new form of government for a levee district, does not contravene Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3, forbidding the enactment of local or special laws if a general law can be made applicable, since it was a question for the legislature whether a general law was applicable, and its determination of the necessity for a special law will not be interfered with.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Quo warranto, on the relation of John F. Silva, against levee district No. 6 of Sutter county and others. Judgment for defendants, and relator appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, Hart & Aram, and Kirby S. Mahon, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and M. E. Sanborn, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is a proceeding in quo warranto to test the legal existence of levee district No. 6. The other defendants are the officers of the district. The case was heard and determined upon an agreed statement of facts, which are the findings in the case. Upon these facts judgment was rendered for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Levee district No. 6 was organized under the act of March 25, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 316). By virtue of that act levee district No. 1 was created, and there was provided a scheme for the organization and government of other levee districts which might thereafter be formed. But section 21 of the act, setting forth the method of organization for such districts, has been declared unconstitutional and void. Moulton v. Park, 64 Cal. 183, 30 Pac. 613; Brandenstein v. Hoke, 101 Cal. 134, 35 Pac. 562. It follows, therefore, and is conceded, that the organization of levee district No. 6, effected under section 21 of the act of March 25, 1868, was irregular and void. Notwithstanding this fatal irregularity in its organization, the legislature made distinct recognition of the existence of the district by an act approved March 30, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 734), and again by acts approved March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 235, and St. 1891, p. 237). The first of these acts of recognition was passed under the constitution of 1849, and the latter two under the present constitution. That they are positive acts of recognition sufficient to invest the district with the functions and attributes which it had assumed to exercise under the law of 1868 may not be doubted, under the authority of People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 53 Cal. 346, and Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Gray, 95 Cal. 605, 30 Pac. 779, unless it can be said that the legislature itself was without power so to validate the existence of a levee district thus irregularly organized. This is the contention of appellant. But legislative action in such matters is only circumscribed by the express limitations of the constitution. It is not questioned but that in the first instance, by direct enactment, the legislature could have carved out levee district No. 6 precisely as it did in the case of levee district No. 1. Where the exercise of a particular power is limited by the constitution, the legislature must act in the mode prescribed. But, where there is no such limitation, if the legislature shall prescribe a mode for its exercise which is, perchance, illegal, it may by subsequent ratification or recognition validate the acts done under the irregular mode. To illustrate, the present constitution forbids the creation of corporations for municipal purposes, except by general law. A special law creating a special municipal corporation would be violative of this constitutional inhibition, and no subsequent act of ratification or recognition by the legislature could validate that which in the first instance it had no power to do. But under the constitution of 1849 corporations for municipal purposes could be created by special law. If, then, the legislature, acting under that constitution, should so by special law create a municipal corporation, and for some reason the law lacked validity, the legislature, having the power thus to create the corporation, could by ratification or recognition of its corporate existence erect it into a valid municipality. If, then, levee district No. 6 be considered as a corporation (a matter inviting later attention), it was a corporation created for municipal purposes, and, notwithstanding this irregularity of its creation, the legislature could, as it did, give it a legal existence by its positive acts of recognition.

But appellant still further contends that levee district No. 6 was a corporation for municipal purposes under the act of 1868 and the act of 1872 recognizing its existence; that a new and distinct organization was perfected for it under the act of March 31, 1891, passed under the present constitution; that the district elected to come under this act, and to exercise the corporate functions provided for by the act; that the act itself is void; and that therefore the district is improperly exercising corporate functions, from using which it should be restrained. Since levee district No. 6 was a legal entity before the passage of the act of March, 1891, if that act be itself void it would not interfere with the legal existence of levee district No. 6; and the utmost which the court could do would be to require it to exercise the powers which it had theretofore enjoyed under the act of 1868, and the acts amendatory thereto, and restrain it from exercising any new rights or powers under the act of 1891. But, upon the other hand, respondent insists upon the validity of the act of 1891, and upon its right to exercise the powers conferred upon it by that act, and thus a further consideration of the question is demanded.

Appellant's argument against the validity of the act of March 31, 1891, is that levee district No. 6 is a corporation for municipal purposes; that, under the constitution, corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; and that the act of March 31, 1891, dealing as it does with levee district No. 6 alone, and providing a new form of government for it, is a special law. Article 12, § 1, of the constitution, having reference to private corporations, provides that they may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by a special act. Article 11, § 6, of the constitution declares that corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws. The act of 1891 is unquestionably a special law. If levee district No. 6 be a corporation, it is certainly not a private corporation, and must come under the designation of article 11, § 6,—“a corporation for municipal purposes.” And if it be a corporation for municipal purposes, within the meaning of that article and section, then, indubitably, the act of March, 1891, forcing upon a levee district a new, distinct, and different organization, is special and inhibited legislation. But is levee district No. 6 a corporation for municipal purposes, within the meaning of the constitution, or is levee district No. 6, in strictness, a corporation at all? Expressions will be found in the cases where such organizations have been designated “corporations for municipal purposes,” or “public corporations,” or “corporations for public purposes,” but these were convenient phrases of designation and description, rather than judicial declarations as to the nature and character of these agencies. The first question propounded is conclusively answered by People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016. It is there held that a reclamation district, conceding it to be a corporation, is not a corporation for municipal purposes within the meaning of the constitution. But, as such levee districts or reclamation districts are distinctly not private corporations, it must follow that, if they be corporations, they are corporations in a class by themselves; and the general powers of the legislature for their creation, organization, and control are in no wise limited by the constitution of the state. The second question is likewise answered in People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551. This court there said, speaking through Mr. Justice Temple: “These districts, in my opinion, belong to neither of these classes [public or private corporations]. They are special organizations, formed to perform certain work which the policy of the state requires or permits to be done, and to which the state has given a certain degree of discretion in making the improvements contemplated. They are described by Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations (sections 24–26). He calls them quasi corporations. Perhaps it would have been more accurate to say that they are not corporations at all, but are so classed because many of the presumptions and rules which apply to corporations have been made applicable to them. They are public agencies, which would cease to exist when the policy of the state has changed so that they are no longer required, or when there is no further function for them to perform. And there is nothing in the constitution relating to municipal corporations which would prevent the state from so changing its policy as to put them out of existence.” We think that what was thus tentatively expressed in the above quotation is a strict and accurate definition of the character of these organizations. The designation of them by Dillon as quasi corporations is, in itself, a distinct denial that they are corporations. They are governmental agencies—mere mandatories—having certain of the attributes and functions of a corporation, but, in strictness, not corporations at all. They are created to perform certain work for lands districted, for the benefits to be received. Their work accomplished, they cease to exist. They have grown up out of our new conditions and progressive civilization. It is concluded, therefore, upon this point, that levee district No. 6 is not a corporation, and that the constitutional inhibition against creating corporations, private or municipal, by a special law, has no applicability. Nor can it be perceived how the act of 1891 contravenes the provisions of article 4, § 25, subd. 3, which forbids the legislature to pass local or special laws in cases where the general law can be made applicable. We would not overthrow the act of a co-ordinate branch of the government under this provision unless it clearly appears that a general law could be made applicable. Considering the nature and duties of such districts, it might well be that, for the proper performance of their work, the powers to be conferred or duties imposed upon one would have no value if imposed upon another, or, if imposed upon all, might work injury to the many, while conferring benefits upon the few. It is a case, as was that of People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, where the legislative determination of the necessity for a special law will not here be interfered with. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

HERMAN v. PACIFIC JUTE M. CO. (S. F. 1,564.)

TRIAL—DISMISSAL OF ACTION—LACHES—SHAM ANSWER.

Where an affidavit of plaintiff shows that the defendant has admitted having no defense to the suit, and that the answer on file is a sham, and false, and was filed for the purpose of delay, and no counter affidavit is filed, it is error to dismiss the case for plaintiff's laches in failing to prosecute the action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action on a note by Alexander Herman against the Pacific Jute M. Company. From a judgment dismissing the case for failure of prosecution, the defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wm. B. Sharp, for appellant. Wilson & Wilson, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from a judgment dismissing the case for failure of prosecution. The suit was brought by the plaintiff, as assignee, to recover the amount due on a note made to plaintiff's assignor by the defendant April 20, 1881. The sole issue raised by the answer was as to the plaintiff's ownership of the note. The motion was made October, 1897, on the "records, files, and entries" in the case, from which it appears that the complaint was filed June 6th, and the answer October 31, 1883. From the affidavit of the plaintiff—besides matter in excuse of delay, which need not be passed on—it appears, in effect, that the defendant had no defense to the action, and that the answer was a sham or false answer, known to be such to the defendant and its attorneys; and that it was in fact filed under a resolution of the board of directors (which is set out in the affidavit), referring to a letter of its attorneys advising that the case be allowed to go by default, but instructing him to file the answer. The attorneys referred to are the same that now represent the defendant. There was no affidavit in rebuttal. Without discussing other questions raised by appellant, it is sufficient to say that, conceding the power of a court to dismiss a case for laches, there was an abuse of discretion in the case at bar in exercising that power in favor of a defendant who admittedly has no defense, and has filed a sham answer for purposes of delay. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

BANK OF VISALIA v. CURTIS. (Sac. 832.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)

APPEAL—JUDGMENT—CONSTRUCTION—DISMISSAL.

Where an issue raised by a pleading was struck out, and no evidence was offered to sustain it, the judgment entered on the other issues is not appealable for the court's refusal to render a judgment covering the issue stricken.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Visalia against William M. Curtis, administrator, etc. From a judgment for plaintiff for less than the relief demanded, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

Chas. G. Lamberson, for appellant. Bradley & Farnsworth, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Judgment was rendered in this action in favor of the plaintiff for a specified amount of money, and declaring the same to be a lien upon certain lands, and also upon a certain water ditch. Thereafter the plaintiff served and filed a notice of appeal "from all that portion of the judgment whereby the court refused to order, adjudge, and decree that five shares of the capital stock of the Wutchumna Water Company were mortgaged by the terms of the mortgage set out in paragraph 6 of the complaint." The respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that it is not taken from the judgment, or from any part thereof. The action is for the foreclosure of a mortgage, and the judgment follows the terms of paragraph 6 of the complaint. The judgment does not in terms "refuse" to decree that the shares of stock referred to in the notice of appeal were mortgaged by the terms of the mortgage set forth in the complaint, but is silent upon that subject; and it does not appear in any part of the record that such shares of stock were mortgaged. The complaint, as originally presented, after setting forth the mortgage in hæc verba, contained an averment that the defendant was the owner of five shares of the capital stock of the said water company, and that said five shares "was intended to be and was in fact included in the said mortgage, and was thereby mortgaged" as security for the promissory note. Upon the motion of the defendant the court ordered that this averment be struck out of the complaint, and it thereafter formed no part of the record, and the cause was tried upon the remaining averments of the complaint. The court does not find that the stock was included in the mortgage, nor does it appear that any evidence was offered at the trial tending to show that fact. The plaintiff could have had the action of the court in striking out this averment reviewed through a motion for a new trial, but he is not entitled to appeal from a judgment rendered upon findings which cover all the issues in the action, upon the ground that the court has refused to render judgment upon issues which were not presented to it or tried. There is no authority for an appeal from the refusal of a court to render judgment upon matters which are supported by neither averment nor evidence. The motion is granted, and the appeal is dismissed.

In re TAYLOR'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,691.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)

APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—JURISDICTION—RESIDENCE OF MINOR—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONTENTS.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, declares that a minor must be a resident of the county in which the appointment of guardian is made. Civ. Code, § 228, declares that, after the adoption of a child, the person adopting and the child shall sustain to each other the relation of parent and child. Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 4, provides that the residence of the father is the residence of an unmarried minor child. Held, that where, pending the application of a sister of a minor for appointment as his guardian, he was properly adopted in proceedings before the superior court of another county by persons residing in such county, an order thereafter made in the county of the sister's residence, appointing the sister guardian, was improper.

2. On appeal it is to be presumed that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence relative to the specifications and exceptions of the appellant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Application by Maud Taylor for appointment as guardian of the person and estate of Ralph Russell Taylor, a minor. From an order granting the application, W. E. Parkhurst and another appeal. Reversed.

A. P. Catlin, for appellants. D. W. Burchard and H. F. Dusing, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This appeal is from an order of the superior court of Santa Clara county appointing a guardian of the person and estate of Ralph Russell Taylor, a minor. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the said minor was born in October, 1890, in Santa Clara county; that being the place of residence of his parents. His mother died shortly after his birth, and in December, 1890, the infant was sent by his father and placed in the care and custody of W. E. Parkhurst and Hannah E. Parkhurst, his wife; the latter being the maternal aunt of the child. The father requested the Parkhursts to take the child, stating that if they did not take it he would have to send it to an orphan asylum. They first agreed to take it for a year only, but they have furnished it a home, kept it, and it has continuously lived with them in their care and custody up to the present time. The Parkhursts at the time lived in Eldorado county, but moved to Sacramento city in 1891, and have ever since continuously resided there. The father of said minor was poor, but assisted the Parkhursts to support the child at sundry times up to the time of his death, by contributions in money and clothing; the amount of money so contributed being $115. On June 15, 1897, Maud Taylor, a sister of the minor, filed a petition in the superior court of Santa Clara county, which petition was accompanied by the written request of Samuel Taylor, the father, asking to be appointed guardian of the person and estate of said minor. On July 18, 1897, before action on said petition, the father died. After the death of the father, and in October, 1897, by proceedings in the superior court of Sacramento county the said minor was adopted by the Parkhursts, who entered into and executed the agreement required by the Code in such cases. The record is silent as to whether or not the Parkhursts at the time of the proceedings for adoption had any notice of the application of Maud Taylor to be appointed guardian. On the 19th day of March, 1898, the said Parkhursts filed a written answer and contest to the petition of Maud Taylor, in which they denied that the minor was a resident of Santa Clara county, and alleged that he was at the time of filing the petition, and continued to be, a resident of Sacramento county, and further alleged the proceedings of adoption, showing that said minor was adopted by them in October, 1897. After hearing the evidence, and upon the facts herein stated, the court made an order appointing Maud Taylor, the sister, guardian of the person and estate of the said minor.

A minor must be an inhabitant or resident of the county in which the appointment of a guardian is made, in order for the court to have jurisdiction to make the appointment. Code Civ. Proc. § 1747; In re Raynor, 74 Cal. 424, 16 Pac. 229; Rodg. Dom. Rel. § 848; Harding v. Weld, 128 Mass. 589; Schouler, Dom. Rel. p. 424. There is no different principle laid down in Re Danneker, 67 Cal. 645, 8 Pac. 514. In fact, in that case it is said: "Letters will be issued, if necessary, by the court of the county where it may be legally determined the child resides." After the minor was adopted in October, 1897, his residence was that of the Parkhursts, who adopted him. Civ. Code, § 228; Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 4; Jacobs, Dom. §§ 247, 248; Younger v. Younger, 106 Cal. 379, 39 Pac. 779; Washburn v. White, 140 Mass. 569, 5 N. E. 813. We think the bill of exceptions purports to give all the evidence upon which the court acted. After giving certain evidence and facts, it is recited therein, "Upon the foregoing facts in evidence, and the testimony of Maud Taylor, hereinafter set forth, the said matter was on the 25th of March, 1898, submitted to the court for its decision." Then follows the testimony of Maud Taylor. In the specifications and exceptions it is stated that by the adoption the child became, to all intents and purposes, the child of the parents adopting it, and that the evidence shows that at the time of hearing the petition the child was a resident of Sacramento county. It is presumed that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence relative to the above-specified points. Association v. Willard, 48 Cal. 619.

It follows that the order should be reversed.

We concur: SMITH, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed.

RAISCH v. SAUSALITO LAND & FERRY CO. (S. F. 2,458.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)
COURTS—JURISDICTION—APPEAL AND ERROR
—TITLE TO LAND—MATTER OF RECORD.

1. Where defendant, in an action before a justice of the peace for a money demand less than the amount necessary to give the circuit court original jurisdiction, failed to raise the issue of title to realty, and have the case certified to the circuit court, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 838, but judgment was had, and defendant appealed to the circuit court on questions of law and fact, where the case was tried without its being made to appear of record that title would be involved, the jurisdiction of the circuit court was appellate, and not original, as where the case is certified by the justice; and hence, under the constitution, giving the supreme court jurisdiction to review judgments of the circuit court only where its jurisdiction is original, the judgment rendered by the circuit court was final, and the supreme court was without jurisdiction to review it.

2. Statement of counsel, made for the purpose of having the evidence taken down, that the case involved title to land, cannot be accepted as a substitute for matter of record to show that title was involved, from which the jurisdiction of the court is to be ascertained.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by A. J. Raisch against the Sausalito Land & Ferry Company. From a judgment of the circuit court affirming a justice's judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Dismissed.

Robt. Harrison, for appellant. D. H. Whittemore, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. The plaintiff brought this action in the justice's court to recover from the defendant the sum of $299, alleging in his complaint that his assignor had entered into a contract with the defendant for the doing of certain work in improving a street in Sausalito, and that the defendant had agreed to pay the above sum therefor. The defendant answered the complaint by a general denial, and also pleaded as a separate defense a former judgment in its favor upon the same cause of action. The cause was tried in the justice's court, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed to the superior court upon questions of both law and fact. Upon the trial in the superior court judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed to this court. The plaintiff now moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain the same; that, the amount of his demand being less than $300, the justice's court had jurisdiction of the case, and the judgment of the superior court upon the appeal therefrom is final. The motion is resisted by the appellant upon its claim that the case is one wherein the title or possession of real estate is involved.

The constitution gives original jurisdiction to the superior court and appellate jurisdiction to this court in all cases at law in which the title or right of possession of real estate is involved, but denies such jurisdiction in those cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, is less than $300. The appellate jurisdiction of this court over the judgments of the superior court is limited to the cases in which that court is entitled to exercise original jurisdiction, and does not extend to a review of its action in which it exercises only an appellate jurisdiction. If the plaintiff's demand is less than $300, the superior court will have no original jurisdiction to try the case, unless it appear upon the record before it that it involves a question of which the constitution has given it original jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court over any subject-matter that is not included within its general jurisdiction must appear upon the record of its proceedings. A plaintiff may invoke the jurisdiction of the superior court when the title or right of possession of real estate is involved, irrespective of the amount of his money demand, by alleging that fact in his complaint, and setting forth the matters out of which the question arises (Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338; Copertini v. Oppermann, 76 Cal. 181, 18 Pac. 256); but, when his demand is for less than $300, and he brings an action therefor in the justice's court without showing that such question is involved, if the defendant would invoke the jurisdiction of the superior court he must comply with the procedure authorized therefor (Boyd v. Railway Co., 126 Cal. 574, 58 Pac. 1046). The mode in which the jurisdiction of a court may be invoked by a litigant is regulated by the legislature, and in this state is defined in the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 838, Code Civ. Proc., declares that the parties to an action in the justice's court cannot give evidence upon any question which involves the title or possession of real property, and that that court cannot try any issue presenting such question. It also provides that, "if it appear, from the answer of the defendant, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the question of title or possession to real property," the justice must suspend all further proceedings in the action, and certify the pleadings to the superior court. Under this section the justice has no authority to certify the pleadings to the superior court, nor will the superior court obtain jurisdiction of the case by his certifying them to it, unless the defendant shall have presented in the justice's court an answer, verified by his oath, that such question is necessarily involved in the determination of the action. When the case is thus certified to the superior court, the jurisdiction exercised by it is not an appellate jurisdiction, but is the original jurisdiction given it over this question by the constitution. Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles Co., 92 Cal. 47, 28 Pac. 54. Section 838, Code Civ. Proc., declares that in such case "the superior court shall have over the action the same jurisdiction as if it had been commenced therein." Over its judgment, therein rendered, this court has an appellate jurisdiction.

In the present case it in no respect appeared from the pleadings in the justice's court that the title or right of possession of real estate was involved in the action. The complaint is merely a money demand, alleged to be due upon a personal contract. The defendant did not file a verified answer, nor does it appear that any evidence was offered in the justice's court upon any question which involved the title or possession of real property. The justice had no authority, therefore, and was not asked, to transfer the case to the superior court; but the parties proceeded to a trial before him, in which judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. From this judgment the defendant appealed to the superior court upon questions of both law and fact. The jurisdiction of the superior court to try the case was, therefore, an appellate, and not an original, jurisdiction, and it proceeded to try the case de novo, as required by section 976, Code Civ. Proc. No amendment of its answer was asked by the defendant, nor was it made to appear to the court by any matter of record that the determination of the case would present any question involving the title or possession of real property. It is recited in the statement of the case that at the opening of the trial the attorney for the plaintiff stated that, "as the case involved the title or possession of real property, he desired that the evidence be taken by the reporter, and that the usual findings be made"; but the statement of counsel, made, as it appears, for that special purpose, is not the equivalent of, nor can it be made a substitute for, matter of record, from which the jurisdiction of the court is to be ascertained. Although the proceedings at the trial in a matter in which the court had only appellate jurisdiction cannot be considered for the purpose of determining whether it might not have had original jurisdiction if it had been properly invoked, yet we have examined the statement of the case, and do not find that evidence was offered by either party upon any question which involved the title or right of possession of real estate, or that the determination of the case involved such question. As it, therefore, appears from the record on appeal that the superior court was merely in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, it follows that the appeal from its judgment therein to this court is unauthorized. The appeal is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. ARLINGTON. (Cr. 647.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—REASONABLE DOUBT—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, authorizing the court to instruct that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, it is not error for the court, after instructing in the language of such subdivision, to add that, if the jury find that any witness has willfully testified falsely to any material matter, they have a right to entirely disregard his testimony.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, authorizing the court to instruct that a witness false in any part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, the court cannot single out a particular witness, and apply such section to him.

3. A contention that the court erred in its instruction, as not based on evidence, cannot be sustained where the bill of exceptions does not bring up all the evidence.

4. The court's instructing that the accused was presumed to be innocent, and was not required to prove himself innocent until the prosecution had proven his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, does not deprive accused of the presumption of innocence at some time in the trial, where it was further stated that the presumption abided with accused throughout the trial of the case, until the evidence convinced the jury to the contrary beyond all reasonable doubt.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; S. P. Hall, Judge.

A. Arlington was convicted of grand larceny, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. McElrath, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was charged with the crime of grand larceny and of two prior convictions for the like offense. He was found guilty by the jury, and the court sentenced him to imprisonment in the state prison during his natural life. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. There is no brief for respondent. Appellant's points relate exclusively to the instructions of the court.

1. The point first presented arises on the following instruction: "I instruct you, gentlemen of the jury, that a witness false in one part of his or her testimony, as the case may be, is to be distrusted in others. And if you find that any witness in this case has willfully testified falsely to any material matter in the case, you have a right to entirely disregard and cast aside the testimony of such witness." The first part of the instruction is in the language of section 2061, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is not objected to; but the latter part, in italics, is urged as prejudicial to defendant, because it tended to confuse the jury, and prevent them from giving proper consideration to the facts of the case; and, besides, is erroneous as embodying any part of the law of this state. Appellant's counsel review at some length the decisions in which this provision of the Code has been commented upon, and concludes that much confusion exists as to its meaning; and the learned counsel insists that the rule was laid down in People v. Paulsell, 115 Cal. 6, 46 Pac. 734, to the effect that the language of the statute should be followed without amplification or modification. We do not so understand that case. The trial court had used the phrase "may be distrusted," instead of "is to be distrusted," and it was with reference to this change in phraseology that it was suggested as safer and better to follow the language of the statute. That the trial court may amplify the Code rule substantially as was done in the present case was decided in People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 15 Pac. 102, and that it should be so is laid down in People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 Pac. 553. The instruction there read as follows: "If you are satisfied that any witness has willfully testified falsely in regard to any one person, or any one particular fact in the case, then you are authorized to distrust his or her testimony in all particulars; that is, you may reject it entirely, if you choose to do so, or you may reject it in part and receive it in part, as you find it contradicted or sustained by other testimony, as you are satisfied of its truth or falsity." See, also, People v. Clark, 84 Cal. 573, 24 Pac. 313, where a similar instruction was upheld; and the rule is sustained by what was said with considerable amplification in People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491, quoted approvingly in White v. Disher, 67 Cal. 402, 7 Pac. 826.

2. The defendant requested and was refused the following instruction: "If you believe that the prosecutrix testified falsely about being in San Francisco on the night of April 14, 1899, she is to be distrusted in other parts of her testimony." The court did not err. The instruction first above considered applied to all the witnesses in the case, and, besides, it would have been improper to single out a particular witness, and apply to him or to her the rule in question. Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 Pac. 315.

3. The court charged the jury as follows: "Before you can find him [defendant] guilty of grand larceny, you must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that he stole from the prosecuting witness, Minnie M. Smith, of her personal property, money in excess of the value of fifty dollars; but if you find that he stole such money, but are not satisfied that the amount thereof exceeded fifty dollars, you can only find him guilty of petit larceny." Section 678, Pen. Code, provides that, "wherever in this Code the character or grade of the offense, or its punishment, is made to depend upon the value of the property, such value shall be estimated exclusively in United States gold coin." The court elsewhere in its instructions referred to the indictment as charging defendant with having stolen "two hundred and fourteen dollars, of the value of two hundred and fourteen dollars, in lawful money of the United States"; and again reference is made to some of this money as "bills of currency of the United States," or as "greenbacks," or as "fifty-dollar bills," but the court does not tell the jury in estimating the value of these greenbacks or bills that they are to "estimate their value in gold coin of the United States." The evidence was that the money stolen consisted of two $50 greenbacks, five $20 greenback bills, a $10 piece of gold, and $4.85 in various denominations of silver coin. The contention is that there was no testimony offered to show the meaning of the word "greenbacks," or instruction that their value was to be estimated in gold coin. The bill of exceptions does not bring up all the evidence, and what appears is stated in the bill to bear only "upon the defendant's exceptions hereinafter to be stated." We find no exception on the point now raised, and, as the presumption is that there was evidence to meet the requirements of the law, it was incumbent on defendant to show affirmatively that there was no such evidence. The question now raised is not necessarily involved by the appeal.

4. The court charged the jury as follows: "The charge in the information puts upon the prosecution the burden of proving that he is guilty of the charge laid in the information beyond all reasonable doubt. In other words, gentlemen, the defendant at the outset of this trial is presumed to be an innocent man. He is not required to prove himself innocent, or to put in any evidence at all upon that subject until the prosecution has proven to your satisfaction and beyond all reasonable doubt that he is guilty. Now, in considering the testimony in the case, you must look at that testimony, and view it in the light of that presumption which the law clothes him with, that he is innocent, and it is a presumption that abides with him throughout the trial of the case, until the evidence convinces you to the contrary beyond all reasonable doubt." It is claimed that the effect of this instruction was to deprive defendant of the presumption of innocence at some time throughout the trial, before the jury should, by their verdict, determine to the contrary; that the jury were, in effect, told that when the prosecution closed its evidence, and the defendant was called upon to put in his defense, at that point of time the presumption of innocence with which the defendant was clothed ceased to operate. There is no doubt but that the presumption of innocence continues not only during the taking of the testimony, but during the deliberations of the jury, and until they reach a verdict (People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 953); and, if it could fairly be said that the instruction deprived the defendant of the full operation of this rule, we should not hesitate to hold the error to be prejudicial. But we cannot so interpret the meaning of the instruction. The court told the jury that "it is a presumption that abides with him throughout the trial of the case," and we do not think the language "until the evidence convinces you to the contrary beyond all reasonable doubt" conveyed the impression that the presumption ceased to operate at the close of the evidence of the prosecution, or at any time before the jury had finally determined upon a verdict. The court meant, and we think must have been by the jury understood to mean, that the presumption remained to the last with defendant, and until in their deliberations upon the evidence they became convinced of his guilt. When the jury reached that conclusion on the whole evidence, and beyond a reasonable doubt, of course the presumption disappeared, and should disappear. The judgment and order are affirmed.

(L. A. 1,018.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CHARTER—ADOPTION—AMENDMENT.

1. Const. art. 11, § 8, authorizes a city to frame a charter for its own government by causing a board of freeholders to be elected to prepare a charter, which may be adopted by a majority vote of the electors and by the legislature, and provides that the charter may afterwards be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals submitted by the legislative authority of the city. Held, that the payment of the expenses of a board of freeholders elected by a city already having a freehold charter, to prepare a new charter, will be enjoined, since such city can only change the charter by the procedure provided for making amendments.

2. Pol. Code, § 1188, prescribing the methods of nominating candidates for office, does not authorize proceedings to elect a board of freeholders, for the purpose of preparing a city charter, to be instituted by citizens of the city, as Const. art. 11, § 8, authorizing the election of such a board, requires that they be caused to be elected by the city, which can act only through its council.

Henshaw, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Extended opinion. For original opinion, see 62 Pac. 509.

M. L. Graff, for appellant. R. H. F. Variel, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action is by a taxpayer to enjoin the city treasurer of Los Angeles and the city from paying the expenses of a certain board claiming to be a board of freeholders elected to prepare a charter for the city. The city of Los Angeles already had a freeholders' charter, which was approved by the legislature in January, 1889. In that year a board of freeholders was again elected, which formed a new charter, which was submitted to the inhabitants of the city for their approval, but was rejected. In July of the present year another board was elected, and formally qualified, and is proceeding to prepare a new charter. The case was submitted upon the stipulated facts. The defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

The constitutional provisions bearing upon this matter are contained in section 8, art. 11. So far as material here, it is as follows: Any city having the requisite population may frame a charter for its own government by causing a board of 15 freeholders to be elected to prepare a charter, which, in the mode specified in the section, shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the city; and, if approved by a majority of them and by the legislature, it will become the charter of said city and the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof, and all laws inconsistent with such charter. It is then provided, as to amendments: "The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years by proposal therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof, at a general or special election, held at least forty days after the publication of such proposals for twenty days in a daily newspaper of general circulation in such city, and ratified by at least three-fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat, and approved by the legislature as herein provided for the approval of the charter. In submitting any such charter, or amendments thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others." In People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238, 24 Pac. 718, the provisions of this section in regard to the mode of framing and adopting a freeholders' charter in the first instance were discussed, and it was held that the procedure prescribed must be strictly pursued. This conclusion was based largely upon the ground that the procedure was, under constitutional provisions, expressly declared to be mandatory and prohibitory, and it is said, "Under such provisions the mode is the measure of the power." Upon this point the decision has never been questioned, so far as I am advised. Since a procedure for the amendment of such a charter is expressly provided, the presumption would be (independently of the declaration that all the provisions of the constitution are mandatory and prohibitory unless the contrary is expressly stated) that such mode is exclusive. Under such a constitution this seems indisputable. The one mode of amendment is commanded, and all others are prohibited. But every feature of the prescribed mode indicates that it is exclusive. It can be amended only once in two years. This would be a vain restriction if nevertheless the charter can be amended by framing a new charter (as remarked at the argument) every 60 days. Here is a clear and positive constitutional policy, calculated to insure some degree of permanency and to prevent frequent changes. Such is the prescribed policy. People may differ as to its wisdom. It certainly is the law. In the second place, it prescribes a different notice from that required upon the adoption of the charter in the first instance, and provides that alternate propositions may be submitted for the choice of electors. These are both important matters, not only providing for greater deliberation, but enabling the electors to decide by direct vote between different proposed policies, thus bringing local self-government nearer to the individual voter. No one should be permitted to deprive the electors of this privilege by compelling them to vote upon a different proposition, to wit, whether they will adopt a new scheme as a whole or not. I regard the right to submit specific amendments as a matter of great importance, but, whether important or not, such is the constitutional scheme. In the third place, the amendment must be approved by a majority of three-fifths of the qualified electors. A charter may be adopted by a majority vote of such electors. This is also a provision favoring permanence, and against changes made under temporary excitement. What a fatuous limitation or requirement this would be, if the policy thus clearly indicated could be defeated by adopting a new charter once in 60 days by a mere majority vote! A new charter, if it could be framed, would be but an amendment of the charter it displaced. In the mode provided, every section of an existing charter could be radically changed. A newly-framed charter could adopt all sections of the old, save one. If it was thought desirable to change but one simple provision, and doubts were entertained whether a three-fifths vote could be obtained, schemers, if the power existed, could accomplish their purpose by framing a new charter. In view of such a proposition, how foolish this carefully prepared provision for amendments, with its limitations, which has been three times adopted by the people of the state, becomes! The principle here declared has been approved in numerous cases,—among them, in City of St. Louis v. Dorr, 145 Mo. 466, 41 S. W. 1094, 46 S. W. 976, 42 L. R. A. 686; State v. Chase, 5 Ohio St. 523; Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 283; Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 102; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 550; Gas Co. v. Toberman, 61 Cal. 199; Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 11 Pac. 3.

Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625, is not altogether in point. A freeholders' charter there was like ours only in name. The legislature, which could amend such charters ad libitum, provided a mode in which the city councils could be compelled to call an election to elect a board of freeholders to frame "a new charter for said city by altering, changing, revising, adding to or repealing their existing charter." Since the legislature could do all these things itself, the most important question was whether this was an improper delegation of legislative power. The court held that it was not, and this really settled the case. The chief justice took that view, and did not concur in the opinion upon the point here involved. As to that point the opinion, which was not by a majority of the court, merely states, without argument or citation of authority, that the grant of power to frame a charter is a continuing right. The provisions of the constitution of the state of Washington are not declared to be mandatory and prohibitory, and the charter was at the mercy of the legislature; and, when it is added that the opinion was not by a majority of the court, it has not much value as authority. But there a mode was provided by which the council could be compelled to call an election upon a mere petition. Here the movement can only be initiated by the city council,—the legislative body of the city. The constitution provides that the city shall cause the election to be held. The city can only act through its legislature. Counsel asserted at the argument that the people could initiate the movement under section 1188 of the Political Code, but did not stop to show how under those provisions it could be done. There is no mode provided in that section or in any other, and, as to the city having a freeholders' charter, it is at least doubtful if such a law could be enacted, even though it were held that the right to frame a charter is a continuing right. Nor is it true that to hold that this constitutional mode of amendment is exclusive restricts to any extent the power of the people to cause desired amendments to be proposed, except that this can only be done once in two years. It would seem as easy to induce the council to submit desired amendments as to induce them to call an election for a board of freeholders, supposing them to have that power. Judgment of reversal was entered at the October term, 1900, at Los Angeles.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

HENSHAW, J. I dissent, under the conviction that the constitutional power to frame a freeholders' charter is a continuing one, not exhausted by its single exercise.

PEOPLE v. RODLEY. (Cr. 643).¹

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1900.)

PERJURY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—COMPETENCY—INDICTMENT—JURY—PANEL—LIST—SELECTION—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSPIRACY—CO-CONSPIRATOR.

1. Defendant, at the probate of a will, swore that he signed in the presence of the other witness and the testator, at testator's request, who declared that he had signed it. The other witness pleaded guilty to perjury, and testified that he and defendant signed the will several months after testator's death; that defendant persuaded him to do so, because there was $5,000 in it for each of them. Another witness told of defendant's attempt to get him to sign the will after testator's death, and that he would get $3,000 for so doing. Another testified that the principal beneficiary, who also wrote the will after testator's death, offered him $5,000 to witness it, saying that she was to pay defendant that amount for being the other witness. Defendant, whose character was good, denied this testimony, but was uncorroborated. The will was admitted to probate, but was afterwards declared invalid. Held sufficient to sustain a conviction for perjury.

2. Where an indictment for perjury alleged that the statements made by defendant were then and there false and untrue, and known by him to be so, in the absence of a demurrer it is a sufficient assignment of perjury, within the requirement of Pen. Code, § 966, that the indictment contain proper allegations of the falsity of the matter in which perjury is assigned.

3. The allegation in the indictment that the testimony alleged to be false was then and there material to the issue and matters being heard in said proceeding is a sufficient allegation as to materiality.

4. Where the grand jury presented a true bill against defendant for perjury on a petition for letters testamentary, but, after retiring for further deliberation, and on the same day, they returned into court, changing the indictment found to conform to the fact that the petition in the probate proceedings called for letters of administration with the will annexed, on which amended indictment defendant was arraigned and tried, there was nothing of which defendant could complain, he not having been arraigned on the indictment before amendment, since such a mistake may be corrected at any time before the prisoner has pleaded and the jury been discharged.

5. Where defendant filed an affidavit for trial before another judge because of prejudice, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 170, and counter affidavits of the judge were filed, and considered by the court in determining whether the judge was disqualified, without objection of defendant, it is too late to make such objection on appeal from conviction.

6. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 206, 211, providing that the list of jurors shall contain the number ordered by the court to be selected from the wards and townships in proportion to the number of inhabitants, and the lists to be kept separate, and that the names of persons remaining in the grand or petit jury boxes at the end of the year who have not been drawn, and have not served as jurors during the year, may be placed on the list for the succeeding year, though the number fixed in the order cannot be increased by the names left in the jury box at the end of the previous year, it was proper for the supervisors to select such as possessed the necessary qualifications, and had not served the previous year, as part of the list for the current year.

7. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 206, authorizing the list of jurors to be selected from the wards or townships of a county in proportion to the population therein as nearly as can be estimated by the persons making the lists, it was not improper for the supervisors, in making the list, to estimate the population by the number of votes cast in each district at the last preceding election.

8. Where the clerk testified that the 75 ballots drawn from the jury box were folded, so as to conceal the names therein written, the objection that the name of one of the jury was not properly concealed was untenable, and challenge to the panel was properly overruled.

9. In a prosecution for perjury in proving a will, the affidavit of the publication of notice of hearing of the petition for probate and letters was properly admitted in evidence as part of the record of the matter in which the perjury was charged to have been committed, and was competent evidence of the matter therein stated, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2010, 2011, providing that evidence of publishing of a notice required by law may be given by the printer's affidavit, which shall be prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.

10. Where a will had not been signed by witnesses until after testator's death, in a prosecution of defendant for perjury in swearing that the will was duly witnessed by him it was proper to admit in evidence the testimony of the beneficiary of the will and the other subscribing witness as to its being duly witnessed, given at the hearing of the probate matter, since such acts and declarations, in connection with defendant's acts and declarations, tended to show that the three were each working to accomplish one criminal purpose, which tended to establish a conspiracy to rob testator's estate.

11. It having been shown that the will had been written by the beneficiary, and that defendant had been endeavoring by improper means to secure a witness to the will after the death of testator, the conversation of the beneficiary with the party wherein she attempted to persuade him to subscribe the will of the already deceased testator for $5,000 was properly admitted in evidence, since there was sufficient proof of conspiracy between defendant and the beneficiary to make her acts in carrying out the common criminal purpose competent against him.

12. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing that he duly witnessed it, there was no error in permitting evidence of a conspiracy between the beneficiary and subscribing witnesses to defraud the estate, after the admission of the declarations of the beneficiary that she had offered to pay another witness the amount she was going to pay defendant, where, taking all the evidence together, it established the conspiracy, since the order of proof rested in the sound discretion of the court.

13. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, testimony by a witness of declarations of the beneficiary tending to show a conspiracy to defraud testator's estate by establishing a fraudulent will being properly admitted, it was not error to admit evidence of declarations in the same conversation by her tending to show that defendant was a party to such conspiracy, over an objection to strike out the whole testimony.

14. An instruction, given at defendant's request, that the jury should not consider the declarations of the beneficiary to the party whom she tried to induce to sign the will that she had agreed to pay defendant for so signing, unless they first found that there existed a conspiracy to which defendant and the beneficiary were both parties, was equivalent to granting a motion to strike out the portions of the declarations as to defendant.

15. Where, in a prosecution of a witness to a will, which was in the beneficiary's handwriting, for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, it was claimed that there was conspiracy between the beneficiary and the witnesses to defraud the estate by a false will, testimony by a witness of a conversation in which the beneficiary tried to get him to not testify before the grand jury, that she had offered him $5,000 to sign the will as a witness, was properly admitted.

16. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing that it was duly witnessed, it was proper to sustain an objection to defendant's answering a question as to whether he stated, after testator's death, that there was such a will, and when and where he made such statements, since they were self-serving declarations.

17. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing that it was duly witnessed, evidence of declarations by deceased that he intended to remember the principal beneficiary named in the will offered was properly excluded, since such declarations are not admissible on questions pertaining solely to the formal execution of the will.

18. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, it was proper to refuse to instruct that defendant's testimony was not material to the matter before the probate court, the decree of that court being to the effect that the will was holographic, and was executed as a nonolographic will should be.

19. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, whether or not he was sworn in the usual form at the probate proceedings makes no difference, under Pen. Code, § 121, providing that it is no defense to a prosecution for perjury that the oath was taken or administered in any irregular manner.

20. In a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, it was proper to refuse to instruct that there was no evidence that the probate court had jurisdiction of the proceeding in which the perjury was committed, where the decree admitting the will to probate showed that the court had jurisdiction in the matter.

21. Where the other witness to the will testified to facts and circumstances tending to show defendant's guilt other than the direct evidence he gave of the falsity of the testimony charged to be perjury, since Code Civ. Proc. § 1968, requires direct evidence only as to the falsity of the testimony charged to be perjury, and as to which sufficient instructions had been given at defendant's request, it was not error to refuse to instruct that, if the jury did not believe such witness' testimony, they must acquit defendant, as they might believe his direct evidence while disbelieving the other.

22. Where two instructions as to evidence of defendant's good character were as favorable as defendant could reasonably ask, it was not error to refuse to add a third instruction on that subject, everything stated in it being plainly implied in the other two.

23. Where an erroneous instruction cautioning the jury against testimony of verbal admissions was given, it was not error to refuse defendant's other requested instructions that the jury view with caution testimony of a witness as to oral admissions by defendant, and also the testimony of another witness as to oral admissions of the beneficiary of the will, between whom and defendant there was alleged to be a conspiracy to defraud the estate, since the subject of such instructions had been treated in the first one, of which defendant could not complain, he having requested it.

24. It was not error to refuse an instruction that defendant could not be convicted unless each of the jury was satisfied from the evidence that he was guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, and in determining such question it was the duty of each juror to decide the matter for himself, and not to compromise or sacrifice his views or opinions of the case in deference to the views or opinions of others.

25. Where, in addition to instructions that the burden of proof was on the prosecution, and that the jury must be entirely satisfied of defendant's guilt before they could convict, an instruction was given that if, on the proof given, there was a reasonable doubt, the accused was entitled to an acquittal, and the evidence must establish the truth of the charge to a reasonable and moral certainty, it was not error to refuse to instruct that a preponderance of evidence would not be sufficient to justify a conviction.

26. It was proper to amend defendant's offered instruction as to the corroboration necessary in perjury cases by striking out the word "strong" before "corroborating circumstances," to make it accord with Code Civ. Proc. § 1968, requiring perjury to be proved by the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances.

27. An instruction was given containing the definition of perjury in Pen. Code, § 118,—that every person having taken an oath that he will testify truly before a competent tribunal, who willfully, and contrary to such oath, states as true any material matter known by him to be false, commits perjury. Another instruction was given that the jury were required to determine whether or not the testimony was false, and known by defendant to be false at the time delivered, and given willfully, and contrary to the oath taken. Held, that it was not error to refuse to instruct that defendant could not be convicted unless they found beyond reasonable doubt that he gave the testimony with a criminal intent, and, if they had reasonable doubt that he had a specific criminal intent, he should be acquitted.

28. An instruction was given that there must be direct testimony of at least one credible witness, directly contradictory of defendant's oath, and, in addition thereto, there must be testimony of another witness, or corroborating circumstances established by independent evidence, and of such character as to overcome defendant's oath and the presumption of innocence. Another instruction was that the additional evidence must be at least strongly corroborative of the accusing witness. Held, that it was proper to refuse an instruction that there must be something in the corroborative evidence which makes the facts sworn to by defendant not true if the corroborative evidence be true, but, if the corroboration does not go to that extent, defendant must be acquitted, since the former instructions were sufficient on corroboration.

29. A judgment of conviction will not be reversed because of instructions given at defendant's request.

30. Where, in a prosecution of a witness to a will for perjury in swearing at the probate thereof that it was duly witnessed, when it was not witnessed until after testator's death, it was conceded that the will was bogus, and the evidence showed that the will was not valid, a remark of the district attorney to the jury that the jury in the will contest, within an hour after retiring, brought in a verdict that it was not a valid will, though improper, was not prejudicial to defendant.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; John C. Gray, Judge.

J. Ellis Rodley was convicted of perjury, and from such conviction and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

GRAY, C. The defendant was convicted of perjury, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of 12 years. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The transcript on appeal contains a bill of exceptions. The defendant was a practicing physician, and for at least a portion of the time covered by the evidence he was the mayor of Chico. The theory of the prosecution is that the defendant committed the crime charged to assist the purpose of a conspiracy entered into between himself, Mrs. Houseworth, and J. M. Garner, to the end that Mrs. Houseworth might succeed to the estate of one A. Fuller, deceased, by means of a false and forged will. The perjury is charged to have been committed by defendant, as a pretended subscribing witness, at the probate of the will. The alleged will was shown to be in the handwriting of Mrs. Houseworth, and she was, by the terms thereof, to have received all the property and estate of deceased except $1,000; said estate being about $32,000 in value. The accomplice, Garner, pleaded guilty to the charge of perjury, and thereafter, at the trial of defendant, he testified, in substance, that he and defendant signed the will together in the presence of each other, and without the request or presence of Fuller, in the summer of 1898, and several months after the death of said Fuller; that defendant persuaded him to sign by saying there was $5,000 in it for each of them; and that, after they had both signed, defendant wrote the attesting clause in above their signatures. The following is a copy of the said alleged will and the attestation thereto, to wit:

"June 9th, 1897. I desire that Mrs. Minnie Houseworth have all my property at my death, except I reserve one thousand dollars to be equally divided between the legal heirs to my estate. A. Fuller.

"Signed as witnesses, after being requested to do so by A. Fuller, he declaring this to be his will and that he had signed it. We therefore, in his presence, and in the presence of each other, signed our names as witnesses, Aug. 3, 1897. J. E. Rodley. J. M. Garner."

It is shown that Fuller died on or about October 18, 1897, and that defendant testified at the hearing in the matter of the probate of said alleged will that he signed the will as a subscribing witness on August 3, 1897, in the presence of Fuller and Garner; and that Fuller then and there declared that he had signed the will, and requested defendant and Garner to sign as witnesses. H. T. Batchelder, county clerk of Butte county, testified that in February, 1898, he had two conversations with defendant; that in the first one defendant asked him if he was acquainted with Fuller's signature, and, on his replying that he thought he was, defendant asked him if he would be willing to certify to it if he knew it to be Fuller's signature. Defendant did not at that time exhibit any document, but said, "If you could be certain that it is his will, it would be to your interest in the sum of three thousand dollars." In the second conversation, had also in February, 1898,—the date of which is fixed by a letter from defendant,—the defendant exhibited the identical will which was subsequently filed for probate, and concerning which defendant gave the alleged false testimony. The witness read the same over once or twice. The defendant asked him if he thought that was Fuller's signature, to which he replied, "I think not, doctor." The defendant then said, "You wouldn't be willing to sign it as a witness?" and Batchelder answered that he would not; that he had signed but few wills, and those always upon invitation. The defendant was the family physician of the witness Batchelder, and they were on friendly terms at the time of the occurrences narrated. The defendant, as a witness, squarely denied that he had ever exhibited any will to Batchelder, or had ever asked him anything about Fuller's signature, and reaffirmed the truth of the testimony given by him at the probate of the will. On cross-examination the defendant was asked if, on the 25th day of October, 1899, in a conversation with S. H. Wilson, the sheriff, he (the defendant) did not use the following language: "There is nothing in that Batchelder matter that has been before the grand jury. I did go down to Biggs on the 15th day of February, 1898, and I had witnessed a will for Alfred Fuller, and it was lost; so I made a copy of it, and took the copy down with me, and showed it to Batchelder, and asked him if he thought he would sign that as a witness or not, and he told me he wouldn't have anything to do with it; so I put on my overcoat, and went out, and on the road home I tore the copy up." In reply the defendant said, "I think I did make that statement," and, when asked if the statement was correct, he said, "I think so; yes, sir." Later in his cross-examination, when the same matter was reverted to and he was asked concerning it, he replied: "I don't recollect saying anything of the kind." Subsequently said S. H. Wilson was called by the prosecution, and testified, in substance, that the defendant did make the statement substantially as quoted in the question above. It appeared from the evidence that Mrs. Houseworth and said Garner were also witnesses at the probate of the will; that the testimony of the latter as to the facts surrounding the witnessing of the will was substantially the same as that of the defendant. Mrs. Houseworth presented the will for probate October 19, 1898, in her petition stating that she believed it was in the handwriting of the deceased, Fuller, and at that hearing she testified that she had received the will from one H. Carmack on October 17, 1898, and that she never saw the document before that date. In May, 1898, as testified at the trial by one J. B. Swearingen, Mrs. Houseworth stated to him that she had a will that Mr. Fuller had left her, and she had received it in a letter handed her by a Mr. Fimple; that it did not have any witnesses to it, and the lawyers told her it needed two witnesses; "and so all they will have to do is to write on a piece of paper that they had signed it at Fuller's request, and sign their names to it, and attach it to the will." "Now," she said, "I want you to sign as one of the witnesses. Dr. Rodley has agreed to sign it for one, and I have agreed to give him five thousand dollars to sign it, and I will give you the same. I would not offer you any less than I agreed to pay Mr. Rodley." On this appeal a great many points are made, the more important of which we will take up and dispose of in the order in which they are presented in appellant's brief.

1. The indictment is in the following language: "J. Ellis Rodley is accused by the grand jury of the county of Butte, state of California, by this indictment, of the crime of perjury, a felony, committed as follows, to wit: That on the 23d day of November, 1898, and before the finding of this indictment, at the county of Butte, state of California, in the superior court of the said county of Butte, and state of California, Honorable John C. Gray, judge presiding therein, there was pending and on trial before the said superior court of the county of Butte a certain proceeding, to wit, the matter of the probate of the alleged will of one Alfred Fuller, deceased, and the petition of Mrs. Minnie Houseworth for letters of administration with the will annexed; and said superior court as aforesaid had competent jurisdiction then and there to hear, decide, and determine said matter and proceeding according to the law of the state of California, and was then and there fully empowered to administer the law in said matter and proceeding. The said J. Ellis Rodley was then and there called as a witness in said matter, and then and there took an oath before the said superior court, and under the direction of said superior court of the county of Butte, state of California, in due form of law, that he, the said J. Ellis Rodley, would then and there testify truly as a witness in the matter and proceeding then and there being heard by said superior court, as aforesaid; said oath having been then and there administered by one C. F. Belding, who was then and there a duly appointed, qualified, and acting deputy county clerk of said county of Butte, state of California, then and there an officer authorized by law to administer oaths, and to administer an oath to said J. Ellis Rodley as a witness in said proceeding then and there pending as aforesaid. He, the said J. Ellis Rodley, did then and there, and being so sworn, at said county of Butte, state of California, and in said proceeding aforesaid, in a matter material to such issue then and there being heard by said court as aforesaid, he, the said J. Ellis Rodley, having so taken such oath as aforesaid, willfully, unlawfully, corruptly, falsely, feloniously, and contrary to such oath by him, the said J. Ellis Rodley, then and there taken, and he, the said J. Ellis Rodley, then and there knowing the same to be false and untrue, state, declare, make oath, swear, and testify the truth to be in substance as follows, to wit." Then follow some nine or ten folios of the testimony, both question and answer, of the defendant, given at the hearing of the said probate proceeding, and after that the indictment continues as follows: "All of which was then and there material to the issue and matter being heard in said proceeding, and that said statements made as aforesaid by said J. Ellis Rodley were then and there false and untrue, and were then and there, at the time of making them by said J. Ellis Rodley, known by said J. Ellis Rodley to be so false and untrue. Whereby he, the said J. Ellis Rodley, did then and there, as aforesaid, willfully, corruptly, and contrary to his oath, and knowing his testimony to be false, swear falsely, and feloniously commit willful perjury, contrary," etc. There was no demurrer to the indictment, but on arraignment the defendant pleaded not guilty.

The objections urged to this indictment are: (a) It omits the requisite "assignment of perjury"; (b) there is no adequate averment showing the materiality of the testimony. The requirement of the law as to "assignment of perjury" is found in section 966 of the Penal Code, and requires only that there be "proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned." The allegations to the effect that the statements made by defendant were then and there false and untrue, and known by him to be so false and untrue, are, we think, in the absence of a demurrer, a sufficient "assignment of perjury" under the Code provision above cited. This precise question has never been decided by this court, so far as we have been able to ascertain. In People v. Ah Bean, 77 Cal. 12, 18 Pac. 815, and Same v. De Carlo, 124 Cal. 462, 57 Pac. 383, the indictment was in each instance in substantially the same form, so far as the "assignment of perjury" is concerned, as it is in this case. But in neither of those cases was any question made as to the sufficiency of the indictment in this respect. However, it seems plain here that the indictment states facts constituting an offense, and the worst that can be said of it is that it is not as specific and certain as it should have been in its allegations as to the falsity of the numerous statements of defendant charged to have been perjurious; and perhaps the indictment for that reason does not conform to the requirements of sections 950, 952, Pen. Code. But an uncertainty of such a character would be waived by the defendant's failure to demur. He cannot, under our system, lie by until he shall see the result of a trial of his case on its merits, and then be permitted to take advantage of a mere uncertainty in the indictment by motion in arrest of judgment. Sections 1004, 1012, 1185, Id.; People v. Swenson, 49 Cal. 388; Same v. Chuey Ying Git, 100 Cal. 437, 34 Pac. 1080; Same v. Mesa, 93 Cal. 580, 29 Pac. 116; Same v. Villarino, 66 Cal. 228, 5 Pac. 154. It is specifically alleged in the indictment that the testimony alleged to be false "was then and there material to the issue and matter being heard in said proceeding." This is a sufficient allegation as to materiality. People v. De Carlo, 124 Cal. 462, 57 Pac. 383, at page 467, 124 Cal., and page 385, 57 Pac. The other objections to the indictment are based on false premises, and will each disappear on a careful reading of that document.

2. It appears that the grand jury made a partial report, and presented a true bill against defendant for perjury on December 15, 1899, and the clerk was directed by the court to file the same, and issue a bench warrant thereon for the arrest of defendant; and his bail was fixed at the sum of $5,000. The jury then retired for further deliberation. At 3 o'clock p. m. of the same day the grand jury returned into court, and, after being called, the court stated and the jury responded as follows: "The indictment which was presented this forenoon in the case of The People of the State of California vs. J. Ellis Rodley, Defendant, was resubmitted by the court to the grand jury from the district attorney to correct an error that appeared upon the face of the indictment, in this: that it appeared from the indictment presented that the matter before the court at the time that J. Ellis Rodley was sworn was a petition for letters testamentary in the estate of Alfred Fuller, deceased, whereas the fact was, and it is in the knowledge of the court, that the petition called for letters of administration with the will annexed. Q. Have you now, Mr. Foreman, the indictment corrected in that respect? A. Yes. Q. Has it been submitted and voted upon after correction? A. Yes. Q. And it is now returned to this court as the correct indictment? A. Yes." The clerk was thereupon directed to file the indictment, and that the record show that it had been resubmitted. A bench warrant was ordered to issue for the arrest of said J. Ellis Rodley, with bail fixed at $5,000. It was upon the indictment as amended that the defendant was arraigned, pleaded not guilty, and was thereafter tried. He was not arraigned on the indictment prior to its amendment. It appears from the foregoing that there must have been a variance between the indictment as originally presented to the court and the evidence upon which the indictment was found. There is nothing in the law that will prevent the correction of a mere mistake like this, the result, no doubt, of an inadvertence. The defendant is injured in no way by the correction. "There is no doubt that, with leave of the court, an indictment may be amended by the grand jury at any time before the prisoner has pleaded, and before they are discharged." Thomp. & M. Jur. p. 704; Lawless v. State, 4 Lea, 173; State v. Creight, 1 Brev. 169. In the case of Terrill v. Superior Court (Cal.) 60 Pac. 38, the question for determination was whether the court, after demurrer sustained to the indictment, could resubmit the case to the same grand jury that had found the first indictment. It was held that this could not be done under the Code provision cited therein; but the judge who delivered the opinion of the court in the course thereof remarked: "Perhaps, before the defendant has been arraigned, the indictment could be withdrawn, and by leave of the court sent back to the jury for amendment." This is what seems to have been done in the present case, and we can see nothing in it prejudicial to any right of defendant, and nothing of which he can be heard to complain.

3. The defendant made and filed his affidavit, intending to thereby invoke the provisions of section 170, Code Civ. Proc., and have his case tried before a judge other than the regular judge of the court in which the same was pending. The counter affidavits of the district attorney and of the judge before whom the defendant objected to being tried were also filed. The court decided, after reading all said affidavits, that the regular judge was not disqualified to try the case, and refused to secure the services of another judge for that purpose. In this we cannot see that the court erred. There was no objection made by defendant at the hearing to the court considering the affidavit made by the judge as to the condition of his own feelings towards the defendant and his case. It is too late to object to it for the first time on appeal. Higgins v. City of San Diego, 126 Cal. 303, 58 Pac. 700.

4. The challenge to the panel was properly overruled. The number of jurors fixed in the order of the court is not to be increased by the names left in the box at the end of the previous year, but the supervisors are at liberty to select from such names as many as possess the necessary qualifications of jurors and have not served the previous year, and make them part of the list for the current year. Sections 206, 211, Code Civ.

Proc. There was no impropriety in the supervisors estimating the population by the number of votes cast in each district at the last preceding election. We cannot say that this was not the most accurate basis they possessed for such estimate. Section 206, Id. The clerk testified that the 75 ballots or slips drawn from the jury box were folded so as to conceal the names of the persons thereon written. John S. Henrison being one of these names, it follows that his name was duly concealed. There was no substantial departure from the forms prescribed by law in respect to the drawing and return of the jury.

5. The affidavit of the publication of notice of hearing of petition for probate and for letters was properly admitted in evidence as part of the record of the matter in which the perjury is charged to have been committed, and was competent evidence to prove the matters therein stated. Sections 2010, 2011, Code Civ. Proc.; Heflin v. State (Ga.) 14 S. E. 112, 30 Am. St. Rep. 147. The other affidavits used in the probate proceeding were admissible for the same reason.

6. It was competent to put in evidence the testimony of Mrs. Houseworth and Garner, given at the hearing of the probate matter, as well as the conversation of the former with the witness Swearingen, wherein she attempted to persuade said Swearingen for $5,000 to subscribe as a witness the alleged will of the already deceased Fuller, for the reason that all these acts and declarations, taken in connection with the acts and declarations of defendant, tended strongly to show that the defendant, Mrs. Houseworth, and Garner were each working to accomplish one common criminal purpose. Such concert of action on their part would be evidence tending to establish a conspiracy between them by the circumstantial method, which is usually the only way a conspiracy can be established. People v. Bentley, 75 Cal. 407, 17 Pac. 436. Before it was sought to put in evidence the conversation of Mrs. Houseworth with Swearingen, it had been shown that the will was false and fictitious, and had been written by Mrs. Houseworth, and that she was, according to its terms, the beneficiary thereunder, and that the defendant had been endeavoring by improper means to secure a witness to the will after the death of the pretended testator. This was sufficient proof of conspiracy between the defendant and Mrs. Houseworth to make the declarations and acts of the latter done in course of carrying out the common criminal design competent evidence against the former. People v. Lovern, 119 Cal. 88, 51 Pac. 22, 638. Much evidence tending to establish the conspiracy was introduced after the declarations of Mrs. Houseworth, and, taking all the evidence on this subject together, the conspiracy is made to appear beyond any doubt. The order of the proof was in the sound discretion of the trial court, and we see no abuse of such discretion. People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 Pac. 720; Same v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394, 36 Pac. 678. It is particularly urged that the conspiracy could not be proved by the declarations of Mrs. Houseworth; reference being had, doubtless, to her declaration that the defendant was to receive $5,000 for witnessing the will. There was no objection made to the particular portion of the conversation referred to above, but the objection was general to the whole of it. Much of the conversation was competent evidence beyond any question, and if defendant desired those portions of it which tended only to show that the defendant was a party to the conspiracy excluded he should have moved to strike out those portions. The motion that the testimony of Swearingen be stricken from the record was certainly too broad. However, an instruction was given at the request of defendant which perhaps had the same effect as would the granting of a proper motion to strike out as to this evidence. This instruction reads as follows: "You are instructed that the alleged declarations of Mrs. Houseworth to the witness Swearingen cannot be considered by you unless you first find from the evidence, and beyond all reasonable doubt, that there existed a conspiracy to which both defendant and Mrs. Houseworth were parties." In view of this instruction, and the failure to object in the proper time and manner, it is not necessary for us to here determine whether any portion of Mrs. Houseworth's declarations were hearsay evidence of the part that defendant was taking in the conspiracy or not. That portion of Swearingen's testimony wherein he details a conversation with Mrs. Houseworth in which she sought to induce him not to testify before the grand jury that she had offered him $5,000 to sign a will as a witness was properly admitted, because the conspiracy and its purpose were not then accomplished. The object of the conspiracy was to "loot" the estate of the deceased, Fuller. The perjury of defendant and the others in the probate proceeding was only one step to this end. It had been necessary before this to fabricate a will, and it was still necessary for the conspirators to avoid detection, keep themselves out of the state prison, and keep up the deception that they were practicing on the probate court, in order to realize anything from their crimes; and it was with these ends in view, no doubt, that Mrs. Houseworth approached Swearingen on the subject of his testimony before the grand jury. We think, therefore, that what she said and did in that connection was in furtherance of the purpose of the conspiracy, and does not come within those cases which exclude the acts and declarations of one conspirator, done and made after the "common criminal design" is accomplished or abandoned, as against his co-conspirator. Carter v. State, 32 S. E. 347, 106 Ga. 372;

Byrd v. Same, 68 Ga. 661; Scott v. State, 30 Ala. 503; People v. Opie, 123 Cal. 294, 55 Pac. 989. See, also, People v. Ward, 77 Cal. 113, 19 Pac. 373; Same v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 Pac. 1067; O'Neal v. State, 14 Tex. App. 582; McFadden v. State, 28 Tex. App. 241, 14 S. W. 128; Allen v. State, 12 Lea, 424.

7. The defendant, while on the witness stand, was asked by his counsel the following question: "After the death of Mr. Fuller, did you make a statement to any one that this document was in existence; and, if you did, how soon after, and to whom, did you make such statements?" to which the witness answered: "Well, I made the statement to several people. I think I told Mr. White. I told several people right after he died." Following this answer, and without any motion to strike out, the prosecution objected to the evidence as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. After argument, and a recess of the court, this objection was sustained. Waiving the question of whether the evidence is shown to have been excluded, the defendant had already testified to the existence of the will from a time prior to the death of Fuller, and we cannot see how his testimony as to a statement made by him after the death of Fuller, showing the existence of the will, can add anything to the force of his evidence. Certainly, such testimony is inadmissible under the general rule excluding self-serving declarations, and no exception to this rule has been called to our attention under which it might be admitted. For all that appears to the contrary, the defendant may have had the same motive and purpose to manufacture evidence the day after Fuller died that he and his confederates had at any later date to manufacture a will. To make it admissible at all, it must be shown that the corroborating statement sought to be put in evidence was made at a time when defendant had no motive or interest to fabricate such statement. Here, however, there is nothing to show when the criminal design was first conceived. Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 26 Pac. 213; People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85.

8. That the deceased, Fuller, in his lifetime, declared an intention to remember Mrs. Houseworth for the kindness she had shown him, was not competent evidence in this case. The defendant is charged with false swearing as to the execution of the will. The declarations of the deceased are not admissible on questions pertaining solely to the formal execution of the will.

9. The petition for the probate of the will sets forth that petitioner believes the will "to have been wholly written, dated, and signed by said testator." It also states facts showing that the will was executed and attested as wills other than olographic are required by law to be executed and attested. The decree of the court was, in effect, that the will was olographic, and also that it was executed as a nonolographic will should be. Therefore, whatever view we may take as to the sufficiency of the allegation of the petition to show that the will was olographic, the defendant's testimony in the probate court was material to the matter before it beyond any question, and the court at the trial herein properly refused to instruct the jury that it was not material.

10. The defendant was sworn in the probate proceeding in the usual form, as shown by the evidence; but, were it otherwise, it would be no defense in this action. Pen. Code, § 121.

11. The record of the probate proceeding is the evidence upon which we must rely to determine whether the court had jurisdiction. 2 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 933b. The decree admitting the will to probate was placed in evidence, and it contains all the necessary recitals to show that the court had jurisdiction in the matter. Whart. Cr. Ev. § 602a. The petition for probate, filed, as it is shown to have been, gave the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action; and, even if it be admitted that the affidavit of publication of the notice of hearing was defective, the court had the power to hear the evidence as to the will, and permit a new affidavit of publication to be filed thereafter, if necessary. In Smith v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 315, 20 S. W. 707, the jury had not been sworn at the time of the alleged perjury, and it was held that the correct rule is "that, if the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, and the oath is required by law, irregularities in the proceeding will not prevent perjury." The court properly refused to instruct that there was no evidence that the court had jurisdiction of the proceeding.

12. The court refused to give defendant's requested instruction No. 11, which reads as follows: "If you do not believe the testimony given by the witness Garner, or if you are not convinced beyond all reasonable doubt of the truth of what he has testified to, you must acquit the defendant." The witness Garner testified to facts and circumstances tending to show the defendant's guilt, other than the direct evidence he gave of the "falsity of the testimony charged to be perjury." The rule laid down in section 1968, Code Civ. Proc., requiring direct evidence in perjury cases, means that there must be direct evidence only as to the falsity of the testimony charged to be perjury. 2 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 929. Therefore, if the jury believed the direct evidence of Garner given on this point, they might doubt his testimony on other points, and still be entirely satisfied from all the evidence in the case that the defendant was guilty, and thus be warranted in convicting him. The rule in respect to the matter, stated as broadly as could properly be asked, was given by the court in defendant's requested instruction No. 9. We can see no error, therefore, in the refusal to give the offered instruction

No. 11. The same may be said of instruction No. 15, refused by the court, which reads as follows: "If you distrust the testimony of the witness Garner, you must acquit the defendant." The court had already told the jury that "there must be the direct testimony of at least one credible witness, and that testimony, to be sufficient, must be positive, and directly contradictory of the defendant's oath," etc. Here the word "credible" is added to the statute at the request of defendant. Surely, he ought to be satisfied with this. It is not a rule of law that an accomplice is never to be believed, nor is it the rule that he can never be the one witness giving the direct and positive evidence required by section 1968, Code Civ. Proc., in cases of perjury. His credit and the weight of his testimony are questions for the jury (People v. Gibson, 53 Cal. 601) in such cases as in others, except that there is a positive rule of law that the direct evidence of one witness must always be corroborated in perjury cases to warrant conviction.

13. The two instructions given by the court as to the evidence of the defendant's good character were as full and favorable to defendant as he could reasonably ask, and there was no error in refusing to add the third instruction on that subject. Everything stated in the rejected instruction was plainly implied in the two given.

14. The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that the testimony of the witness Wilson as to certain oral admissions of defendant ought to be viewed with caution, and also that the testimony of the witness Swearingen as to alleged oral admissions made by Mrs. Houseworth ought to be viewed in the same way. These two instructions were refused; but the court did give, at the request of defendant, as the record shows, an instruction embodying practically the whole of section 200 of 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, cautioning the jury against testimony of verbal admissions and statements. An instruction in effect the same as the one last referred to was held by this court in Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124, to have been given in disregard of "the provision of the constitution that 'judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.'" The decision referred to was undoubtedly correct, and an instruction of that kind should not be given for the reasons stated in that case. If any instruction is given on the subject of oral admissions, it should be confined as nearly as possible to the language of subdivision 4, § 2061, Code Civ. Proc. However, the defendant cannot be heard to complain of the instruction here, for the reason that it was given at his own request; and, having been so given, it covered the subject treated of in the two instructions refused, and rendered them unnecessary. The defendant is not entitled to an instruction directed to the evidence of a particular witness, and naming him, where a general instruction has been given covering the point sought. People v. Patterson, 124 Cal. 102, 56 Pac. 882. The defendant complains of the instruction, and seems to treat it as having been given of the court's own motion; but a careful inspection of the transcript will show the defendant's mistake.

15. The jury were instructed at some length as to the defendant's right to the benefit of the presumption of innocence in the second and third of the unnumbered instructions and in the tenth and thirty-fifth of the numbered instructions, and the subject did not need the amplification found in the instructions numbered 33 and 34 and refused by the court.

16. The court refused to give the following instruction: "You cannot convict the defendant unless each of you is entirely satisfied from the evidence before you that defendant is guilty beyond all reasonable doubt. In determining the question it is the duty of each juror to decide the matter for himself, and not to compromise or sacrifice his views or opinions of the case in deference to the views or opinions of others." There was no error in refusing this instruction. Juries are impaneled for the purpose of agreeing upon verdicts if they can conscientiously do so. They are admonished at each recess of the court not to form an opinion as to the merits of the case until it shall be finally submitted to them, and when it is so submitted it is the duty of jurors to deliberate and consult together with the view of reaching an agreement if they can without violence to their individual understanding of the evidence and instructions of the court. They should not be lectured by the court to make them strong and steadfast in their individual opinions; neither should they be exhorted to reach an agreement; and, while it is probably true that "each juror must decide the matter for himself," yet he should do so only after a consideration of the case with his fellow jurors; and he should not hesitate to "sacrifice his views or opinions of the case" when convinced that they are erroneous, even though in so doing he defer "to the views or opinions of others." There is a marked distinction between this instruction and the one discussed in People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 495, 55 Pac. 881.

17. Defendant complains that the jury were not instructed, as requested in instruction 39, that a preponderance of evidence would not be sufficient to justify a conviction. Besides instructions given that the burden of proof is on the prosecution, and that the jury must be entirely satisfied of defendant's guilt before they can convict, we find the following in the fourth unnumbered instruction: "If, upon such proof, there is a reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty," etc. This is a very plain statement, many times approved, and certainly it is the equivalent of an instruction that no mere preponderance of evidence would warrant a conviction; and, while the instruction 39 was undoubtedly sound, and ordinarily should be given when requested by the defendant, yet, in view of the very full instructions which were given, substantially covering the important points contained in that instruction, we see no error in its refusal.

18. It was proper to amend defendant's offered instruction 44, as to the corroboration necessary in perjury cases, by striking out the word "strong" before the words "corroborating circumstances." The amendment placed the instruction in accord with the statute. Section 1968, Code Civ. Proc.

19. The court refused to give instruction 45 requested by defendant, which reads as follows: "The defendant cannot be convicted if you do not find from the evidence before you, and beyond all reasonable doubt in your mind, that when he gave the testimony set forth in the indictment he did so with a criminal intent. If, after considering all the evidence in this case, you entertain a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant did give such testimony with a specific criminal intent, then you must return a verdict that he is not guilty." In the fifth unnumbered instruction the court gave the definition of perjury contained in section 118, Pen. Code, and in instruction 50 the jury were told: "But you are required to determine whether or not such testimony was false, and known by the defendant to be false at the time it was delivered, and that said testimony was given willfully, and contrary to the oath he had taken." The words "a specific criminal intent" would need some defining to make them perfectly intelligible to a jury in the connection in which they are used in the rejected instruction. We understand that the "intent to swear falsely" is the "specific criminal intent" that must be shown to establish the crime of perjury. 2 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 1048. If the testimony was "known by the defendant to be false at the time it was delivered," and it "was given willfully, and contrary to the oath he had taken," it would certainly be given with "intent to swear falsely." We think the instructions given on the subject rendered the rejected instruction unnecessary.

20. The court gave two instructions on the subject of corroboration in perjury cases. In instruction 9 the jury was told: "There must be the direct testimony of at least one credible witness, and that testimony, to be sufficient, must be positive and directly contradictory of the defendant's oath. In addition to such testimony, there must be either another such witness or corroborating circumstances established by independent evidence, and of such a character as clearly to turn the scale and overcome the oath of the defendant and the legal presumption of his innocence; otherwise, the defendant must be acquitted." In instruction 17 the court said to the jury: "The additional evidence must be at least strongly corroborative of the testimony of the accusing witness in this case, the witness Garner." In addition to these two instructions, the defendant requested the following: "You are instructed that there must be something in the corroborative evidence which makes the facts sworn to by defendant not true if the corroborative evidence be true also. If the corroboration does not go to that extent, the defendant must be acquitted." There was no error in refusing the instruction last quoted. The former instructions were sufficient on the question of corroboration.

21. Instructions 50, 50½, and 52 are complained of, but the case cannot be reversed on account of the giving of these instructions for several reasons, the first being that the record shows them to have been given at the request of defendant; and we think we should be guided by this record in the matter notwithstanding that in the briefs of both parties these instructions are treated as if not given at defendant's request. Again, the last instruction mentioned is free from error. People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31 Pac. 107. And there is nothing in either of the other instructions on which the case should be reversed, if it is read and construed in connection with all the other instructions given. People v. Chun Heong, 86 Cal. 329, 24 Pac. 1021.

22. The verdict is not contrary to the instructions, nor is it unsupported by the evidence; but, on the contrary, the case made against the defendant was a strong one, as may be seen by a reference to the brief summary of the evidence of the prosecution contained in this opinion. Against this evidence the defendant was compelled to rely almost exclusively on his own uncorroborated testimony and his good character. The jury were the judges of the weight of the evidence, and we see no reason to interfere with their verdict.

23. The defendant excepted to the remark of the assistant district attorney to the jury, which reads as follows: "The jury in the will contest over people's Exhibit A, within an hour after they had retired, brought in a verdict that people's Exhibit A was not a valid will." This statement was improper, and should not have been made; but still we cannot see how the defendant could be injured by it when it was virtually conceded by him at the trial that the will was bogus. When it was sought to be shown that the will was not in the handwriting of the deceased, Fuller, the defendant admitted the fact; and of course this admission involved the signature to the instrument. In addition to this, it was shown by the evidence, without conflict, that the will, including the signature, was in the handwriting of Mrs. Houseworth. This, with the other evidence tending in the same direction, established the fact that "Exhibit A was not a valid will" beyond any question; and the assertion that a jury had so found could add nothing to defendant's burden.

24. Several other exceptions were taken to statements of the prosecuting attorneys in their arguments to the jury, but we see nothing in any of them calling for special notice. It is deemed sufficient to say that they are free from prejudicial error under the recent decision of this court in People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 Pac. 34.

25. A number of objections to the action of the court in refusing instructions have been ignored in this opinion for the reason that, after a careful examination of them, the conclusion was reached that they were entirely devoid of merit. It should not be a matter of great surprise that, where upwards of 50 instructions are requested, some of them should be refused. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

ELLEDGE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LASSEN COUNTY et al. (Sac. 547.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1900.)

CERTIORARI—ORDER MODIFYING JUDGMENT—REVIEW.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, denies a review by writ of certiorari where an appeal may be taken. Section 939 provides that an appeal may be taken from a special order made after judgment. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendants afterwards filed a cost bill, which was stricken out because the judgment made no provision for such costs, and the court then made an order deducting an amount equal to such costs from plaintiff's judgment. Held, that certiorari would not lie to review such order, since it was a special order after final judgment, from which an appeal could be taken.

Department 1.

Certiorari by Grace Elledge against the superior court of the county of Lassen and others. Writ discharged.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for petitioner. Spencer & Raker and H. D. Burroughs, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In an action brought by the petitioner against D. W. Ridenour et al., in the superior court of Lassen county, judgment was entered in his favor for the amount of $290 damages. Thereafter the defendants therein filed a memorandum of costs, amounting to $92. Plaintiff thereupon moved the court to strike this memorandum of costs from its files, upon the ground that, as the judgment made no provision regarding costs, the defendants were not entitled to recover their costs. The court granted this motion, but immediately thereafter, of its own motion, made and caused to be entered the following order: "Ordered that the judgment entered herein be reduced the full amount of defendants' cost bill herein, to wit, ninety-two dollars." The plaintiff has obtained a writ of review for the purpose of having this order annulled, upon the grounds that it was without the power of the court to make it.

The order sought to be annulled was a special order made after final judgment, in direct terms modifying the judgment previously given, and by express provision of the statute is made appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. Although the cost bill is referred to as the basis of its action, the order of the court applies to the judgment, and not to the cost bill. The order could have been reviewed, either upon an appeal taken directly therefrom, independent of an appeal from the judgment, or its correctness could have been determined upon an appeal from the judgment as modified in accordance with its terms. Being an appealable order, it cannot be reviewed upon a writ of certiorari. Id. § 1068. This subject has recently been very fully considered in Southern California Ry. Co. v. Superior Court of San Diego Co., 127 Cal. 417, 59 Pac. 789, and this rule is there specifically declared. The writ is discharged.

GREEN v. BURR. (L. A. 751.)

TROVER AND CONVERSION—TAKING BY SHERIFF—LIABILITY—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—PLEADING—AMENDMENT TO CONFORM TO PROOFS—WHEN ALLOWED.

1. Plaintiff furnished money at the request of H., made through plaintiff's agent, to pay the creditors of a restaurant company, and took a bill of sale of the restaurant property, giving H. a 15-days option to purchase it. H. went into possession as plaintiff's agent, and while he was in possession, and before the expiration of the 15 days, the property was seized by defendant, as sheriff, in attachment against H. by one of his creditors. The party procuring plaintiff to advance the money had been acting for her in investing her money, and she gave him special authority as her agent to purchase the property, and look after her interests in the matter. H. had made declarations that the property belonged to him. Held, in an action against the sheriff to recover the value of the property seized, that plaintiff owned it, and was, therefore, entitled to recover.

2. Where defendant did not move to amend his answer to conform to the proof until after submission of the case to the court,—whether before or after decision not appearing,—and it did not appear that any evidence was excluded because of any defect in the answer, or that he was injured by the want of anything therein, it was not error to refuse his request.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by L. A. Green against John Burr. From an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dillon & Dunning, for appellant. Geo. D. Blake, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The defendant appeals from an order denying a new trial. The action is to recover the value of the furniture and contents of a certain restaurant in the city of Los Angeles, alleged to have been wrongfully converted by defendant. The defendant denies plaintiff's title, and justifies the taking, as sheriff, under a writ of attachment issued in a cause entitled "G. C. De Garmo vs. George F. Harvat," and alleges that the defendant in that action is the owner of the property in controversy. The appellant contends that the findings in favor of plaintiff as to the ownership of the property are not sustained by the evidence. The evidence shows that the property in dispute belonged to a certain restaurant company, of which Harvat was a creditor in a small amount. He assigned his claim to one Clark, who brought suit thereon, and attached the said property. Harvat then, fearing the restaurant owners would be thrown into insolvency, desired to purchase the property in controversy for enough to pay the other creditors of the restaurant 50 per cent. of their claims, which they had agreed to accept in full satisfaction thereof. For lack of funds, Harvat was unable to do this, and so, through his assignee, Clark, who seems to have been a mere agent in the matter, he applied to the plaintiff herein, and she consented to and did put up the money, about $500, to pay the creditors, and took a bill of sale of the property from the owners of the restaurant. The plaintiff then gave Harvat a 15-days option to purchase the property from her for $600. The constable who had the property under attachment and Clark, the plaintiff in the attachment suit, then placed said property in the possession of Harvat as the agent of the plaintiff; and while the property was so in the possession of Harvat, and before the expiration of the 15-days option, the defendant, as sheriff, seized the goods as the property of Harvat in an attachment suit brought against him by one of his creditors. It further appears from the evidence that Clark had previously been acting for the plaintiff in the investment of her money, and she gave him special authority as her agent to purchase the property in question from the restaurant company, and look after her interests in the matter. At the time of the seizure of the property by defendant, Harvat was running the restaurant, and was in possession of the property in litigation herein. The creditors of the restaurant company were settled with, and they are making no claim with reference to the property. The foregoing facts were proven without substantial conflict in the testimony, except that there was evidence tending to show that Harvat, while in possession, had made some declarations of his proprietorship in said property. On the evidence as presented the court was fully warranted in finding that plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time it was seized by defendant. There was nothing tending to show that Harvat, the debtor in the attachment suit, was the owner of the property, except his own declarations to that effect, which seem to have been received in evidence without objection made thereto. As against the other undisputed facts showing that plaintiff had bought and paid for the property, these declarations could have little weight.

The remaining contention of appellant is that the court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to amend his answer to conform to the proofs. It appears from the record that the request to be permitted to amend the answer was not made until after the case was submitted to the court for decision. How long after such submission, or whether the request to amend was made before the case was decided, does not appear. But, aside from this, it does not appear that any evidence was excluded at the trial on account of any defect in the answer. Nor can we see how any prejudice or injury accrued to defendant for want of anything in his answer, or how his situation might be bettered if his answer were in any way changed. The defendant appears to have lost his case for want of evidence, and not on account of any defect in his answer. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

FRANZ v. MENDONCA. (S. F. 1,672.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.)

EASEMENTS—RIGHT OF WAY—DOMINANT ESTATE—NATURE—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—INTERRUPTION—NEW TRIAL—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—FINDING OF FACT.

1. Where plaintiff pre-empted government land, his right of sole possession and use was sufficient estate in him, without a patent, to start the statute of limitations running as to a right of way claimed in behalf of such lands over lands of another.

2. Where a landowner claimed a right of way over lands of another, the fact that a lessee of the dominant estate was at the same time the lessee of the servient estate did not interrupt the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the dominant estate.

3. Where, in an action to enjoin defendant from obstructing plaintiff's right of way across defendant's lands, there was a finding that plaintiff's use of the right of way was permissive only, and the court granted a new trial on the ground that such finding was against the evidence, the order granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, since the question whether the use was adverse was one of fact, and the trial court, not being bound by the rule as to a conflict of evidence, is bound to grant a new trial when a finding of fact is against the weight of evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by Sebastian Franz against Francisco A. Mendonca. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Whaley, for appellant. Reed & Mesbaumer, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiff brought this action to enjoin the defendant from obstructing his private way across the defendant's land and for damages. Upon the trial defendant had findings and judgment. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, his motion was granted, and the defendant appeals from the order granting said motion. Plaintiff in 1858 settled upon and entered a certain quarter section of government land, situate in Washington township, county of Alameda, and in August, 1870, obtained a patent therefor. Subsequently he acquired several other contiguous parcels, and plaintiff's said lands in part adjoin the land of defendant, over which said private way is claimed to exist. Defendant's land is part of a Mexican grant known as the "Vallejo Grant," for which a patent was issued by the United States to Vallejo in 1862; and in February, 1863, Vallejo conveyed the same to Jonas G. Clark. On December 18, 1884, Clark conveyed to Jorgenson, who reconveyed to Clark November 28, 1890, and Clark conveyed to defendant March 22, 1893. Plaintiff's lands lie about a mile and a half northerly from the county road leading from Haywards to Niles, and defendant's land, consisting of a tract of about 300 acres, part of said Mexican grant, lies between plaintiff's land and said highway. The court found that "at various times during the period of thirty-seven years next preceding the commencement of this action, plaintiff has used and traveled over said private road in order to reach his lands from said highway, and return therefrom, for agricultural and pasturage purposes; but said use and travel over said private road by plaintiff was not continuous or with claim of right during said period of thirty-seven years, or during any period of five successive years thereof, but was with the permission of defendant's grantors." The foregoing finding is the only one that need be quoted or specially noticed. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial specified said finding, among others, as not supported by the evidence, and also specified that the decision was against law. The plaintiff testified, in substance, that he lived on the land he entered from 1858 to 1872; that he did some work on the road in 1858, and on the Mendonca land in 1862 and 1863; that from 1862 until he left in 1872 he had to fix the road every spring; that during those years he traveled over it with a team,—two horses and a wagon; that he hauled his grain to Alvarado over this road; that after Decoto station was established he hauled his grain there, and made two trips a day, and could make three; that during all these years he used this road to take his produce out; that the division fence was built between himself and the Mendonca lands a year or two before he left; that "when they built the fence they came up to my house and asked me where I wanted the gate, and I went with them down, and they showed me the gate; and they leave the board on the side, and I fix the gate." He further testified that since 1872 he leased the land every year, and went up there every year four or five times, and followed that road, and that he was first prevented from going over the land in April, 1895.

1. Appellant contends that an adverse use of the way over the Mexican grant would not set the statute in motion until the grant was confirmed and the patent issued; but, as the patent issued the same year the road was made, it may be conceded that the statute did not begin to run in plaintiff's favor prior to 1862.

2. But it is also contended that a way appurtenant to plaintiff's land could not be initiated by adverse use until plaintiff's patent for the dominant estate was issued, which was not until 1870. It is conceded that plaintiff pre-empted his first tract in 1858; that is, his title under the government was initiated that year, and he then had a right of possession, cultivation, and use, good against all, and that was sufficient.

3. It is also contended that in 1866 the plaintiff leased defendant's land and cultivated it for two years, ending in 1868, and that such leasing, possession, and control stopped the running of the statute, and that, if plaintiff now has a prescriptive right, it must have been reinitiated after his tenancy terminated, and continued thereafter for the full term of five years. This may be conceded; but said tenancy ceased in 1868, while the use of the way continued down to the date of the interruption in 1895, so that a new period commenced in 1868, and we do not see that any interruption to the running of the statute occurred afterwards. Certainly the fact that Turkelson, who was plaintiff's tenant in 1877 to 1879, was also the lessee of the servient estate at the same time, could not affect the plaintiff's right. Besides, the period from 1868 to 1877 was more than sufficient for the running of the statute, and to give a prescriptive title, if the other requisite conditions existed.

4. The principal question, however, is suggested by the finding that plaintiff's use of the road "was not with claim of right, * * * but was with the permission of defendant's grantors." In American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 361, 367, Mr. Justice Curry, speaking for the court, said: "In order that the enjoyment of an easement in another's land may be conclusive of the right claimed, it must have been adverse in the legal sense of the term; that is, the right must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land, and uninterrupted. The burden of proving this is on the party claiming the easement. If he leaves it doubtful whether the enjoyment was adverse, known to the owner, and uninterrupted, it is not conclusive in his favor." This case was cited and followed in Water Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 645. In Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 460, 12 Pac. 493, it was said: "To perfect an easement by occupancy for five years, the enjoyment must be adverse, continuous, open, peaceable. It must be adverse, and under claim of legal right so to do, and not by the consent, permission, or indulgence merely of the owner of the alleged servient estate. This is quite obvious in cases where the consent, permission, or license is expressly given. But it is no less true where the permission or license is implied, as it may well be from facts and circumstances under which the use was enjoyed. The question is one for the jury, or for the court sitting as such, to determine as a fact in the light of the relations between the parties and all the surrounding circumstances." As to the facts which are essential to the creation of an easement by prescription there is no controversy. It is upon the facts to be inferred from the use under the circumstances detailed by the witnesses that the battle is waged. In Washb. Easem. (4th Ed.) p. 156, it is said: "And if there has been the use of an easement for twenty years, unexplained, it will be presumed to be under a claim of right, and adverse, and be sufficient to establish a title by prescription, and to authorize the presumption of a grant, unless contradicted or explained." To this statement the author cites a large number of cases from different states. In Cox v. Forrest, 60 Md. 79, the court, in an action to recover damages for obstructing a private right of way, said: "By 'adverse' is meant a user without license or permission, for an adverse right of an easement cannot grow out of a mere permissive enjoyment; the real point of distinction being between a permissive or tolerated user, and one which is claimed as a matter of right. Where one, however, has used a right of way for twenty years, unexplained, it is but fair to presume the user is under a claim of right, unless it appears to have been by permission." Mr. Justice Story, in Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 105, 5 L. Ed. 409, in speaking of the inference to be drawn from possession, said: "Possession per se evidences no more than the mere fact of present occupation by right, for the law will not presume a wrong. From the very nature of the case, therefore, it must depend upon the collateral circumstances what is the quality and extent of the interest claimed by the party, and to that extent only will the presumption of law go in his favor." These cases lay down the general principles by which the question whether the use was adverse should be determined. The question is one of fact for the trial court, and it is the duty of the judge of the trial court to grant a new trial whenever he is satisfied that the verdict or finding is contrary to the weight of the evidence. The rule as to the conflict of evidence does not apply to the trial court. Curtiss v. Starr, 85 Cal. 376, 24 Pac. 806; Bjorman v. Redwood Co., 92 Cal. 500, 28 Pac. 591. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

BRYAN v. ABBOTT et al. (L. A. 784.)

LIENS—IMPROVEMENTS—REPUTED OWNER—NOTICE—INCONSISTENT—AMBIGUOUS—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. A recorded notice of a lien which stated that "S. A. is the name of the reputed owner of the premises," sufficiently named the owner, where S. A. owned the premises, since he could not have been misled by being described as "reputed owner."

2. Where the notice of a lien stated that no time was specified for the commencement or completion of the work, payment to be made upon completion or as required during its progress, and the complaint alleged that no time for said payment was or is stated or set forth in said contract, the complaint was not demurrable for uncertainty or ambiguity, since the law would require payment on completion of the work.

3. Where the lien complaint, to which was attached a diagram of the premises, stated that a contract was for the construction of a sidewalk "in front of and adjoining the lot" described, and the contract stated that the sidewalk was to be constructed "around the premises," etc., a demurrer on the ground of ambiguous description should not be sustained, since defendant, being the owner and occupier of the premises, could not have misunderstood such description.

4. As under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, the court is authorized to take judicial notice of the incorporation of a city, a complaint for a mechanic's lien for building a sidewalk, describing the property as situated in a certain city, is not defective, in not stating that said property is in an incorporated city; Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, providing for a lien for improving streets or sidewalks in front of any lot in an incorporated city.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Solon Bryan against Seth Abbott and Frances Bill. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. D. Jordan and Eugene Daney, for appellant. Sam Ferry Smith and McDonald & McDonald, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Action brought to enforce a lien for work and materials in laying cement sidewalk and curb, and constructing cement steps on the sidewalk leading up to the doorways. Defendants severally demurred to the second amended complaint, the demurrers were sustained, and, plaintiff failing to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered, and plaintiff appeals. The contract was made, the work performed, and notice of lien filed by William McDonald, who assigned his claim and demand to the plaintiff. The demurrer is general and special.

1. The notice or claim of lien stated "that Seth Abbott is the name of the reputed owner of said premises, and caused and requested said Wm. McDonald to perform said labor and furnish said materials"; and the complaint alleges "that at all the times herein mentioned said defendant Seth Abbott was the owner and reputed owner and in possession of, and personally occupied, the following described real property" (describing it). Respondent contends that the recorded notice of lien is insufficient because it does not state the name of the owner of the premises sought to be charged with the lien. It is sufficient if the name of the reputed owner only is given. Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 178, 184, 41 Pac. 873. The case of Pavement Co. v. Lyons, 117 Cal. 212, 43 Pac. 1097, cited by respondent, does not either directly or indirectly hold that the recorded notice of lien must state the name of the owner; but the reasoning of the case and the conclusion reached is entirely consistent with Corbett v. Chambers, supra, where it was said: "The provision therein that the claimant shall give the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, implies that, if he does not know the name of the owner, he may state this fact, and perfect his lien without naming an owner (Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 231), and also that, if, in good faith, he gives the name of a reputed owner, he shall not lose his lien if he shall afterwards ascertain that some other person was the owner." Here the demurrer admits that Seth Abbott, who was described in the notice as the "reputed owner," is the "owner" of the premises sought to be charged with the lien; and if Seth Abbott, as owner, examined the records in the recorder's office, as the law presumes he did, the false description, "reputed owner," could hardly lead him to doubt his identity.

2. The notice of lien, after describing the work, stated there was "no time specified for the commencement or completion of the work; * * * payment to be made in U. S. gold coin upon completion of the work, or as required in its progress." Attached to the complaint, and made part thereof, is a copy of the notice of lien, and in the complaint it is alleged "that no time for said payment was or is stated or set forth in said contract or agreement." It is contended that the allegations of the complaint are inconsisent with the notice of lien attached as an exhibit, and that the complaint is therefore demurrable for uncertainty or ambiguity. I think no one could be deceived or misled in this particular. The allegation in the complaint is that no time for payment was or is "stated or set forth" in the contract. That is literally true, though the law construes the contract to require payment upon the completion of the work, and therefore the time of payment; though not the date, is fixed.

3. The complaint states that the contract was for the construction of a cement sidewalk and cement curb "in front of and adjoining the lot" described, while the contract set out in the claim of lien was to construct a sidewalk and curb "around that certain premises," etc.; and respondent makes the point that the complaint is uncertain in this respect. A diagram of the property is attached to the complaint, showing the curb and sidewalk along the side and across the end of the property, being all of it that bordered on any street. We would not like to say that the defendant, the owner and occupier of the property, misunderstood the expression "around" as here used, or had any doubt as to its meaning. The defendant had personal knowledge of the work done, and cannot avail himself of a demurrer upon the ground that the description of the work is ambiguous. Doe v. Sanger, 78 Cal. 150, 20 Pac. 366.

4. Section 1191, Code Civ. Proc., provides for a lien for improving the street or sidewalk, etc., in front of "any lot in any incorporated city or town," and it is objected that in the notice of lien and complaint it is not stated that said property is in an "incorporated city or town." The property is described as "situate in the city of San Diego, county of San Diego, state of California," and the court will take judicial notice that the city of San Diego is incorporated. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875; Diggins v. Hartshorne, 108 Cal. 157, 41 Pac. 283. The judgment should be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: COOPER, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

MARR v. RHODES. (S. F. 1,562.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1900.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CROPS—ESCROWS—SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM—AMEND-MENT—CONTINUANCE.

1. Defendant contracted with plaintiff to exchange his fruit farm for certain real estate belonging to plaintiff, and deeds were made out and delivered in escrow, to be delivered to the parties when the title to the properties should be made satisfactory. Thereafter defendant recommended to plaintiff that the person then in charge of the orchard was a competent person to continue in charge thereof, and informed such person that thereafter he would be working for plaintiff instead of defendant; and bills for the expense of carrying on the orchard were sent to plaintiff directly or through defendant, the bills being paid by plaintiff. Thereafter, and prior to the delivery of the deeds, a crop of prunes growing on the orchard were prepared for market and sold by defendant, who refused to pay over the proceeds to plaintiff. Subsequently the deeds were delivered. Held that, the delivery of the deeds relating back to the date of their execution, and plaintiff having been put in possession of the premises and having defrayed the expense of the crop, he was entitled to the proceeds thereof.

2. Where, during trial, it appeared that defendant was entitled to a set-off which he could not avail himself of under his plea, the court should have permitted an amendment.

3. If, by reason of an amendment to defendant's plea during trial, plaintiff is taken by surprise, and requires further time to prepare to meet the defense, a continuance may be granted, or such terms may be imposed as are reasonable under the circumstances.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; A. S. Kittredge, Judge.

Action by Ben. C. Marr against M. G. Rhodes. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. D. Wright, for appellant. Archer & Archer, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. Prior to September 10, 1895, the appellant was the owner of a tract of land in Santa Clara county containing about 20 acres on which there was a fruit orchard, and respondent was the owner of some improved property in Riverside county under rental, and some unimproved property in Los Angeles county. At that time the parties agreed upon the exchange of their properties, the appellant selling his tract of land in Santa Clara county to the respondent, and the respondent selling his Riverside and Los Angeles property to the appellant, and also assigning to appellant certain certificates of mining stock, and a payment in cash of $750, as the difference between the properties; and a written agreement was entered into between the parties, and at the same time the lease of the Riverside property was assigned to the respondent. Deeds were made by the respective parties conveying the respective pieces of property according to said agreement, which deeds were left in the hands of C. D. Wright, to be delivered when the title to said respective pieces of property should be made satisfactory. After the execution of the papers and the delivery of the deeds in escrow, the parties on the same day went upon the property in Santa Clara county, and the appellant pointed out and explained to the respondent what he should know concerning the orchard property in question, as the respondent did not live in California, but in Illinois. The appellant also at the same time recommended one Rose, who had previously cultivated and cared for the orchard under his (appellant's) employment, as a good and competent man to look after and cultivate the place for the respondent; and it was agreed by the parties at the time that appellant was to pay the taxes on the Los Angeles and Riverside property, and respondent was to pay the taxes and expenses on the Santa Clara property, which was done. The expenses of cultivating and caring for the orchard were to be paid by the respondent. Shortly after this, the appellant saw Rose, the man whom he had recommended, and informed him of the exchange of properties, and that thereafter he would be working for Mr. Marr, and not for himself, and directed him (Rose) to attend well to the orchard, and that expenses would be paid by Mr. Marr. From that time Rose understood that he was working for Marr, and not for Rhodes; and the bills for the expense of caring for the orchard were sent to Marr, either directly or through Rhodes, which bills Marr paid. Some hitch occurred, causing delay in passing the title of the properties sold to the appellant, so that the deeds were not delivered to the respective parties until December 24, 1896. In the meantime a crop of prunes, grown on the orchard in question, were prepared for market, and in November, 1896, were sold by appellant for $1,089.95, and, on refusing to pay over this sum to the respondent, this action was brought to recover the same. The answer denies that the plaintiff was the owner or in possession of the prunes in question, and avers that the defendant had said crop of prunes on hand, which was the product of the orchard for the year 1896, which crop he sold for the sum stated; but denies that he received said sum to or for the use or benefit of the plaintiff, or to or for the use of any other person than said defendant. The court found in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment was entered accordingly, from which judgment, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

When all the conditions of the agreement between the parties had been complied with, and the deeds delivered, they related to the day of their execution, and the rights of the parties existed just as if the deeds had been fully delivered on the day of their date. McDonald v. Huff, 77 Cal. 279, 19 Pac. 499. Besides, here the plaintiff was put in possession of the premises on which the prunes were grown, and defrayed the expenses of caring for and gathering the crop. The court, therefore, correctly held that the plaintiff was the owner of the crop of prunes, and entitled to the proceeds thereof.

It developed during the progress of the trial, by the testimony of the defendant, that he had paid out for labor and supplies in raising the crop of prunes the sum of $278.64, and the defendant sought to have this considered as an offset against the amount of the proceeds of the sale of said prunes. The court held that under the pleadings the defendant could only deduct such expenses as he was put to in marketing the prunes, but the claim for labor and materials in connection with raising the prune crop could not be considered, inasmuch as the answer contained no plea of such offset or counterclaim; whereupon counsel for defendant moved the court for leave to amend the answer of defendant by setting up an offset in his favor against the plaintiff. This motion the court denied, to which ruling the defendant duly excepted. We think the court should have allowed the defendant to amend his answer to enable him to prove facts which would have constituted an offset or defense to plaintiff's demand, as proposed; and if, by reason of such amendment, the plaintiff would have been taken by surprise, and required further time to prepare to meet the defense, the case could have been continued, or such terms imposed as might seem just under the circumstances. Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 321; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786. In the latter case the court, in its opinion, says: "It can very rarely happen that a court will be justified in refusing a party leave to amend his pleading so that he may properly present his case, and obviate any objection that the facts which constitute his cause of action or his defense are not embraced within the issues, or properly presented by his pleading." See, also, Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 33 Pac. 86. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded.

IRRIGATION — CONTRACT — CONSTRUCTION — BREACH — MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

1. Defendant, in consideration of being allowed to construct an irrigation ditch across plaintiffs' lessor's lands, contracted to allow them the use of water on the lands on the most favorable conditions that they allowed the use to others, which contract was recorded. Plaintiffs' lease gave them all water rights of the lessor, and the amount of water flowing in the ditch above that absolutely sold was sufficient for plaintiffs' needs, but defendant refused plaintiffs the right to use the water on the ground the water had previously been applied for for temporary use by others. Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to damages, since the lessor had given consideration for the right to use the water, and others desiring it, having notice of plaintiffs' right, could not claim priority.

2. In an action by a tenant of land against the owner of an irrigation ditch for breach of a contract to deliver water, the measure of damage was the difference between the rental value of the land with and without water.

Action by William A. Pallett and others against Simon J. Murphy. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Works & Lee, for appellant. H. S. Van Dyke and J. S. Chapman, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of the failure of the defendant to supply water to lands occupied by them as lessees. The plaintiffs recovered judgment, and this appeal is taken therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial.

The principal question arises upon the construction of a contract executed by and between Charles Prager and others, the owners of the Rancho Paso de Bartolo, and the appellant, Simon J. Murphy, whereby the owners of said rancho granted to Murphy a right of way for a ditch or conduit over the same for the conveyance of water for the purposes of irrigation, the plaintiffs herein being lessees of said rancho, or portions thereof, and contending that the terms and conditions of said grant entitled them, as such lessees under the terms of their lease, and the circumstances alleged in their complaint, to be supplied by defendant with water for the irrigation of said leased lands; and that they suffered damage by the failure and refusal of defendant to furnish the water demanded by them in the sum of \$1,552. Said contract for the right of way for said ditch is set out in full in the complaint. It was made on May 30, 1890, and was duly recorded. The right of way thereby granted to Murphy, his heirs and assigns, was specifically defined as to location, its width fixed at 1 rod, and its length at about 23.123 feet. The right was given the grantee to enter upon said rancho for the purpose of constructing the ditch, and afterwards for the purpose of repairs or doing any necessary work thereon, and specified the consideration of one dollar. Said contract further provided as follows: "It is further agreed and stipulated that the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, hereby agree that the granting of the right of way herein is a part of the consideration of this indenture; and the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, in consideration of the same, agree that they will always allow the use of water for land on the Rancho Paso de Bartolo upon the lowest terms and most favorable conditions that they allow the use of water to others." A large portion of the lands leased to the plaintiffs were below defendant's ditch, and could be irrigated therefrom, and from no other source, and their lease contained this clause: "The lessor herein also leases, together with the lands hereinbefore described, all such water rights as may be appurtenant to said lands; but the said lessor, or his successors, shall not be liable for any water rates that might be charged for the use of water from any company or companies supplying water to said lands, but such charges are to be met by the said lessees herein." It is not seriously questioned but that plaintiffs had, under this lease, whatever right to demand from defendant water for the purpose of irrigating the leased land that the indenture for the right of way secured to the owners of the lands over which it was granted. Plaintiffs' lease was executed May 2, 1894, and was for the term ending December 31, 1894. On May 12th the plaintiffs demanded of the defendant the use of water upon lands described in the complaint upon the terms and conditions stipulated in said indenture, and offered to comply with all the terms and conditions imposed thereby upon the owners of the land. Defendant refused to comply with this demand, giving as a reason therefor, in substance, that prior to this demand he had promised all the water to other parties; and for that reason, and no other, did not comply with the demand. The court found that during the irrigating season of 1894 there were 300 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, flowing in said ditch, and being managed, controlled, and distributed by the defendant; that of said quantity about 60 inches were required to supply purchasers of absolute water rights, and that the remainder was amply sufficient for the irrigation of the lands leased by plaintiffs, and for which water was demanded. Some extracts from the testimony of Mr. Reed, defendant's agent who had been in charge of the ditch and water from the time the ditch was constructed, will give a clearer idea of the situation, and of defendant's contention. He testified that up to the year 1894 perhaps a thousand acres, some wholly and some partially, had been supplied from the system; that portions of the lands leased by plaintiffs had been supplied the previous year; that defendant's water supply had been disposed of first to actual purchasers of water, and the surplus to parties who wished it; that they sold water rights at so much an inch with their own land, and to other parties so many inches or parts of inches, absolute sale, for specified land, and he thought about 60 inches had been disposed of in that way; and that the balance of the water had been supplied to the lands of people who applied for it temporarily, and generally in the order of their application. "If any one made application for a run of water, it was given to him, if we had it." That the grantors of the right of way for defendant's ditch acquired some right to the use of water to be furnished by the defendant from his ditch would appear to be incontrovertible. The ditch traversed their lands for the distance of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and occupied nearly 9 acres of land. It was agreed and stipulated by the party of the second part, the defendant, his heirs and assigns, that the granting of said right of way "is a part of the consideration of this indenture, and the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, in consideration of the same" agreed to confer some right, benefit, or privilege upon the grantors, and expressed the same in the following language: "That they will always allow the use of water for land on the Rancho Paso de Bartolo upon the lowest terms and most favorable conditions that they allow the use of water to others." It is argued by appellant that "the conditions upon which water might be demanded by the plaintiffs' lessors is that upon which other consumers were allowed the use of water." But this construction puts the grantors of the right of way in the same category with others who paid no consideration for a right to the use of water, and gives the grantors nothing for the concession of a valuable and essential right of way. That the grantee would "always allow" the grantor and his heirs and assigns "the use of water" is as much a part of the covenant as that which relates to the compensation, and must be given its proper effect. It was a promise in advance of the construction of the ditch for a valuable consideration, made in writing, and recorded; and all others desiring to use water from that ditch were charged with notice of the plaintiffs' rights, and could not claim priority over them. It is not contended by respondents that the absolute sales of water by the defendant to the extent of 50 or 60 inches was a violation of his covenant with the owners of the ranch. Plaintiffs were interested only in the supply for their leased lands for that year, and were not authorized to litigate for their lessors questions in which they had no interest. There was enough water flowing in the ditch, aside from said 50 or 60 inches, to have supplied the demand of the plaintiffs; and it is, therefore, not necessary to consider the extent to which the defendant might sell absolute water rights without violating his covenant, nor the quantity of water which the grantors of the right of way, or those claiming under them, might lawfully demand under all conceivable circumstances. The case here is much stronger than Merrill v. Irrigation Co., 112 Cal. 426, 44 Pac. 720. There the plaintiff conveyed to the defendant a right of way across her land for a water pipe for a nominal consideration, "but the real inducement for the conveyance was an understanding [not in writing] that plaintiff could have water from defendant's pipe to irrigate her land." Defendant furnished water for a time, and then extended its pipe, and sold its water to others, and refused to furnish the plaintiff needed water, though requested so to do. Mandamus to compel the defendant to furnish water was sustained.

The evidence introduced by the plaintiffs to ascertain the amount of their damages was based upon the theory that the true measure of damages in such cases is the difference between the rental value of the land with and without water for irrigation. Appellant contends that such is not the true rule, and that the evidence admitted was incompetent. That plaintiffs leased the land with the understanding and belief that it would be supplied with water is apparent from the provisions of the lease upon that subject. The refusal of the defendant to furnish water to the plaintiffs did not abrogate the lease, nor deprive the plaintiffs of all use of the land. They remained in possession, and were obliged to pay the stipulated amount of rent, and had all the benefit of the leased land that they could have without water for irrigation. The evidence objected to and received by the court was confined to the rental value of the land with and without water for irrigation. This was the true rule. Evidence as to the value of a possible crop that might be grown with the use of water would be as purely speculative as could well be imagined; while the rental value of land in communities where for many years portions of the land are leased or occupied without the possibility of irrigation, and other portions are leased or occupied with water for irrigation, fixes a standard for the estimation of damages in cases such as this as nearly accurate as it is possible to devise. Appellant has not cited any authorities upon this question, nor made any reply to the argument of respondents. In 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 611, it is stated in the text that, "where the damages may be estimated in more than one way, that mode should be adopted which is most definite and certain" (citing many cases). In Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117, Christianity, J., speaking for the court, said: "Where elements of certainty are lacking by which damages can be accurately measured, resort must be had to such principle or basis of calculation applicable to the circumstances of the case as will be most likely to approximate certainty, and which may serve as a guide in making the most probable estimate of which the nature of the case will admit." The court did not err in receiving the evidence, and the finding as to the amount of the damages is justified by the evidence.

It is further contended by appellant that the findings are not justified by the evidence. But counsel say that "there is no conflict whatever as to the manner of furnishing the water, or of the reason for not supplying the water to the plaintiffs"; so it is apparent that the supposed insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings is but an attack upon the legal construction placed by the court below upon the covenant contained in the indenture. I think the findings amply sustained by the evidence, and that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C., COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MURPHY v. FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 794.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1900.)²

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — MORTGAGE OF ESTATE PROPERTY—FORECLOSURE—APPROPRIATION OF PROCEEDS—VALIDITY OF FORECLOSURE SALE—APPEAL—NEW TRIAL.

1. Where a debtor of an executor knowingly receives a part of the money borrowed by the latter on estate property in payment of the executor's individual indebtedness, the creditor holds such money in trust for a devisee who is injured thereby.

2. Where an executor mortgages estate property to a bank under order of court for the purpose of borrowing money to pay estate debts, and the money is paid to the executor, but a portion thereof is appropriated by the executor, and knowingly received by the bank, in payment of an individual debt of the executor, and the mortgage is afterwards foreclosed, and the land sold to the bank, the wrongful receipt of the money will not render the sale void.

3. A mortgage of land, part of a decedent's estate, given by the executor by order of court for money borrowed for the payment of debts, is not void, as depriving a devisee of a vested right in the property, because St. 1887, p. 115, authorizing the mortgage of such property, was not enacted till after the testator's death, since Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1516, 1563, making testator's real estate subject to sale to pay his debts, was in force at his death, and the mortgage was but a change in form of the debt, and not an additional burden, though the interest was increased thereby.

4. Where the complaint, in an action to quiet title, does not ask for general relief, and the evidence does not authorize the relief prayed, but shows that certain money is held by defendant in trust for plaintiff, the court, on appeal, cannot decree the payment of such sum under the pleadings, but will remand the case for a new trial, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his pleadings.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Alice Winston Murphy against the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. Albert M. Stephens and Stephens & Stephens, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to quiet title. Plaintiff is one of 10 children of William H. Winston, who died testate in May, 1886. In June, 1886, his surviving widow, Mary E. Winston, was appointed executrix. Plaintiff is a devisee under the will of deceased, and claims as such. She brings this action to quiet her title to an undivided one-eleventh interest in a certain tract of land in Los Angeles county, as property of the Winston estate. The judgment was that plaintiff is the owner in fee of an undivided one-eleventh interest in the property in question; that defendant has no right or interest in said one-eleventh interest; and that plaintiff's interest

"is subject to all lawful claims that may be made thereon in the course of the further administration of the estate of said William H. Winston, which is now uncompleted." The appeal is from this judgment, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The testator made certain specific bequests to plaintiff and other heirs at law, and provided that, after the legacies mentioned in the will were paid, the residue of the property should be equally divided between the testator's wife and children, share and share alike. The court found the following facts: That plaintiff is the owner of an undivided one-eleventh interest in the land described in the complaint, and that defendant's claim thereto is without right; that in November, 1891, the executrix filed her petition for an order authorizing her to mortgage the real estate in dispute; the petition showed that of the money coming into her hands all had been disbursed by the executrix in payment of debts of the deceased, expenses of administration, payment of the legacies, and family allowance, and other costs and charges against said estate; that certain exempt personal property was set aside to the widow, and there remained belonging to the estate two old mules, two young mules and one colt, valued at $500. The petition showed accrued liabilities amounting to $21,052.38; and debts, expenses, and charges to accrue, $28,247.70; total, $49,300.08. The petition was granted to the extent of authorizing the mortgage for $45,000, and such mortgage was executed to defendant bank on December 16, 1891; and on December 1, 1896, there was due and unpaid thereon $63,081.64. Foreclosure followed, and in due course, in June, 1898, a sheriff's deed, granting the premises to defendant as purchaser, and the land has been in defendant's possession ever since, claiming under this deed. No question arises as to the form of the proceedings to mortgage or the sale on foreclosure. There has been no final account or settlement of the estate or distribution, and the court found that there is no property of the estate with which to pay to plaintiff her legacy, and the executrix is insolvent, and was serving without bonds. At the time this mortgage was executed the executrix owed the defendant in her individual capacity $33,347.03, which was made up of $24,000 and accrued interest, being money borrowed by her from defendant some years before the probate mortgage was executed, and she used this money to purchase the entire interest of six adult children in the estate; and the personal indebtedness of the executrix also included the further sum of $1,175 borrowed from defendant by her on personal account, for which she had given her note. The mortgage was executed by the executrix as such, and by three of the adult heirs, who had not sold their interest to Mrs. Winston, and by her individually; thus including ten-elevenths of the interest in the property. The court found that of the $45,000 borrowed by the mortgage the bank paid her only $7,329.97, and applied $4,323 in satisfaction of its own claim against the estate, which was justly due the bank, and credited the balance, namely, $33,347.03, in payment of the personal debt above referred to, due it from the executrix; that the executrix paid out of this $7,329.97 the legacies of two brothers of plaintiff, amounting to $6,900, including three years' interest. The evidence was that the $45,000 was passed to the credit of the executrix on the books of the bank on the day the mortgage was executed and delivered, and on the same day she gave the bank her checks to pay her individual indebtedness of $33,347.03, above stated, and the allowed claim of the defendant, $4,323, leaving a balance to her credit of $7,329.97.

1. The written opinion of the learned trial judge printed in the briefs discloses the theory on which his decision rests, and it was that the mortgage money was impressed with a trust, and its application to pay the personal debt of the executrix was a breach of trust on her part; that the defendant had notice of the fact that the money it received was held by the executrix in trust, and could not be applied to the payment of her individual debt; and that, therefore, the mortgage was void as to plaintiff. I think the facts warranted the trial court in concluding that the defendant had knowledge that the money it received on the checks of the executrix, drawn upon this mortgage loan, belonged to the estate, and that in receiving it to pay the individual debt of the executrix the defendant became a party to the violation of the trust, and acquired no right to the money it received from her so far as plaintiff is concerned, and plaintiff's right to the money was unaffected by the mortgage or by the payment to defendant. But it does not follow that the deed under which defendant claims title is void, or that the proceedings by which it acquired title can be set aside or annulled upon the pleadings and evidence now before us. The petition showed legitimate charges against the estate amounting to more than $45,000. The money borrowed passed to the credit of the executrix, and was under her control as executrix. The transaction was fair and open, so far as the evidence shows, and the mortgage was a valid lien, unless void for the reason next to be noticed. It was in the application of the money thus borrowed, and not in the execution of the mortgage or the sale under foreclosure, that an implied or constructive trust arose under which defendant must account. The title to the land is now in defendant.

2. Respondent contends that the mortgage was void as to plaintiff because it deprived her of vested rights. The testator died in 1886, and the act authorizing the mortgage was passed March 15, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 115), and was an act adding a new article to the Code of Civil Procedure relating to mortgages and leases of real property of decedents. The sections relating to mortgages are 1577 and 1578. The proceedings to mortgage the property being regular and conformable to the statute, its provisions need not be set forth. Respondent relies upon Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 179. Upon the authority of that case, it was held in Re Packer's Estate, 125 Cal. 396, 58 Pac. 59, that under section 1537, Id., as amended in 1893, the real estate of the intestate could not be sold where the petition showed nothing more than that a sale would be for "the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate and those interested therein," so as to affect the title of an heir that had vested prior to the passage of the act; there being no debts or charges on the estate. Brenham v. Story decided that upon the death of the ancestor the heir at once becomes vested with the full property, subject only to liens then existing or created by statute then in force. See cases cited in Re Packer's Estate, supra. In the present case plaintiff took subject to such charges on the estate as the law authorized at the death of her testate. These were "debts of the deceased, the expenses of administration, and the allowance to the family." Section 1516, Code Civ. Proc. "The estate, real or personal, given by will to legatees or devisees, is liable for the debts, expenses of administration, and family expenses, in proportion to the value or amount of the several devises or legacies." Section 1563, Id. All the property of a decedent shall be chargeable as above stated, and "may be sold as the court may direct, in the manner prescribed in this chapter." Section 1516, supra. There was therefore authority of law for disposing of the property for the purposes named, namely, to pay debts of the deceased, expenses of administration, family allowance, and legacies. The real property belonging to the estate could be sold to provide money to discharge the liabilities above enumerated. The title of the devisees under the will, "though a vested estate in a general sense, was incumbered by the lien created by the testator in his lifetime, and by the law at his decease, and was therefore a qualified, though a vested, interest" (Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. Ed. 542); and plaintiff took her interest subject to the power of the probate court to sell the property for the purpose of paying the charges or liens resting against it. To authorize the mortgage of the property for the express purpose of raising money with which to pay these charges is but to change the form of the lien, and adds no new burden not already borne by the property, or to which the property may be subjected under the law as it existed when the testator died. It is true, as is claimed, that the mortgage, under the statute, may bear a greater rate of interest than the legacies may bear. But the increased rate of interest allowed by law is an incident of the power by which the burden or lien already on the property may be changed by changing the form of the statutory burden or lien to a mortgage lien. It does not affect the question of power, nor can it reasonably be said to be a new burden. Presumably the mortgaged property would have a market value greater than the mortgage debt, for the lender would rarely loan up to the full cash value. But the mortgage is not a sale, and the creditors may at any time petition to sell and pay the mortgage, and they would thus have an opportunity to realize the margin of value above the mortgage debt; and, if a sale could not be made for an amount in excess of the loan, it would show that the estate had realized on the mortgage all the property was worth in the market, and creditors would have no cause of complaint, for no deficiency judgment can be entered. The mortgagee must look alone to the property. St. 1887, supra. We think that within the limitations placed by law upon the power to sell to pay charges against the estate, as the law existed at the decedent's death, the court may, on cause shown as required by the statute, authorize the mortgage, whether the decedent died before or after the passage of the act of 1887. This view of the statute would often save the estate from forced sale and consequent sacrifice; and, under the wisely exercised discretion of the court, would result in benefit to the interests it was designed to conserve. Cases where probate mortgages have been upheld, where given under sections 1577 and 1578, are the following: Thomas v. Parker, 97 Cal. 456, 32 Pac. 562; Stow v. Schiefferly, 120 Cal. 609, 52 Pac. 1000; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 54 Pac. 254; East v. Steele, 127 Cal. 202, 59 Pac. 585. Upon the general question of the power of the legislature to authorize the mortgaging of estates of decedents, see Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) pp. 115-124; 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 345; Woerner, Guardianship, § 86.

Our opinion is that the court erred in deciding that plaintiff owns an undivided interest in the land. We think, however, that the money received by defendant in payment of the individual debt of the executrix was a trust fund, as to which defendant must account to the estate to the extent of plaintiff's right thereto. What that right is can be determined only after an accounting is had, and the estate is in a condition to be closed. As the complaint now stands, it is a simple action to quiet title, without even a prayer for general relief, and proceeds on the theory that plaintiff owns a definite interest in the land. There is no allegation in the complaint that would support a judgment against defendant for any definite sum of money, or for an accounting to the estate. The evidence discloses an entirely different state of facts from that sued upon. This court can do no more than reverse the judgment and remand the cause, with leave to plaintiff to take such further proceedings as she may be advised.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with leave to plaintiff to proceed further in the case as she may be advised.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. SOUTHERN PAC.
CO. (S. F. 1,664.)¹

TAXATION—POWERS OF BOARD OF EQUALIZATION—INCREASE IN ASSESSMENT—EVIDENCE OF VALUE—NECESSITY.

Pol. Code, § 3673, authorizes boards of equalization to increase or lower the entire assessment roll so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained therein, and section 3677 provides that the assessor and any deputy whose testimony is needed must be present, and may make any statement or introduce witnesses on questions before the board, and section 3679 declares that the board must use the abstract of mortgages prepared by the county recorder, and other information it may gain from the records of the county recorder or elsewhere. Held, that the plaintiff, as a board of equalization, had no power, in the absence of evidence of the value of defendant's property, to raise defendant's assessment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by the city of Oakland against the Southern Pacific Company. From an order denying a new trial, and from a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Dow, for appellant. H. S. Brown, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover taxes claimed to be due plaintiff by defendant upon property owned by it on the first Monday of March, 1894. Findings were filed, and judgment entered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The amount of taxes that were due by defendant, according to the assessment as made by the city assessor, at the rate as fixed by the proper authorities, has been paid, and therefore the same is not involved in this action. The council of plaintiff, sitting as a board of equalization, after notice to defendant, but without evidence or testimony of any kind as to the value of defendant's property described in its assessment, increased and raised the assessment as made by the assessor $681,500, which amount was, by resolution, directed to be added to the assessed valuation of the property which had been so assessed by the assessor. The main question in the case is as to whether or not the board of equalization had power to so increase the assessment without hearing or taking any evidence whatever. The board of equalization, being an inferior tribunal or body created by statute, has such jurisdiction and powers as are given to it by statute, and none others. The powers of the board in regard to the equalization of taxes are prescribed by the Political Code, § 3672 et seq. It is provided in section 3673: "The board has power after giving notice in such manner as it may by rule prescribe, to increase or lower the entire assessment roll or any assessment contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said roll, and make the assessment conform to the true value of such property in money." Section 3677: "During the session of the board the assessor and any deputy whose testimony is needed must be present, and may make any statement, or introduce and examine witnesses, on questions before the board." It is, by section 3678, made the duty of the recorder annually to transmit to the assessor a complete abstract of all mortgages, deeds of trust, contracts, and other obligations by which any debt is secured, remaining unsatisfied on the records of his office, not barred by the statute of limitations, on the first Monday of March of each year. Section 3679: "The board must use the abstract, and all other information it may gain from the records of the county recorder or elsewhere, in equalizing the assessment of the property of the county, and may require the assessor to enter upon the assessment book any property which has not been assessed." The board of equalization, in passing upon a question as to whether an assessment is too high or too low, acts in a judicial capacity, and its decision is an adjudication, and as clearly so as a judgment for the recovery of the tax. People v. Goldtree, 44 Cal. 325.

The assessor is the officer expressly authorized by law to fix the value of all property for the purposes of taxation. His valuation is presumed to be correct, but the sections of the Code cited provide a remedy for the correction of errors of judgment or mistakes made by him in his valuations. He is not required to hear evidence, but must use his best judgment in the first place, and fix the actual cash value of the property according to the rules laid down for his guidance. In so doing he should use his knowledge of values and of comparative values, with the aim and purpose of assessing all property at its full cash value, no matter who the owner thereof may be. The legislature evidently intended to provide, not a tribunal to reassess the property, but a body clothed with the authority to hear and determine if the assessor has equally and impartially performed his duty. The board so created has not the power, of its own volition, and on its opinion or the opinion of its members, without hearing evidence, to reassess the property. If it had such power, there should be some tribunal to correct the assessments so made by the board. In the early case of People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 112, it is said: "When the party interested appears in answer to the notice or summons, he is entitled to be informed of the matters which he may be required to meet; and until a case be established authorizing an addition to be made to the assessed valuation of the property, he will have nothing to rebut, but may rest securely upon the assessed valuation. The board have no more right to add to the assessed valuation of the property, without evidence authorizing them to do so, than a court or jury have to find facts and determine the rights of litigants without evidence. If boards of equalization may arbitrarily, and of their own mere caprice, increase the assessed valuation of property, then they possess a power without prescribed limits which may be used for purposes of the grossest oppression and injustice." The above decision was made under the revenue act of 1861 (St. 1861, p. 427), which provided: "The board of equalization shall have power to determine all complaints made in regard to the assessed value of any property, and may change and correct any valuation, either by adding thereto or deducting therefrom, if they deem the sum fixed in the assessment roll too small or too great, whether said sum was fixed by the owner or the assessor." The act of 1861 would seem to give the board more extensive powers than any change in the section has since given it. When the Codes were adopted, the substance of the act of 1861 in regard to powers of the board was enacted in section 3673, Pol. Code, and read: "The board has power to determine all complaints in regard to the assessed value of property, and may, except as prohibited in this title, correct any valuation by adding or deducting such sum as may be necessary to make it conform to the actual cash value." The section was amended in 1880 as it now reads, and has ever since stood in its present form. It is argued that the amendment of 1880 dropped from the section the words "all complaints in regard to the assessed value of property," and that the board may now, after giving notice, raise an assessment without any formal complaint being filed; hence, if no complaint is necessary, no evidence is required. We do not think it was the intention to dispense with evidence. In City and County of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 508, 2 Pac. 267, decided in January, 1884, it is said: "The action of the board in dealing with the valuation of the property listed in the roll is based upon evidence which may be adduced before the board. Sections 3673, 3677, Pol. Code. As to increase of amount of valuation or reduction, the board can only act on evidence. We cannot see how it could act otherwise." In Hagenmeyer v. Board, 82 Cal. 218, 23 Pac. 16, it is said: "The record does not show by affirmative proof that the board did not act upon evidence before it. Therefore its order in the premises is conclusive that it did act upon such evidence as was necessary." In Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Board of Equalization, 97 Cal. 325, 32 Pac. 314, it is said: "The board had no power to order a new assessment to be made without evidence." Under the above decisions it has become the settled rule in this state that the board can only act upon evidence in raising or lowering an assessment. We are aware that a different rule has been announced in some states, but generally the rule in such cases has been based upon the peculiar wording of the statute under which the decision has been rendered. But, when such is not the case, we think the rule as herein announced the better and safer one. It is claimed that the record shows that there was evidence taken before the board. Counsel, in his brief, under this claim says: "Mr. Ryan was called upon to testify, but refused to make any statement why the assessment should not be increased. Mr. Martin, in behalf of the defendant, testified simply that the assessment, as it then stood, was too high." We have examined the record, and do not find that Mr. Martin was ever sworn as a witness, or that he testified before the board. The finding of the court is: "That said resolution was adopted without the taking or hearing of any evidence or testimony whatever as to the value of said property, and no evidence or testimony of any kind whatever was taken, or heard, or considered." The finding is supported by the testimony in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

OVEREND v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
(S. F. 1,680.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1900.)

CONTEMPT—REFUSAL OF WITNESS TO ANSWER QUESTION—QUESTION FOR COURT—CRIMINATING QUESTION—WAIVER—COMMITMENT—VALIDITY OF ORDER.

1. A witness is guilty of contempt for arbitrarily refusing to answer a question on the ground that it tends to incriminate him, since the question whether such question would tend to convict the witness of a felony is for the court.

2. A witness cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt for refusing to answer a criminating question in a criminal case because he testified to such facts on a preliminary examination, since his act in so doing was not a waiver of such objection.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, requiring an order of commitment for a contempt committed in the presence of the court to recite the facts, an order committing a witness for contempt in refusing to answer a question is void where it does not recite the question which the witness refused to answer.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, requiring an order of commitment for a contempt committed in the presence of the court to recite the facts, an order committing a witness for a contempt in refusing to answer a question is void, where it does not recite facts showing the jurisdiction of the court.

5. The refusal of one from whom property has been embezzled to state whether he knows the defendant, who is charged therewith, will authorize a commitment for contempt, since such question is material, as tending to identify the defendant, and an answer thereto does not tend to incriminate the witness.

6. A judgment committing a witness for contempt is not void, as being double, in providing that he be punished by fine and imprisonment for a certain time, and also that he be imprisoned until he answers a certain question, which latter part has been held void, since the first part is separate and independent from the last.

7. Where certiorari is brought to review three separate commitments for contempt, the objection that all were based on a single contempt, which would only sustain one judgment, is without merit, where two of the commitments are declared invalid.

Department 1.

Original certiorari by Alfred Overend against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; Wallace, Judge. Writ sustained in part, and dismissed in part.

J. J. Guilfoyle (F. W. Van Reynegom, of counsel), for petitioner. Jones & O'Donnell, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an original proceeding in certiorari to annul three certain orders or judgments made by the trial court. The facts are these: On June 15, 1898, at 10 a. m., one Minnie Campbell was upon trial in the superior court charged with the commission of a felony. Petitioner, Overend, was called and sworn as a witness; whereupon he refused to answer any questions, upon the ground that his evidence would tend to criminate him. The court then made an order which recited that the witness was the prosecuting witness in the case, and that he had appeared at the preliminary examination of defendant, and testified fully, without objection; that he had been ordered by the court to answer the questions which had been addressed to him, and had refused; and thereupon it was adjudged that he was guilty of contempt in refusing to obey the order of the court, and as a punishment he was "committed to the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco until two o'clock p. m., and, moreover, that he pay a fine of five hundred dollars for his contempt in that behalf." At 2:30 p. m. of the same day the trial was resumed, and Overend was again called to the witness stand, and asked the following question: "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" and he again refused to answer, upon the ground that his answer might tend to convict him of a felony. The witness further stated that he would refuse to answer any and all questions that might be propounded to him as a witness in the case; whereupon petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt, and ordered to be punished by paying a fine of $500, and be imprisoned in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco until 10 o'clock a. m., June 16, 1898. At 10 o'clock a. m., June 16th, petitioner was again called to the stand to testify, and was asked the following question: "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" He again refused to answer the question, upon the ground that his answer might tend to convict him of a felony, and further stated that he would refuse to answer any and all questions which might be propounded to him as a witness in said case; whereupon the court made an order reciting the facts found in the first order made; also reciting the question asked and the refusal to answer it; that it was indispensable to the prosecution to prove that petitioner did know the defendant, Minnie Campbell; and that, if petitioner should answer the question, "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" he would not thereby give any evidence which would tend to convict him of a felony; and, by reason of his refusal to answer the aforesaid question, the petitioner was declared guilty of a contempt of court, and was ordered to pay a fine of $500, and be imprisoned in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco for the period of five days. The court at this time, and as a part of the same judgment, also ordered petitioner to be confined in the aforesaid jail until he answered the question, "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" This latter part of the judgment has been declared void by this court. Ex parte Overend, 122 Cal. 201, 54 Pac. 740.

1. It may be declared well settled that the witness cannot constitute himself an arbitrary or exclusive judge as to whether or not the evidence called for by the question would tend to convict him of a felony. It is a matter which the trial court is to decide, and even its action may be reviewed upon appeal to this court. It is said in Whart. Cr. Ev. § 469: "The witness is not the sole judge of his liability. The liability must appear reasonable to the court, or the witness will be compelled to answer. * * * But, in order to claim the protection of the court, the witness is not required to disclose all the facts, as this would defeat the object for which he claims protection. It is not, indeed, enough for the witness to say that the answer will criminate him. It must appear to the court, from all the circumstances, that there is a real danger, though this the judge, as we have seen, is allowed to gather from the whole case, as well as from the general conception of the relations of the witness. Upon the facts thus developed, it is the province of the court to determine whether a direct answer to a question may criminate." It is said in Ex parte Stice by this court in bank (70 Cal. 53, 11 Pac. 459): "Whether the answer to this question would be or might be of such tendency the court in which the trial is proceeding must adjudge, * * * and it cannot be called on to do so in advance of the question being put. To hold that the reason stated above would justify a person called in refusing to be sworn would be to make such a person, and not the court, the final judge, and exclude the court from any consideration of the matter whatever. Such is not and cannot be the law." In the case of In re Rogers (Cal.) 62 Pac. 47, it is decided: "As to the relevancy and pertinency of the questions propounded, it is sufficient to say that the decision of that matter rests with the judge, and not with the witness, but the decision of the judge at nisi prius is reviewable by this tribunal under the writ. Ex parte Zeelandelaar, 71 Cal. 238, 12 Pac. 259. Otherwise, the production of evidence would cease to be under the control of the court, and would depend upon the opinion of the witnesses."

2. It appears that the trial court based its judgments of contempt largely upon the ground that the witness had, without objection, testified at the preliminary examination of Minnie Campbell, and for that reason had waived his right to refuse to testify at the trial upon the ground that his evidence would tend to convict him of a felony. The position of the trial court in this regard is untenable. This question of waiving the privilege is discussed and decided in Temple v. Com., 75 Va. 896, and Cullen's Case, 24 Gratt. 624. It is said in those cases that the witness' statements elsewhere have nothing to do with the question.

3. Section 1211, Code Civ. Proc., declares: "When a contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, it may be punished summarily; for which an order must be made, reciting the facts as occurring in such immediate view and presence, adjudging that the person proceeded against is thereby guilty of a contempt, and that he be punished as therein prescribed. When the contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, an affidavit shall be presented to the court or judge, of the facts constituting the contempt, or a statement of the facts by the referees or arbitrators, or other judicial officer." It has been held by this court and other courts, with entire unanimity, that when the contempt is a constructive contempt, namely, committed without the presence of the court, then the affidavit of facts forming the basis of judicial action must show upon its face a case of contempt, and, if it does not, then the court is wanting in jurisdiction, and the order of contempt is void. In the case of a contempt committed in the presence of the court, the section says that the order adjudicating the contempt must contain a recital of the facts. This provision can only mean that the order must contain a recital of those facts which make out a case of contempt; that is, a recital of those facts which in a case of constructive contempt the law says must be incorporated in an affidavit. In People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 155, it is said: "We think it follows, from the distinction above considered, that the final order of the court by which a party is adjudged to have been guilty of a contempt should always show, upon its face, the facts upon which the exercise of the power is based and the adjudication is made." In Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 183, we find this language: "If, then, we have the right to set aside the order of the inferior court in a case of contempt, it would seem clear that the warrant of commitment should state all the material facts upon which the action of the court is predicated. In the present case it should have been stated that the grand jury were inquiring into a certain question, stating it; that the prisoner was sworn as a witness, and certain questions propounded to him, stating them; that he refused to answer; that the facts were thereupon presented to the court by the grand jury, and the prisoner required by the court to answer, which, being refused, he was committed for contempt." Again, in Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415, the court said: "The power of a court to punish for alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary, and its exercise is not to be upheld except under the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law. It is essential to the validity of proceedings in contempt, subjecting a party to fine and imprisonment, that they show a case in point of jurisdiction within the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized, for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support." In Ex parte Zeelandelaar, 71 Cal. 239, 12 Pac. 259, Justice Sharpstein said: "In order to show a legal cause for the imprisonment of the petitioner, the return in this case should show that the question which he refused to answer was pertinent to the matter in issue before the court, and, as this is not shown by the return, no legal cause for the imprisonment of the petitioner is shown, and he should be discharged." This conclusion of the justice, in substance, was indorsed by the other members of the court. In Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 112, 43 Pac. 580, we find this declaration: "The offense being criminal in its nature, both the charge, and the finding and judgment of the court thereon, are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused."

4. Let us try this case in the crucible furnished by the law as declared in the foregoing authorities. The questions asked a witness must be pertinent and material to the issue. The court has no power to compel a witness to answer any others, and the refusal to answer a question not pertinent and material to the issue is no contempt of the court. Yet the first order of contempt made by the trial court in this proceeding which is before us for review does not state the question or questions asked of the witness. It follows that this court does not know anything about either their materiality or pertinency to the issue on trial. As far as this court knows, the questions asked may only have had the purpose of eliciting evidence wholly foreign to any issue bearing upon the case. There is not even a recital in the order of contempt that the questions and answers thereto were material and pertinent to the issue. The section of the Code quoted requires the facts to be stated, and that requirement demands the question or questions addressed to the witness to be stated in the order. In a proceeding for contempt, the jurisdiction of the court to make the order must affirmatively appear. The cases stated so declare the rule. Here there is no affirmative showing of jurisdiction, because it is not shown that the questions were material and pertinent. For this reason this order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt is void, and should be annulled.

5. We pass to the order of contempt made at 2:20 p. m. of the same day by the court. The minutes of the court show that the witness was asked the question, "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" The minutes further show that petitioner refused to answer the question. As to this contempt, the order made by the court adjudging it contains no recital of any jurisdictional facts whatever. The statute says the facts showing the contempt must appear upon the face of the order. For this reason we hold the second order of contempt void.

6. As to the third order of contempt made, the jurisdictional facts therein recited are fully sufficient to invest the court with jurisdiction to make it, and, that being so, the questions are at once presented: First, was the question asked material and pertinent to the issue? and, second, would the answer to the question tend to convict the defendant of a felony? Minnie Campbell was upon trial charged with embezzlement. Overend, petitioner, was the party whose property she was charged with having embezzled. Under these circumstances, the question, "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" was material and pertinent to the issue as a means of identifying the defendant. Petitioner's testimony to this point was probably absolutely necessary in order that the charge might be established. Second, would the answer to the question, "Do you know the defendant, Minnie Campbell?" tend to convict the witness of a felony? If his answer was "No," it certainly could not have any such effect; and, if his answer was "Yes," we see nothing in that evidence which would tend in any material degree to convict the witness of a felony. If this question and answer, standing alone, would have such a tendency, we can hardly imagine any question and answer but that would have the same tendency. A mere acquaintance with defendant, Minnie Campbell, of itself, certainly could not tend to convict the witness of a felony. It was not for the witness to surmise, "Another question is going to follow which will tend to convict me of a felony, and therefore I will refuse to answer this one." He cannot know that a second question will be asked at all. It is only when the important question—some question tending to criminate—is asked that he may plead this privilege. Perchance it never will be asked.

Some point is also made by petitioner that the evidence discloses that during the progress of the trial he asked the prosecuting officer to dismiss the charge against the defendant, Minnie Campbell. But we attach no importance to this fact. There is nothing to indicate that this act of petitioner was in any way criminal, even conceding that a criminal proposition of that character, made to the prosecuting officer, would have justified this witness in refusing to answer the question, "Do you know the defendant Minnie Campbell?"

We attach no importance to the claim that the judgment, under the third order, was in the nature of a double judgment, and therefore void. The court has already decided in Ex parte Overend, supra, that the second portion of the judgment was void. The part remaining, being separate and independent, can therefore stand as a valid and binding judgment.

It is also claimed that these various refusals to testify constitute but a single, continuing contempt, which may only be satisfied by a single judgment. Ex parte Stice, supra, appears to declare a contrary doctrine. But regardless of that decision, there being but one valid order of contempt made by the trial court, this contention, for that reason, fails of merit.

For the foregoing reasons, the court concludes that the first and second orders of contempt are void, and they are hereby annulled and set aside. The third order of contempt made is valid and binding, and as to it this writ will be dismissed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOS ANGELES v.
LOS ANGELES IRON & STEEL
CO. et al. (L. A. 759.)

TRUST DEED SECURING BONDS—FORECLOSURE BY SINGLE BONDHOLDER—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—DEMAND ON TRUSTEE—OFFER OF INDEMNITY—NECESSITY—COMPLAINT—AVERMENTS—AMBIGUITY—REVIEW—ACTION ON NEGOTIABLE BONDS—DEMAND FOR PAYMENT—NECESSITY—PLEADING.

1. On the foreclosure of a trust deed the complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner of some of the bonds and coupons secured thereby. The trustee stated in his answer that it refused to sue solely because a majority of the bondholders had not requested it in writing, and an issue raised as to plaintiff's alleged ownership was determined in plaintiff's favor. Held, that the failure to allege that plaintiff notified the trustee of the number of bonds held by it when it demanded foreclosure was not such an uncertainty in the complaint as would justify reversal of the judgment on the merits because a demurrer for uncertainty and ambiguity was overruled.

2. Where demand on the trustee to foreclose a trust deed is made by an owner of bonds secured thereby, an offer to indemnify him is unnecessary if the trustee makes no demand therefor.

3. The complaint in an action to foreclose a trust deed brought by a bondholder secured thereby, in his own behalf as well as in behalf of all the other bondholders, need not set forth the several owners of the bonds, if it appears that they are unknown to him.

4. By Civ. Code, § 3130, "it is unnecessary to make a demand for payment on the principal debtor in a negotiable instrument in order to charge him"; and hence, in an action on negotiable bonds, demand need not be alleged in the complaint, the suit being all the demand required.

5. If, in an action on bonds, a demand for payment is alleged, a failure to state of whom made, or that it was made improperly or of the wrong person, is matter of defense.

6. A trust deed securing bonds may be foreclosed by a single holder of unpaid coupons on the refusal of the trustee to do so on request, regardless of whether or not the refusal was arbitrary or unlawful.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Foreclosure by the Citizens' Bank of Los Angeles against the Los Angeles Iron & Steel Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant company appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Mathews (Chas. H. McFarland, of counsel), for appellant. F. W. Burnett, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure of deed of trust. Plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendant the Los Angeles Iron & Steel Company appeals. The only question presented relates to the correctness of the order overruling the demurrer of defendant and appellant, the steel company. On May 1, 1894, the steel company executed a trust deed to the National Trust Company, as trustee, to secure the payment of the principal and interest of certain bonds, amounting to $30,000, payable in 10 years, and interest coupons payable semiannually. On September 25, 1897, plaintiff brought this action, alleging that it was the owner of $5,000 of these bonds, and of the attached coupons maturing May 1, 1895, and thereafter. Foreclosure was asked for the unpaid interest only, but the complaint was framed so as to authorize the sale of the entire mortgaged property under section 728, Code Civ. Proc. It was alleged that plaintiff was ignorant of the number of the bonds outstanding, and the owners thereof; that the trustee had been requested to bring the suit, but had refused to do so; and that payment of the coupons had been demanded more than six months prior to the commencement of the action. An accounting was asked as to the number and ownership of the outstanding bonds and coupons.

1. The only alleged ground of ambiguity or uncertainty is that the complaint fails to show what proportion of the bonds alleged therein to have been issued by the steel company is owned and held by plaintiff, or was so held at the time it demanded of the National Trust Company, trustee under the deed of trust, to bring the suit to foreclose. This demand was made August 15, 1897, and the complaint was filed September 25, 1897, and the allegation is that plaintiff "is the owner," i. e. was the owner at the filing of the complaint. Whether plaintiff in fact owned any bonds at the time it made the demand of the trustee to bring the suit, and, if so, how many, might be important as matter of defense, should its ownership at that time be denied. But we do not think the failure to allege that plaintiff made known to the trustee the number of bonds held by plaintiff when the demand was made would be such uncertainty as would justify a reversal of the judgment. The complaint did allege the fact of ownership of certain described bonds. The trustee was made a party defendant and answered, and in its answer it stated that it refused to bring the suit for the sole reason that a majority of the bondholders had not, in writing, requested it to bring the suit. Defendant and appellant, the steel company, answered the complaint, denying plaintiff's ownership of any bonds; and this issue was determined at the trial, and the fact was found to be that plaintiff was the owner of certain bonds and coupons, as alleged in the complaint. A judgment on the merits will not be reversed on a demurrer for uncertainty and ambiguity, under the circumstances as disclosed here.

2. Objection is made, presumably in support of the general demurrer, that there is no allegation in the complaint that demand for interest was made before demand on the trustee to bring the suit; no allegation that the interest had been due six months prior to demand upon the trustee; no allegation that the trustee had been informed when he refused to bring the suit that interest had not been paid, or that plaintiff owned the bonds, or that a majority of the bondholders had requested the trustee to bring the suit, or that an indemnity bond had been offered the trustee. These objections relate to provisions found in the bond or in the deed of trust. There was no demurrer for uncertainty in respect to these matters. The point of the general demurrer seems to be that the showing is insufficient to justify the plaintiff in bringing the action, thus taking the control of the matter out of the hands of the trustee. It appears, however, that the trustee answered, alleging that the ownership of the bonds was unknown to it, and admitting that it had been called upon to bring the suit, and that it refused, as already stated, for the sole reason that a majority of the bondholders had not made a written request for it to bring the action. It appears from the decree that all outstanding bonds and coupons were brought forward by their respective owners at the trial, and all the bondholders concurred in the action and were provided for in the decree, and none of them appeals, nor does the trustee.

tee, and that default in the payment of interest had continued for over two years prior to request on the trustee to bring the suit. No demand was made by the trustee for indemnity, and an offer of indemnity to him was, therefore, not necessary. Plaintiff could not allege the several ownerships of the bonds; for, as shown by the complaint, plaintiff did not know who were the owners; but plaintiff, in effect, brought the action for the benefit of all bondholders, and, as we have seen, they were all ascertained at the trial, and they surrendered their bonds and coupons. As to alleging demand upon the steel company for payment, demand was alleged, and that such demand was made more than six months prior to commencing the action. But no demand on the steel company was necessary, so far as it was concerned (Civ. Code, § 3130), the suit being all the demand required. Cousins v. Partidge, 79 Cal. 224, 21 Pac. 745; Jones v. Nicholl, 82 Cal. 32, 22 Pac. 878. Furthermore, as demand was in fact alleged, a failure to state of whom made, or that the demand was made improperly or of the wrong person, would be matter of defense. Appellant's principal contention is that a single bondholder cannot bring the suit without having shown that the trustee has arbitrarily and unlawfully refused to act; citing General Electric Co. v. La Grande Edison Electric Co. (C. C.) 79 Fed. 25; Id., 31 C. C. A. 118, 87 Fed. 590; and other cases. It is well settled, I think, that any holder of unpaid coupons may sue upon refusal of the trustee to do so after request upon him. Railroad Co. v. Fosdick, 106 U. S. 47, 1 Sup. Ct. 10, 27 L. Ed. 47, and cases last above cited. The cases cited by appellant do not require that the refusal of the trustee must appear to have been arbitrary or unlawful. Where the deed authorizes the trustee to proceed upon the written request of a majority of the bondholders, it is held in those cases that he cannot act without such petition. But the bondholder has a right of action upon showing that the trustee has refused to bring the suit, even though the trustee may have been justified, under the provisions of the deed, in refusing. If this were not so, it would result in placing the same limitation on the right of the individual bondholder to bring the action as is placed on the trustee, namely, the written request of a majority of the bondholders; and this would practically make it possible for a majority to deprive the minority of the remedy of foreclosure altogether. There is no provision in the deed of trust authorizing any such limitation upon the bondholder's rights. Apart from the foregoing, as we have seen, it appeared that all the parties interested in the action, including the trustee, were before the court, and the bondholders not parties came in and surrendered to the court their bonds and coupons. Besides, it was made to appear by the answer of R. H. Herron, who was permitted to answer as a defendant, that he became the owner of all of the steel company's property at a receiver's sale, and the decree refers to him as the successor in interest of appellant. This answer was treated as a cross complaint, and was served on defendant the steel company, and was not answered by it. The substantial rights of appellant have in no wise been injuriously affected, and no good purpose can be subserved by a retrial of the case. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BROOKS. (Cr. 646.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1901.)

CRIMINAL LAW—RECORD—APPEAL—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—HOMICIDE—MURDEROUS DESIGN—POLICE OFFICER—PRIVATE CITIZEN—LAW OF ARREST—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Only such evidence which the record shows to have been introduced in a criminal case will be considered on appeal.

2. Deceased was shot at by a policeman, who testified that his revolver was of a 44-caliber, whereupon defendant pursued deceased, firing a number of shots at him with what his close friends testified was a 41-caliber pistol. The pursuit lasted four or five blocks, and it was shown that after defendant fired the last shot deceased threw up his hands, and exclaimed, "Oh, my God!" and that he was found lying a short distance from where he made the exclamation. On examination it was found that deceased was hit by only one bullet, which was of a 44-caliber. Held sufficient to show that deceased was killed by defendant, though there was no positive evidence that he had a 44-caliber pistol, since the jury were not obliged to believe everything to which defendant's close friends testified.

3. Defendant, who was a barkeeper, left his saloon in response to a telephone message, going to another saloon, and, after a whispered conversation there with a person, left, and in 10 or 15 minutes returned to his saloon, appearing to be in a state of great excitement. He hurriedly procured a revolver, and went to the back door, whereupon a police officer followed him, and, seeing deceased in the back yard with a revolver in his hand, went out, and ordered him to throw up his hands. The latter fired a shot, and the officer, after firing six times at deceased, dropped, and went towards the saloon, saying to defendant, "Help me, and shoot him." Defendant emptied his revolver at deceased, and then returned, procured another pistol, and pursued deceased, firing a number of times, deceased falling after the last shot, and dying as the result of a bullet hole in his body. Held that, though defendant may have pursued deceased, and shot at him, through a high sense of duty imposed on him by the police officer, the jury were warranted in finding that he was actuated by a murderous design to kill him.

4. In a trial for homicide the court charged that a citizen must assist in arresting a person when called on to do so by a peace officer, and that, if such arrest is resisted, such citizen may use sufficient force to effect his purpose, even though it go to the extent of taking life; and that fleeing from arrest constituted a resistance. Further, that if the jury believed from the evidence that defendant had a right to believe, as a reasonable man, and did believe, that deceased had unlawfully shot at or mortally wounded a peace officer in resisting arrest, it was his duty to pursue and arrest deceased, and use all necessary means of effecting his arrest. Held to correctly and sufficiently state the law as to a private citizen's right to assist a peace officer when called on to make an arrest.

5. Under Pen. Code, § 671, providing that, where the punishment is imprisonment for a term not less than any specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of the imprisonment is declared, the defendant may be sentenced to imprisonment during his natural life, the court may sentence one found guilty of murder in the second degree to imprisonment for life.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; E. W. Risley, Judge.

Jack Brooks was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Lewis H. Smith, Frank H. Short, W. D. Tupper, W. P. Thompson, and W. D. Crichton, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. By the information the appellant, Brooks, and one Tony Rice were jointly charged with the murder of Don Donnelly. Brooks was tried separately, and convicted of murder in the second degree. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The record is in a very loose and unsatisfactory condition. The bill of exceptions, after showing that certain witnesses were examined at the trial, and certain evidence taken, contains a statement of the contents of a certain alleged dying declaration of the deceased, which was used at the preliminary examination before the magistrate; but the record does not show that said declaration was introduced in evidence at the trial. There is also a statement of a recitation of certain evidence and facts made by the judge at the time he pronounced sentence, but the things which he recited do not appear among the evidence taken at the trial. Of course, this is a mere statement of what the judge said, but there is nothing to show that the evidence to which he alludes was introduced; and these things cannot be considered here. In determining this appeal we can consider only the evidence which the record shows to have been introduced. The record, as we must consider it, presents only two contentions of appellant which need be noticed: First, that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of guilty; and, second, that the court erred, to appellant's prejudice, in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury which appellant asked.

1. We cannot say that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. The main facts of the case are these: On the morning of June 27, 1899, shortly before daylight, appellant was in the Favorite saloon in the city of Fresno, where he was employed as a bar-keeper, and, after some conversation through the telephone,—in the saloon,—he went out, and remained away about 10 or 15 minutes, when he returned. When he left the Favorite he went to another saloon across the street, and in the immediate neighborhood, called the "Golden West," to which place he had been summoned through the telephone. He had there a whispered conversation with a Mr. Ardell, and, after remaining in the Golden West a minute or two, he went out of the side door behind certain "cribs" or houses of prostitution. That part of the city is known generally as Chinatown, and is occupied to a great extent by prostitutes. It does not appear where he went immediately after leaving the Golden West, but, as before stated, in about 10 or 15 minutes he returned to the Favorite saloon, and appeared to be in a state of great excitement. He hurriedly went behind the bar, and got a pistol, and went to the rear door of the saloon. At that time Rice, who was a police officer, and was in or at the threshold of the saloon, followed the appellant to the back door, and said to him something like "This is my business," or, "If there is going to be any shooting, I will do it." Rice looked out of the glass door, and, seeing the deceased, Donnelly, with a pistol in his hand, went out and said to him, "Throw up your hands;" but Donnelly immediately fired one shot, either at Rice (as the latter testified) or up into the air (as another witness testified), and Rice then fired six shots at Donnelly. Rice testified that, his pistol being then empty, he dropped, and went into the saloon, and that as he dropped he called on appellant to "come and help him," and said, "My impression is that I said 'Help me' and 'Shoot him,' both." Appellant, who had gone out of the saloon with or closely behind Rice, immediately began to fire at Donnelly, who retreated; and appellant, following him, fired six shots at him, which emptied his pistol. He then returned a short distance, and, meeting Ardell, got another pistol from the latter, and then again pursued the deceased for about four blocks, and fired at him again at least twice. The last shot was near the residence of Mrs. Shober, who was awakened by the shots, and who testified that she got up, and saw Donnelly running; and that about half a second after the last shot he threw up his hands and exclaimed, "Oh, my God!" He was found lying about a block from Mrs. Shober's house, with the bullet hole in his body which caused his death a few days afterwards. He had been shot only once, and the wound was made by a 44-caliber Smith & Wesson pistol, and Rice testified that this was the kind of pistol with which he shot. It was in evidence that the pistol with which appellant fired the first six shots was a 41-caliber Colt, and it is claimed by appellant that there was proof that the pistol which he received from Ardell was a 41-caliber. The contentions of appellant are: First, that the deceased must have been killed by a 44-caliber bullet from Rice's pistol, and could not have been shot by appellant, because the latter had no pistol of that kind; and, second, that, if appellant killed the deceased, he was justified in so doing by the command of the police officer, Rice. As to the first contention, it is sufficient to say that appellant had more than one pistol, and that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the deceased was killed by one of the last shots fired by appellant, although there was no positive evidence to the point that he had a 44-caliber pistol. The jury were not compelled to believe everything testified to by witnesses who were apparently his close friends. As to the second contention, it is enough to say that, while it might be imagined, perhaps, that appellant pursued the fleeing Donelly, and shot at him at every opportunity, solely through a high sense of duty imposed on him by Rice, still the facts amply warranted the jury in finding that he was actuated by a murderous design to kill him. Indeed, what Rice said can hardly be construed as a request to arrest Donelly, or to pursue him for that purpose. Rice testified that while he himself was shooting at Donelly he supposed that the latter was still shooting at him, which was a mistake, as Donelly shot only once; and what he said to appellant when his own pistol had been emptied was apparently for the purpose of asking appellant to rescue him from his supposed present danger. At all events, it was for the jury to say why appellant alone pursued the deceased so far, and from all the evidence they were justified in finding that he did so for the purpose of committing murder.

2. We do not think that appellant was at all prejudiced by the refusal of the court to give certain instructions asked by his counsel. The court did, at the request of defendant, give to the jury some 14 instructions, and these instructions, together with others given by the court of its own motion, correctly and fully stated the law applicable to the case; and these instructions were certainly very favorable to the appellant. We think that all of the instructions refused which were correct were substantially included in the instructions given. The rejected instructions most insisted upon by appellant as correct refer to the right of a citizen to assist a police officer when called upon to make an arrest; but as to this matter the court instructed the jury at the request of the appellant as follows: "A citizen must assist in the arrest of a person when called upon by any peace officer so to do, and when so called upon the law clothes such person or citizen with the rights and duties and immunities of such officer. While an officer, or citizen requested by an officer to assist in making an arrest, must use as little violence as possible, if resisted he may use sufficient force to effect his purpose, even though it go to the extent of taking life.

Resisting arrest does not always constitute the use of physical force. A person may resist arrest by fleeing from an officer attempting to arrest him. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant had a right to believe, as a reasonable man, and did believe, that the deceased had unlawfully shot at or mortally wounded the officer, Tony Rice, in resisting arrest, before giving pursuit and the firing of the fatal shot, then the defendant not only had the right, but it was his duty, to so pursue and arrest the deceased, and use all necessary means of effecting his arrest." Under these instructions the jury were fully informed as to the law on this subject, and the appellant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the court to give the instructions refused.

There is nothing in the point that the court had no authority to sentence the appellant to imprisonment for life. Section 671 of the Penal Code expressly provides that, where the punishment is imprisonment for a term not less than any specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of the imprisonment is declared, the defendant may be sentenced to imprisonment during his natural life. There are no other points requiring notice. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GEORGES v. KESSLER et al. (L. A. 778.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—TRIAL—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE—COMPLAINT—AMBIGUITY—SUFFICIENCY—DETERMINATION ON DEMURRER—EXHIBIT—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—FINDING OF COMPLETION OF WORK.

1. In determining on demurrer whether a complaint on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien sufficiently alleges the contents of the notice of lien, a copy of the notice attached, and expressly made a part of the complaint, must be regarded as a part of it as much as if it had been set forth in the body thereof.

2. An objection to a complaint to foreclose a mechanic's lien that it cannot be determined therefrom whether the contract was made by one or both of two defendants named, is without merit where it expressly alleges that the contract was made "with the said defendant," thereupon naming one of the defendants referred to.

3. Where a complaint on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien expressly alleges that a husband and wife, defendants thereto, are the owners of the land, and there is no intimation that she was a party to the contract otherwise than that she assented thereto, an objection that the complaint is ambiguous, in that it cannot be ascertained whether she is sought to be held under an alleged contract made with her, or on account of some interest she has in the land, cannot be sustained.

4. On foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, where the notice of lien was offered in evidence, defendant objected on the ground "that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that it was a variance from the allegation of the complaint; no such lien having been pleaded, and no contract set out in the complaint such as is described or attempted to be described in said lien." Held, that the objection did not point out to the court wherein a variance existed, or was supposed to exist; and was, therefore, properly overruled.

5. The finding of the court on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien that plaintiff fully completed the work according to the terms of the contract was objected to as not being justified by the evidence, because plaintiff did not put in an electric alarm bell; and on this point plaintiff testified that defendant directed him not to put it in, saying he would not pay for it, while defendant testified that its cost was included in the proposed sum for which the work was to be done. Held that, the evidence being conflicting, the finding could not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by Ellis P. Georges against W. J. Kessler and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant W. J. Kessler appeals. Affirmed.

Len Claiborne, Dunnigan & Dunnigan, for appellant. F. G. Hentig and John W. Kemp, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien under a contract between the plaintiff and defendant W. J. Kessler for an improvement upon a building situate upon premises alleged to be the property of Mr. and Mrs. Kessler. Defendant Hanna was alleged to have or claim some interest therein, but she made default, and will not be further noticed. The plaintiff had findings and judgment, and defendant W. J. Kessler appeals from said judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The demurrer to the complaint is general and special. Under the general demurrer it is said that the complaint does not allege that the notice of lien described the property sought to be affected by the lien, nor the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract. The complaint fully described the property as the westerly 82½ feet of lot 9 in block F of the Mott tract, and identified it as that upon which the building whereon the work was done was situated, and, after stating the work agreed to be done, stated the amount to be paid, and that it was agreed to be paid upon completion of the work; and, in addition to these allegations, which, we think, were sufficient, a copy of the notice of lien was attached to and expressly made part of the complaint, and became part of its allegations; "for there can be no difference between setting forth such instrument in the body of the pleading and in annexing it as an exhibit, and making it a part of the pleading by proper reference. In each case the copy is a part of the pleading. The only difference is in the arrangement or sequence of the parts, and this difference is entirely unimportant upon the question whether the pleading states a cause of action." Lambert

v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 612, 22 Pac. 328; Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 506, 23 Pac. 50, 227. See, also, the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Temple in Society v. Thornton, 127 Cal. 577, 60 Pac. 37.

The first specification of ambiguity is to the effect that it cannot be determined whether the contract was made by Mr. Kessler, or Mrs. Kessler, or by both. It expressly alleged that the contract was made "with the said defendant W. J. Kessler," and the same statement is made in the notice of lien. It is also specified that the complaint is ambiguous in that it cannot be ascertained whether Mrs. Kessler is sought to be held under an alleged contract made with her, or on account of some interest she has in the land. It was expressly alleged that Mr. and Mrs. Kessler are the owners, and there is no intimation that the wife was a party to the contract otherwise than that she assented to it. The next specification is a repetition of the first above noticed. The next is that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain in that the allegations in the complaint are inconsistent with the exhibit attached to it; but in what respect, or in what particular, is not specified. When the notice of lien was offered in evidence by the plaintiff, defendant objected on the ground "that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that it was a variance from the allegation of the complaint,—no such lien having been pleaded, and no contract set out in the complaint such as is described or attempted to be described in said lien." This objection did not point out to the court wherein a variance existed, or was supposed to exist.

Nor do we think there is in fact any variance between the contract stated in the complaint and that stated in the notice of lien. The contract was oral, the proposition and specifications being memoranda. The proposition made by plaintiff was to do the work for $138, "alarm bell and battery not included." This proposition was accepted by defendant. The reference to the alarm bell shows that there had been previous conversations, in which an alarm bell was spoken of, and the evidence confirms the inference. The lien filed was for $138, the amount or value of the work stated in the proposition (the alarm bell and battery not included), less $5 paid on account. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence in chief the defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the work was done according to the specification and contract set out, and on the further ground that there was no testimony tending to prove the contract set out in the complaint. This motion was properly denied. It was but a restatement of appellant's contention as to the supposed variance between the complaint and the notice of lien. In the transcript there are several specifications of alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, though but one of them is noticed in appellant's brief. The court found, in substance, that plaintiff fully completed the work according to the terms of the contract; and it is contended that this finding is not justified, because the plaintiff did not put in said electric alarm bell. Upon this point the plaintiff testified that defendant directed him not to put in the alarm bell, saying he would not pay for it; while the defendant testified that the cost of the alarm bell was included in the proposed sum of $138. Upon this state of the evidence the finding cannot be disturbed. I advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

PEACHY v. WITTER et al. (L. A. 782.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1901.)

MORTGAGES—AGREEMENT TO EXTEND TIME OF PAYMENT—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—ATTORNEY'S FEES—FORECLOSURE SUIT—BILL—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—ADJOURNMENT—INTERVENTION.

1. A description of property in a bill to foreclose a mortgage as lot 18, block 16, in the city of E., county of S., state of C., as per map of said city in the office of the county recorder of said county, is not so uncertain as to render the complaint demurrable.

2. Where there is a conflict as to the making of an agreement extending a note, a finding will not be reversed on appeal.

3. A promise, made without consideration, to extend the time of payment of a note, does not prevent suit thereon within such time.

4. Where an attorney for defendant states that he is a witness, and requests an adjournment until afternoon, to secure the presence of his associate counsel, who was detained by sickness in his family, the cause will not be reversed for a refusal to grant such request, where it is not shown that all defenses were not fully presented.

5. Where a note containing an agreement for attorney's fees is secured by a mortgage, it is proper to grant attorney's fees on foreclosure.

6. Where a mortgagee offers to settle a cause on the payment of the principal, and afterwards brings foreclosure, a letter from the mortgagor accepting such offer after suit was commenced is not admissible.

7. Where there is no consideration for an agreement to settle a debt secured by a mortgage for less than the amount due, evidence of such agreement is not admissible in a foreclosure suit.

8. Where the intervener in a mortgage foreclosure suit contends that a decree in favor of the complainant would cloud his title, but his affidavit does not disclose the date of his title or the nature of his ownership, it is not error to deny the intervention.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Bill by William T. Peachy against G. F. Witter, Jr., and others for the foreclosure of a mortgage. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. Graves and G. F. Witter, Jr., for appellants. W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The defendants appeal from a judgment against them and from an order denying their motion for a new trial in a suit brought by plaintiff on a promissory note for $400, besides interest, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure said note. There is also an appeal from an order denying one Charles Orendorff the right to intervene.

1. Appellants contend that the description of the premises alleged to be mortgaged, as it appears in the complaint, is uncertain, and for that reason the demurrer to the complaint for uncertainty should have been sustained. A part of the property included in the mortgage, as appears from the complaint, was described as lot 18 of block 16 of the city of El Paso de Robles, county of San Luis Obispo, state of California, as per map of said city on file in the office of the county recorder of said county. This description is undoubtedly plain and certain; and, as to the description of the rest of the property included in the mortgage, while it is not as certain, perhaps, as it should have been, yet it appears from the subsequent course of the case that the appellant understood just what land was meant by the description, and was not misled or even inconvenienced in any way in making his defense on account of any uncertainty in the description of the premises contained in the complaint. There was not any error, therefore, in overruling the said demurrer that should lead to a reversal of the judgment.

2. Appellants' next contention is that the action was prematurely brought, for the reason that the agent of plaintiff, acting within his authority and on behalf of his principal, by oral agreement extended the time for the payment of the note for a reasonable time, which reasonable time did not expire until after the date on which the action was begun. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether the agent made such an agreement, and for that reason the finding of the court contrary to the contention of defendants should not be disturbed. Again, if there was any such an agreement for extension of time as claimed, it was made without any consideration therefor, and is a mere nudum pactum, and cannot be enforced. Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117.

3. On the calling of the case for trial one of the defendants, who had signed the answer as one of the attorneys, stated that he was a witness in the case, and desired the presence of his associate counsel, who was absent on account of sickness in his family, and asked that the case go over until afternoon, when his said associate could possibly be present. The court denied the request. We here repeat what was said by the court in Bank v. Chester, 55 Cal. 49: "Granting or refusing a continuance on account of the absence of counsel is a matter which rests largely, if not wholly, in the discretion of the court, and we cannot see that there was any abuse of discretion in this case." The case was tried before the court without a jury. The defendants were represented at the trial by one of their attorneys of record, and apparently their defenses were presented for all they were worth. We see no error in the refusal of the court to continue the case.

4. The complaint set out a copy of the note in suit, which contained, as a part thereof, a provision for a reasonable attorney's fee. It was also alleged in the complaint that the mortgage was given "to secure the payment of said note." These allegations of the complaint are found by the court to be true, and such finding is supported by the evidence. The agreement for an attorney's fee, therefore, appears to have been secured by the mortgage, and it was proper to so treat it in the decree of foreclosure. Bank v. Goldtree (Cal.) 61 Pac. 785.

5. A letter was offered in evidence, dated February, 1899, written by defendant Witter, Jr., some days after the action was begun, and purporting to accept a proposition of plaintiff, theretofore made, to the effect that he (plaintiff) would release the mortgage on payment of the principal of his note. This letter was properly excluded for two reasons: First, because it was written too late to constitute an acceptance of the alleged offer of plaintiff, as the said offer had been revoked by the commencement of the action; and, second, this letter, as well as the other evidence touching an agreement to take less than the whole amount due the plaintiff, was immaterial, because it appeared that there was no consideration for any such an agreement. An agreement to take less than the full amount of a claim, made after the same is due, must have a new consideration to support it, or such agreement cannot be enforced. There was no error in the exclusion by the court of evidence offered by appellants.

6. Orendorff seeks to intervene in the action for the reason, as stated on his behalf, "that a part of the premises described in said complaint is the property of said Chas. Orendorff," and "that if judgment were rendered in this action pursuant to said complaint, and the property sold as described in said complaint, it would cloud the title of the said Chas. Orendorff." Orendorff presented no complaint in intervention to the court, and he does not disclose the date of his title or the nature of his ownership in the affidavit filed on his behalf. From the meager showing made, it was impossible for the court to determine that his title was one that could be litigated in a suit for foreclosure. The burden was on him to show that his was a proper case for intervention. It appears to be the settled law that an adverse claim to the land in opposition to the mortgagor and mortgagee cannot be tried in the equitable action of foreclosure. Williams v. Cooper, 124 Cal. 666, 57 Pac. 577; Murray v. Etchepare (Cal.) 61 Pac. 930. On the showing made, the court properly denied the intervention.

The other points urged by appellants are not of sufficient importance to require special notice. We advise that the judgment and orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

In re LUFKIN'S ESTATE. (Sac. 825.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1901.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW—TRIAL COURT—DISCRETION—WILL—CONSTRUCTION—LEGACY—ELECTION.

1. Where decedent's estate consisted of personal property worth $6,500, and his widow had property of her own which produced an income of $204 per annum, an allowance of $40 per month to the widow, pending administration, will not be disturbed as unreasonable, or as constituting an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

2. Where testator, whose estate consisted entirely of personal property, devised $1,000 to his widow, on the payment of which she was to relinquish all further claim on his estate, the widow was entitled to an allowance pending administration of the estate, since her election between the legacy and an allowance was not to be exercised until payment of the legacy.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Joseph W. Hughes, Judge.

Application by the widow of D. T. Lufkin, deceased, for a monthly allowance out of the estate pending administration. From an order granting the allowance, certain heirs appeal. Affirmed.

Holl & Dunn and A. L. Shinn, for appellants. Albert M. Johnson, for respondent.

SMITH, C. Appeal from order making allowance to widow of deceased of $40 per month for maintenance pending administration. The application was contested by the daughters and the children of a deceased son of a former marriage. The grounds of opposition were (1) that the widow had separate property sufficient for her maintenance; (2) that there was no property in the estate from which the allowance could be paid; and (3) that under the will of the deceased she was put to her election between her right to family allowance and the legacy bequeathed her.

The estate consists of a note and mortgage of the value of between $7,000 and $8,000, held by the California State Bank as security for an indebtedness of the deceased amounting, at the date of bearing, to $2,500. The widow, it appears, has property of her own amounting to something over $3,000, consisting of $1,621 in bank, and the balance in solvent promissory notes, and she has also the interest for life on $2,000, her income being $204.73 per annum. With regard to the first point, this court cannot say that the separate property of the widow was sufficient for her maintenance. Nor can it entertain the question whether it was the duty of the court below to consider the separate property of the widow in fixing her allowance; for there is nothing in the record to show whether it did consider it or not. And, whether it did or did not consider it, this court cannot say that the allowance was not reasonable, or that it was more than was necessary for the maintenance of the widow. By the provisions of section 1466, Code Civ. Proc., the function of determining those questions is vested in the lower court, and, from the nature of the case, must rest largely in the discretion of the court. With that discretion, if not exercised on erroneous principles, we cannot, unless in extreme cases, interfere. The only point to be considered, therefore, is as to the construction of the will.

The provision of the will in question is: "I give, devise, and bequeath to my wife, Lucy, the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000), on the payment of which one thousand dollars she relinquish all further claim to my estate." By other bequests the whole of the testator's estate was disposed of. The term "claim," in its usual and proper sense, is broad enough to include the statutory claim or right of the widow to an allowance from the estate of the testator, and, where a different intention is not manifested by the context, must be so construed. Code Civ. Proc. § 16. It was doubtless so understood and intended by the testator here, and this intention is the more manifest from the fact that there was no community property or real estate from which a homestead could be allotted, and in fact nothing to which the term could apply, except the claim to family allowance. The bequest is, therefore, to be construed as conditional on the relinquishment of the claim of allowance for maintenance, and the widow is thus put to her election between the two. The case also comes within the reason of the rule "that he who accepts a benefit under a * * * will must adopt the whole contents of the instrument, conforming to all its provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with it." 1 Jarm. Wills, 385; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1075, 1076; Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 346; In re Stewart's Estate, 74 Cal. 98, 15 Pac. 445; In re Smith's Estate, 108 Cal. 115, 40 Pac. 1037; Etcheborme v. Auzeirais, 45 Cal. 121; Eproson v. Wheat, 53 Cal. 715.

As to the time the election is to be exercised, the will is equally clear. It is to be exercised only "on the payment" of the legacy. Until then the widow is entitled to the enjoyment of her statutory rights, and to the allowance made to her thereunder. I advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

HIGGINS et al. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al. (L. A. 724.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1901.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—LEASE OF WATER PLANT—PAYMENT FOR USE—PARTICULAR FUNDS—SURPLUS—FUNDS DEPOSITED IN BANK—FAILURE OF BANK—TREATMENT OF FUNDS—PRIORITY OF CLAIMS—OPERATING EXPENSES—PAYMENT—LEGALITY—WATER COMMISSIONERS—APPOINTMENT—SALARY—GENERAL FUND—STREET FUND—STREET-SPRINKLING FUND.

1. Const. art. 11, § 18, provides that no city shall incur any indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors. Act March 16, 1889 (Municipal Charters Act) §§ 11, 12 (St. 1889, p. 658), substantially reenacts the provision of the constitution. Section 9 (page 707) establishes a "fire department fund," on which all warrants must be drawn for fire department supplies and expenses whatsoever, and a number of other funds, with like directions as to warrants, concluding with a provision that the percentage of each annual tax levy shall be named for each fund, and the whole amount of taxes and revenue apportioned to the several funds accordingly, and that no transfer shall be made from one fund to another except as otherwise provided by the charter, unless by vote of the common council, and in no case shall any moneys be transferred from the school or library funds to any other fund. Section 10 (page 708) apportions fines to the police department and street funds. Section 11 (page 708) requires officers collecting city moneys to make monthly statements to the auditor, and pay such moneys to the treasurer; the auditor to apportion such moneys to the various funds to which they belong. Section 5 (page 705) directs the manner of apportionment of the moneys, and of drawing warrants for salaries and bills allowed by the auditing committee. Sections 1 and 2 (page 704) relate to the duties of the auditing committee, requiring that they designate the fund from which claims shall be paid. Sections 1 and 2 (page 696) declare that the auditor shall prepare an estimate of the probable necessities for the city for the current fiscal year, and show the revenue anticipated and the probable expenditures, when the council shall fix a tax rate sufficient to raise the necessary funds. Ord. San Diego, No. 128, established a water fund; section 9 of the ordinance providing that salaries and expenses of all kinds connected with the water department should be paid from such fund. Held, that a water company which leased its plant to the city of San Diego could enforce payment for the use of such plant out of the surplus of any funds of such city left at the end of a fiscal year after payment of claims chargeable to the same, where the water and general funds, which were primarily liable, were exhausted.

2. A bank in which the city of San Diego deposited funds of the fiscal year of 1891 failed, but the city's books showed these funds as cash in the treasury for two years thereafter, when a fictitious account was entered on the books, wiping out the fund. Part of the fund was recovered by suit, and there was no showing that more could not be realized. Held, that in an action against the city by a water company which had leased its plant to such city for the fiscal year of 1891 for the use of such plant, the funds primarily liable for such use being exhausted, the whole amount of the deposited fund must be treated as in the treasury for the fiscal year 1891, for the purpose of fixing the amount of plaintiff's judgment, and not merely the amount recovered from the bank, since it constituted a part of the funds raised to meet legitimate claims.

3. Act March 16, 1889 (Municipal Charter Act), gave no priority of right among claimants against the city, dependent on the order of time in which liabilities are incurred, so far as the city's different funds were concerned, except as to the water fund, in regard to which it was provided that the salaries of the water commissioners and expenses of operating the water plant should be paid before payment of the monthly rental. Held, that payments on claims accruing subsequent to those of a water company which leased a water plant to the city of San Diego, out of the water fund, were not illegal, and might properly be deducted from the amount the company should recover.

4. Though a lease of a water plant by a city is void, the city is liable for the use thereof; but payment of the operating expenses of such plant by the city is not illegal, and the water company cannot recover such moneys paid out of the water fund primarily applicable to its claims for the use of such plant.

5. Under St. 1889, p. 694 (Municipal Charter Act) c. 6, §§ 1, 2, authorizing the appointment of water commissioners when the city shall become the owner of any water supply or shall decide to construct a system of water supply, the city may appoint water commissioners, at a salary, where it leases a water plant, since the word "owner" is used in the sense that the city should have control of the water supply.

6. Where a city pays the salary of the city justice out of the general fund, instead of the salary fund, which was primarily liable therefor, before a demand on the city by a water company for payment for the use of a water plant leased to such city, out of such general fund, such payment is not an illegal diminution of such fund, since the company could look to such fund only at the end of the fiscal year.

7. The street fund established by St. 1889, p. 707 (Municipal Charter Act), from which must be paid all expenses for street repairs, sprinkling, cleaning, and improvements for which other provision is not made, and highway and bridge repairs, and the street-sprinkling fund established by ordinance, out of which water used in street sprinkling was paid for, as well as labor in doing so, are not primarily liable for the claim of a water company against the city for the use of a water plant.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by T. J. Higgins and others against the city of San Diego and others and the San Diego Water Company. From a judgment in favor of the city on the water company's cross complaint and the city's answer thereto, plaintiffs having withdrawn, defendant water company appeals. Reversed.

Works & Works and Works & Lee, for appellant. H. E. Doolittle, City Atty., for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiffs brought this action, as taxpayers of the city of San Diego, to set aside a contract of lease between the said city and defendant water company. The case was tried on the cross complaint of the water company and the answer of the defendant city thereto, the plaintiffs having withdrawn from the action. The court found that the lease in question was void, and that the company was not entitled to recover the reasonable value of the use of its property by the city, nor was it entitled to damages for that breach of the contract. On appeal the decision of the lower court was affirmed as to the invalidity of the contract of lease, but the court held that the company was entitled to recover the reasonable value of the use of its plant and water. Higgins v. Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824. On rehearing, as to the form of judgment, the court held that the company was entitled to an "ordinary general judgment for whatever amount shall be found due it, without any direction as to the revenues out of which the judgment shall be satisfied." The directions given to guide the trial court will be better understood from the following excerpt from the court's opinion on the rehearing: "We cannot direct the superior court to enter a judgment upon the findings for the reasonable value to the city of the use of the water company's plant and of the water supplied, because it does not appear that the claims of the water company all accrued at a time when there were unappropriated revenues to meet them; and it will be necessary for the court to ascertain, as the basis of its judgment against the city, just when the claims of the water company for the reasonable value of use aforesaid, etc., equaled the amount of unappropriated revenues for respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant. Claims for the use of plant and the value of water supplied after such time are like other claims upon exhausted revenues. They are void, and will not warrant a judgment of any character." 118 Cal. 528, 50 Pac. 671. At the first trial the lower court found the reasonable value of the use of the plant and water per month; and at the second trial evidence was given of the payments made from time to time on account, and the money in the treasury to the credit of the various funds at the end of each month, and also showing the amounts accruing and unpaid each month during the time the plant was held by the city. The period of use was from June 1, 1891, to March 7, 1893. In ascertaining the unappropriated revenues to meet the water company's claims, the trial court found that there were but two funds provided by the city which were applicable to their payment, to wit, the water fund and the general fund; that there was no money in either of these funds, when the unpaid claims of the company accrued, available for their payment for the year 1891; that there was to the credit of these two funds for the year 1892, available for the payment of the company's claims for that year, only the sum of $5,421.29; that for the year 1893 there was available, in addition to payments made, the further sum of $5,997.22 to the credit of said two funds. This sum was sufficient to pay in full the balance due for 1893. Upon these findings the court gave judgment against the city for the sum of $11,418.51, leaving quite a large sum unprovided for. From this judgment the water company appeals.

The constitutional provision involved is section 18, art. 11: "No county, city, * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors," etc. Appellant's contention is that all contracts or liabilities incurred by the city during any fiscal year are valid and binding up to the amount of the revenues of the year, and that it is only contracts made or liabilities incurred after that time or beyond the revenue for the year that are void. Applied practically, the contention is that there were certain funds primarily applicable to the payment of the company's claims, to wit: (1) The general fund, the street fund, the street-sprinkling fund, and the water fund; and (2) that of all other funds, except possibly the school fund, all surplus remaining on hand at the end of the fiscal year in each fund, after paying the liabilities chargeable against that fund, must be applied to the payment of the general liabilities of the city for that fiscal year before being carried forward to the next year. This is the principal question presented by the appeal, and we give appellant's statement of its position still further, as follows: Conceding that moneys apportioned to any fund cannot be used for any other purpose until the object for which it has been apportioned has been accomplished, the learned counsel say: "But what we insist upon is that when the object for which it has been apportioned has been accomplished, by meeting all the claims specially chargeable to that fund, the surplus is applicable to the payment of other debts or liabilities of that year, and cannot be carried over into another year, leaving debts of the present year unpaid." If the municipal revenues were all thrown into a general fund, out of which all claims could be paid to the limit of such revenues, the solution would be much simplified. But this is not the case. Under the charter of the city there are certain designated funds, and the charter requires the revenues raised by taxation and from other sources, such as licenses, fines, etc., to be apportioned to these various funds. In a series of cases, commencing with Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, this court has decided that no indebtedness shall be incurred (except in the manner stated in the constitution) exceeding in any one year the revenue actually received by the municipality; i. e. that each year's income must pay each year's liability, no part of which shall be paid out of the income of any future year. Other cases dealing with this provision of the constitution are Shaw v. Stater, 74 Cal. 258, 15 Pac. 833; Schwartz v. Wilson, 75 Cal. 502, 17 Pac. 449; Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 644, 40 Pac. 1033; Weaver v. City and County of San Francisco, 111 Cal. 319, 43 Pac. 972; McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794; Bradford v. City and County of San Francisco, 112 Cal. 537, 44 Pac. 912; and this present case (118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670). The precise question now before us, as applicable to municipal expenditures, has not, we believe, been decided.

Looking to the language of the constitution, we find the only inhibition to be that "no * * * city * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability * * * exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year," etc. The natural and reasonable construction to be given this language is that all legitimate indebtedness of the municipality for any year must not exceed all the revenues and income provided for that year, and all indebtedness beyond such provision becomes void, and cannot be paid out of the funds of a succeeding year, or at all, except by the assent of two-thirds of the qualified voters. In the case before us there were moneys of considerable amount at the close of one or more years, when the company's claims accrued and were presented, against which there were no other claims made. These moneys had been distributed to various funds created by the charter, or by the council pursuant to the charter; but because the company's claims were not, on their face, payable out of any one of these funds, payment was refused, and these surplus moneys were carried over into the next year, and paid out as moneys belonging to the particular funds, on claims accruing against those funds during the succeeding year. In our opinion, there is nothing in the constitution forbidding the payment of the company's claims at the end of the year out of any revenue on hand in the various funds against which no claims existed which had accrued that year. If there is anywhere any inhibition against payment, it must be found in the municipal charter, or in some legislative provision elsewhere to be found. We know of no legislation applicable to the case, outside of the municipal charters act (Act March 16, 1889; St. 1889, p. 643). Sections 11, 12, p. 658, and section 12, p. 709, are substantially re-enactments of the constitutional provision, and there is nothing in these sections that goes further than to provide that no liability shall be incurred "during any fiscal year that cannot be paid out of the revenues provided for such fiscal year." This fiscal year begins January 1st, "for taxation, assessment and all other purposes." St. 1889, p. 698. If any provision is to be found in the act reaching the question now here, it is found in the section establishing so-called "funds" (Id. p. 707), or other sections, a summary of which will next be given. Section 9 reads: "The following funds are hereby established: (1) 'Fire department fund,' upon which all warrants must be drawn for fire department supplies and expenses whatsoever." Then follow 13 other funds, with like directions that all claims pertaining to the particular fund must be paid by warrants drawn on that fund. The section contains a general provision as follows: "The common council may, from time to time, establish such other funds as they may deem necessary, and shall establish and continue in force all interest funds, bond funds, bond redemption funds, and other funds now or hereafter established for the payment of all interest upon and the payment of all bonded indebtedness of the city; and the percentage of each annual tax levy shall be named for each fund, and the whole amount of taxes and revenue of the city apportioned to said several funds accordingly; and no transfer shall be made from one fund to another except as otherwise provided in this charter, unless by a vote of the common council, by ayes and noes, recorded in the journal of proceedings; and in no case shall any moneys be transferred from the school fund or library fund to any other fund. The common council shall by ordinance determine and designate to what funds shall be apportioned all moneys arising from the levy of all license taxes in the city; provided, that none of such moneys shall be apportioned to either the school fund, library fund or to any of the bond funds, interest funds or bond redemption funds of the city." Section 10 (page 708) requires all fines to be apportioned to funds as follows: "One-half thereof to the police department fund and the other half into the street fund." Section 11 (page 708) requires all officers who collect moneys belonging to the city, except moneys collected by the treasurer on account of redemption of property sold for taxes, to make monthly statements to the auditor and pay such moneys to the treasurer. The auditor must, upon filing the treasurer's receipt, "forthwith apportion the money so paid in to the several funds to which it belongs, and file with the treasurer his statement of such apportionment." There is nowhere any provision that, when money is once apportioned to a given fund, it shall be thenceforth dedicated to the payment only of warrants authorized to be drawn upon that fund. The nearest approach to such provision is the following: "In no case shall any moneys be transferred from the school fund or library fund to any other fund." Section 5 (page 705), relating to the duties of the auditor, requires that he "shall apportion all moneys paid into the treasury of the city, in accordance with the annual tax levy and ordinances imposing and apportioning license taxes, fines," etc., "and draw all warrants upon the treasury for salaries as fixed by the charter, and for all demands and bills allowed and ordered paid by the auditing committee." He must keep a cash book, which shall show at all times the amount of moneys received in the treasury, by whom paid in, and on what account, and show all moneys paid out, giving the number and date of warrant paid, and show the balance in the treasury. He shall keep in ledger form a just and correct account with the various funds of the city, and shall, monthly, make and report to the council an abstract of his accounts with said funds for the preceding month, showing receipts and disbursements, and from what received and for what paid out, and the balances in each fund, and the amount received in and paid out of the treasury during said month. Sections 1 and 2 (page 704) prescribe the duties of the auditing committee in the allowance of claims and the ordering of warrants in payment, and they must "designate the particular funds from which they are to be paid," etc. Bearing upon the question in some measure are the provisions found in sections 1 and 2 (page 696) as to levying the annual tax. The auditor, on or before the first Monday of April in each year, "shall prepare and transmit to the common council, accompanied with the estimates and reports of each department, * * * an estimate of the probable necessities for the city for the current fiscal year, giving the amount required to meet the * * * probable wants of all the departments * * * in detail, and showing the necessities of each of the several funds to be provided for in the treasury." The charter directs that this estimate shall, as near as may be, show the revenue anticipated and the probable expenditures, based on the expenditures and resources of the preceding year. With this estimate before them, the council are required to fix the tax rate and make the levy "necessary to raise sufficient revenues to carry on the different departments of the municipal government for the current fiscal year."

The "water fund" was established by ordinance No. 128, by which the lease of the water company's plant was accepted pursuant to the lease executed April 18, 1891, under the authority of joint resolution No. 56. The ordinance created a water department and a board of water commissioners, and prescribed their duties and fixed their compensation. Section 9 of the ordinance provides as follows: "That in conformity with the provisions of the city charter a water fund is hereby established into which all revenues derived from the department shall be paid, and upon which all warrants shall be drawn for salaries, material, supplies and expenses of every description connected with the water department, including the monthly payment of rent as stipulated by said lease, which warrants shall be drawn and paid in the order above mentioned." The ordinance authorized the board of water commissioners to "set all water rates for takers and consumers in accordance with such ordinances as are now in force or which may hereafter be adopted," etc.; and it provided that "all money received by said board shall be paid to the city treasurer, who shall keep duplicate receipts therefor, one of which shall be filed with the city auditor, who shall keep accurate accounts of all receipts and disbursements." There was no source of revenue specially designated upon which warrants were authorized to be drawn for the support of this department or to pay the lease rentals, except this water fund. The general fund was available, if at all, by reason of its being created to pay "the appropriations and general expenses not payable from other funds." Apparently the strongest expression in the charter, as above synopsised, tending to support the view taken by the trial court, is the following: "And the percentage of each annual tax levy shall be named for each fund, and the whole amount of taxes and revenue of the city apportioned to said several funds accordingly." But this is not equivalent to the declaration of a purpose to limit any particular class of expenditures to the apportionment made for that class; for, if that were so, there could be no transfer from one fund to another to re-enforce an exhausted fund. In Potter v. Fowzer, 78 Cal. 493, 21 Pac. 118, it was held that, where the law established a fund and expressly limited the amount of its receipts, the board of supervisors could not transfer money from the general fund, and thus increase the expenditures under this limited fund. If we could find in the charter of defendant any express limitation upon the expenditures under a particular fund, we would still have to find some provision which in its effect prohibited the use of any surplus there might remain in that fund at the end of the year for any other purpose, before we could say that this surplus could not be used for some other object. It is not denied by either party that this surplus might be transferred to some other fund, even though that other fund had been exhausted of all the money apportioned to it. But this could not be done if the money apportioned to each fund must be regarded as dedicated to the use of that fund alone. The object of the law in providing for transfer from one fund to another is to meet a case where in the original apportionment the council had miscalculated as to the probable requirements of the various funds. The power to create other than the funds designated in the charter shows that it was in the mind of its framers that some portion of the revenue provided for the fiscal year might be required for purposes not embraced in funds existing when the apportionment for the year might be made. The form of demands, bills, and claims against the city prescribed by section 3 (page 705) requires no mention by the claimant of any fund to which he must look; and when he receives his warrant, drawn as it must be upon some designated fund, he enters into no agreement to look alone to that fund. Carter v. Tilghman, 119 Cal. 104, 51 Pac. 34. If the fund is at the time of presentation exhausted, the claim cannot be paid; but the council may transfer money from some other fund and thus pay it, for it is not an illegal claim because when first presented there were not moneys to meet it. Where a legitimate indebtedness has been incurred for one of the various objects for which the municipality was created, and a claim therefor is duly presented, we do not think it is within the power of the municipality to defeat payment by drawing a warrant on some exhausted fund, or by refusing to draw a warrant because the particular fund applicable to its payment is exhausted. Carter v. Tilghman, supra. If at the close of the fiscal year there is a surplus in any fund, not expressly reserved by some law for the payment of claims upon that particular fund, and there are no claims existing against that fund created during the year, such surplus, and any other surplus remaining in any other such fund, should be and is available to discharge the unpaid legitimate indebtedness of that fiscal year; and we find nothing in the law to forbid this just and proper course to be taken. Let us not be misunderstood. There may be a surplus—for example, in the salary fund—at the end of the year, because some salaries have not yet been actually paid. There may be claims presented and allowed at the close of the year, for which warrants have not yet been drawn, upon other funds. In such case the surplus would be the moneys in the treasury against which there was no just claim presented or existing under the law, as in the case of salaries; and this surplus, in our judgment, should be treated as money applicable to the payment of any just debt then existing, created during that year. And a claimant cannot be deprived of his right to this surplus simply because the particular fund against which his warrant is drawn or should be drawn has become exhausted. See Stevens v. Truman, 127 Cal. 155, 59 Pac. 397. The city cannot defeat the payment of its honest debts by refusing to transfer funds to an exhausted fund, or by accumulating an undue proportion of the year's revenue in any one fund, or by transferring from one fund to another fund in order to defeat the claim against the fund from which the transfer was made. As was said in Carter v. Tilghman, supra, the council has "no power to indulge in a game of hide and seek with the funds" of the city. We do not wish to intimate that the council in the present case purposely arranged the funds at the close of the year so as to leave nothing in the water fund or general fund. But it must be obvious that by a simple bookkeeping process the council could so manipulate the funds of the city as to work great injustice, if they could carry over into another year the surplus of moneys in the various funds simply because there were no claims against the city which were primarily payable from such funds. We think the creditors of the city have the right to contract with reference to its entire revenue, and, while it may be that payment cannot be enforced so long as the particular fund primarily available is without moneys to make payment, still if at the end of the year there is a surplus in any other fund not claimed, or not by the charter expressly reserved, it should be used to pay the debts of the city, so far as the surplus will go. This seems to be all that was designed to be accomplished by the constitution or by the charter, and if its framers desired to go further, as the legislature has in some cases in county legislation (Potter v. Fowzer, supra), they should have so provided in plain and unmistakable terms.

2. It appeared that about October, 1891, a deposit of the city's funds of $45,500 (presumably the funds of the fiscal year 1891) was made by the treasurer in the California Savings Bank of San Diego. The bank failed in November, 1891, but the city auditor testified that this money "was carried in the bank, the same as if it was cash in the treasury"; that "the books showed just the same as if there was cash in the treasury." It so remained on the books until March 31, 1893, when a fictitious account, called "Dividend Fund," was entered on the books, by which the various funds which had been credited with their proportion of this $45,500 were debited with like amounts, aggregating this total amount, and this so-called "Dividend Fund" was credited, and thus the credit to the various funds was wiped out. In effect, this dividend fund took the place of what in ordinary bookkeeping might be called "Profit and Loss Account." An effort was made, by suit commenced in 1892, to collect some of this lost money, and some was collected; and, so far as we know, still other payments may be realized. The auditor testified that the ledger showed a credit by collections of $4,327.50 March 23, 1893, and $910 August 21, 1893. The trial court dealt with this $45,500 as unavailable, except as to the amount received, because apparently lost to the city through the failure of the bank. In this we think the court erred. The money was provided by the city, and became a part of its funds, against which liabilities might and did accrue, including the claims of the water company. It was said in Montague v. English, 119 Cal. 225, 51 Pac. 327: "The contract being valid in the first instance, we are unable to see how any event happening subsequent to that time can vitiate it. The mere fact that the fund upon which the party has relied for payment has become exhausted after he has furnished the material demanded by his contract, and before presentation of his claim, in no manner bears upon the validity of the contract or the legal liability of the city. Such unfortunate conditions facing the claimant only affect his remedy. The contract exists, and the liability of the city exists; but under the construction of this provision of the constitution, which declares that each year's revenue of the municipality must pay each year's indebtedness, the claimant is bound to look for satisfaction of his claim in the year's income, and only there." The contract here is implied, but it is none the less valid for that reason. Buck v. City of Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 Pac. 612, was also an implied contract on which the plaintiff was allowed by the court a general judgment. In the former appeal of the present case (118 Cal. and 50 Pac., supra) it was held that plaintiff was entitled to an "ordinary general judgment * * * without any direction as to the revenues out of which the judgment should be satisfied." And the further direction was given to ascertain when the plaintiff's claim "equaled the amount of unappropriated revenues for the respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant," etc. It cannot be said that the funds deposited in the bank were appropriated. They were part of the funds of the city while so deposited,—as much so as while in the city treasury,—and it was not until 1893 that they were written off the books. It is true, the allowed claims of plaintiff could not be paid out of these funds, simply because the money for the time being was beyond reach of the city; but this money constituted a part of the funds of the fiscal year, raised to meet legitimate claims, and must be treated as in the treasury for the fiscal year 1891, for the purpose of fixing the amount of plaintiff's judgment.

3. It is contended, touching the right of the company to recover all moneys paid out of the fund primarily applicable to its claims, (1) that all payments upon claims accruing subsequent to those of the company were illegally paid, and cannot properly be deducted from the amount it shall recover; (2) that the payment of the expenses of operating the water plant under the lease was illegal, because the lease was held to be void, and that the charter authorizes the appointment of water commissioners only when the city "shall become the owner of any water supply or shall decide to construct a system of water supply,"—citing St. 1889, p. 694, § 1. It is hence claimed that the payment of the salaries of the water commissioners and the other expenses of their offices was wholly illegal and void. Furthermore, it is urged that the salaries of these officers were illegally paid out of the water fund, because, as that fund was illegally created, the money therein in fact became a part of the general fund, out of which officers' salaries could not be paid; and (3) that the city justice was wrongfully paid out of the general fund during the whole time.

We find nothing in the charter that makes the city liable in the order in which claims accrue against it. In the absence of some such provision, "there is no obligation upon the municipality, any more than upon any other debtor, to pay the claims against it in the order in which they are incurred, unless they are presented in that order and in such condition and with such formalities as entitle the claimant to immediate payment." Weaver v. City and County of San Francisco, 111 Cal. 319, 43 Pac. 972. There is no priority of right among claimants, dependent upon the order of time in which liabilities are incurred, given by the charter, so far as the different funds are concerned, except as to the water fund; and there the provision is that the salaries of the commissioners and the expenses of operating the plant shall be paid before payment is made of the monthly rental.

As to the point that the payment of the operating expenses of the water plant was illegal because the lease was void, it is a sufficient answer that these payments rest upon the same ground as payments for the reasonable use of the plant. If, as was held here, notwithstanding that the lease was void the city was liable for the use of the plant, the city would certainly be authorized to make provision for payment, which it did by the organization of the water department and the water fund, and by the appointment of commissioners and other employes to conduct the department and collect the revenues. This was done under the provisions of the charter found in sections 1, 2, chapter 6 (St. 1889, p. 694). But it is objected that this could only be done upon the city becoming the "owner of any water supply, or shall decide to construct a system of water supply," etc.; and it is contended that, inasmuch as the city never became the "owner" of any water supply, the water fund and the water department had no legal existence. "The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. * * *" Civ. Code, § 654. "The ownership of property is either: (1) absolute; or (2) qualified." Id., § 678. We do not think the word "owner," occurring in the charter, was used in the sense that the city must be the holder of the title, but rather in the sense that it should have the control of a water supply. The term "owner" includes any person having a claim or interest in real property, though less than an absolute fee. Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 171. Anderson's Dictionary cites numerous cases in illustration of the principle that the term may designate the person in actual possession and occupancy of premises.

That the salary of the "city justice," so called, was paid out of the general fund for the whole period, is urged as an illegal diminution of that fund, and therefore the money so used was available to pay the water company. We do not find in the charter any such officer named. A police court is established, to be held by a "police judge," and the mayor is authorized to designate in writing any justice of the peace of the city, who "shall have power to preside in and hold the police judge's court," etc., in certain cases. Assuming that the city justice referred to is the one or the other of these judicial officers, and assuming that he should have been and could have been paid from the salary fund, but was instead paid from the general fund, what then? The water company could look to the general fund only at the end of the year. A warrant drawn upon this fund after it had become exhausted could not be paid, and this would be true even though the fund had become exhausted by payments of claims primarily payable from some other fund. The fact would be the same,—that there was then no money available in that fund. If the right to the surplus in this general fund had attached, and the company had demanded payment before the alleged illegal payment to the city justice, the case might be different, for the reason that at the time of such demand there would have been money in the fund available for its payment. The record does not show the facts in this regard. But the liability for the salary of the city justice was legally incurred, and this is not questioned; and so the payment out of the general fund was not the payment of an illegal claim, but at the worst was the payment of a legal claim out of the wrong fund. If there was no authority for so paying it, the remedy was to transfer money from the proper fund to the general fund to reimburse the latter fund. This was not done, however, and we see no way by which the remedy can be applied in this action. What was said in Weaver v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, quoted approvingly in McBean v. City of Fresno, supra, seems appropriate here: "Whoever deals with a municipality does so with notice * * * that all other persons dealing with the municipality have the same rights to compensation and are subject to the same limitations as he is. Even though at the time of making his contract there are funds in the treasury sufficient to meet the amount of his claim, he is charged with notice that these funds are liable to be paid out for municipal expenditures before his contract can mature into a claim against the city; and, if others whose claims have accrued subsequent to his are able to intercept these funds, he is in the same condition as any creditor who has dealt with one whose assets are exhausted before he presents his claim. * * * In dealing with the municipality he must rely upon the integrity of its officers that they will not incur any liabilities during the year in excess of the income and revenues provided for that year, and, as a prudent man, he will ascertain not only the amount of the income, but also the amount of the claims already existing, and of those that are likely to be incurred." In a concurring opinion in the former appeal of the case now before us, the chief justice expressed some dissent to this language, as too broad; but the court has not receded from the position taken in former cases, and we do not see how it can do so without subjecting the municipality to a possible liability in excess of its revenues previously provided, in an amount which may prove to be very burdensome. Appellant complains of payments made out of the general fund other than the salary of the city justice, but they were legal claims, and the same thing is true of them as in the instance of the salary.

4. We are brought lastly to notice the contention that not only were the water fund and the general fund primarily applicable to the payment of the company's claims, but that the street fund and the street-sprinkling fund were also so applicable. The charter established a "street fund" from which must be paid all expenses for street repairs, street sprinkling and cleaning, highway and bridge repairs, and all other street improvements not otherwise provided for in this charter." The only reason stated for claiming this fund as primarily liable is that it was liable for street sprinkling. The street-sprinkling fund is claimed to be primarily liable because the water used for sprinkling streets was payable out of that fund. This latter fund was not established by the charter. The ordinance establishing it does not appear in the record, and we have no knowledge as to what expenditures were by the ordinance made payable out of this fund. The record contains the items of expenses paid out of it, and they include water used for sprinkling streets, labor sprinkling streets, repairs of hydrants and sprinklers, purchase of hose, etc. The answer to appellant's contention, as given by the learned trial judge, printed in respondent's brief, was as follows: "None of the company's claims, however, are founded on liabilities incurred for water furnished for street sprinkling. There is no evidence that any of the water furnished was used for that purpose. Aside from that, the company's claim is a general one, arising out of the liability of the city to pay for the use of the company's plant and the value of the water supplied during the time the city retained possession of it." This seems to us a satisfactory answer. There is nothing in the charter or in any ordinance shown to us from which it may be reasonably inferred that either of these funds was primarily liable for the rent of the company's plant. The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded; the cause to be retried on the evidence used at the last trial, with leave to either party to submit further evidence.

We concur: GRAY, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded; the cause to be retried on the evidence used at the last trial, with leave to either party to submit further evidence.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, but there are some points in the decision and some things said in the opinion from which I dissent. A passage is quoted from the opinion in Weaver v. City and County of San Francisco with commendation. My reasons for dissenting from that doctrine are fully stated in my concurring opinion upon the former appeal of this case. 118 Cal. 529, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670. But even that doctrine does not sustain the conclusion reached in this case. In Weaver v. City and County of San Francisco it was held that a judgment against a city must be made payable out of the revenues of the year in which the claim accrued; but it was not held that the claimant could not have a judgment for the amount earned, because the money in the treasury at the time he made the contract, or coming in afterwards, had been misapplied in payment of claims subsequently accruing, and therefore void. Here, however, as I understand the opinion, it is held that the claimant upon a valid contract cannot have a judgment for more than is left in the treasury at the end of the fiscal year, although it be shown that large sums were paid out after its claim accrued upon claims that were invalid. This is a doctrine which finds no support in anything that has ever been decided in any previous case in this court. The right of the plaintiff to its judgment does not depend upon the ability of the defendant to pay it, or the means of enforcing it. How the judgment is to be collected is a question wholly foreign to this case. All that we have here to decide is the amount of the plaintiff's valid claim, and that is unaffected by any illegal expenditures made by the defendant after the respective monthly claims matured.

McFADDEN v. GOETTERT et al. (S. F. 1,621.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1901.)

LOST CERTIFICATES OF STOCK—OWNERSHIP—WANT OF PROOF—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff lost two certificates of mining stock. Defendant found two certificates of the same stock, and plaintiff sued him for conversion of the shares. Plaintiff did not know the numbers of his certificates. His broker testified that the certificates of the stock purchased for plaintiff by him bore the same numbers as those found by defendant, basing his recollection thereof on a memorandum which he made on plaintiff's bill at the time. Plaintiff had thrown back the bill on his desk, and he had kept it in a small account book until the day before the trial. The bill itself showed the writing on its face to be very faint, but the numbers of the certificates were written very heavily, which discrepancy the broker could not explain. The bill purported to be for 300 shares of stock, while the numbers on the reverse side represented only 250 shares. The broker's assertion that it was his custom to so write the numbers of certificates on his bills was contradicted. No other evidence tended to identify the certificates lost with those found. Held, that a verdict for defendant, because plaintiff's ownership of the certificates was not sufficiently proven, was supported by the evidence.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Wm. R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by one McFadden against one Goettert and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas E. Curran (Geo. H. Francoeur, of counsel), for appellant. Chas. G. Nagle, Wilbur G. Zeigler, and H. H. McPike, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff charges the defendants with the conversion of certain shares of stock belonging to him, and seeks by this action to recover damages therefor. His cause of action is based upon the following facts: At some time in the early part of 1896 he owned and had in his possession two certificates, representing, respectively, 50 and 100 shares of the capital stock of the Consolidated California & Virginia Mining Company. These certificates were in an envelope, which he carried in one of the pockets of his coat, and which was lost therefrom. At some time after he last saw the envelope he missed the stock, and upon making inquiries was informed that the defendant Goettert had found two certificates of the same stock, corresponding in the number of shares to those which he had lost. The certificates found by Goettert were numbered, respectively, 33,191 and 34,122, and were delivered by him to the defendant Heringhi, who claimed to be the owner thereof, and who afterwards sold them through his brokers, Stauf & Cooper, the other defendants. The plaintiff in his complaint alleged that he was the owner of the shares of stock evidenced by certificates which were thus numbered, and this allegation was denied by the defendants. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the defendants. From the judgment entered thereon, and also from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

The issue presented for trial was the plaintiff's ownership of the shares of stock represented by the certificates which were found by Goettert, and the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show such ownership in himself; for, unless he was the owner of these shares, he had no right of action against the defendants, and could not question their title thereto. Upon this point the judge instructed the jury as follows: "The plaintiff is obliged to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that this stock found by defendant Goettert was his (plaintiff's) stock. It is not sufficient that he owned one hundred and fifty shares of Consolidated California & Virginia mining stock, but that he owned the identical shares found by Goettert. You are to infer the identity or nonidentity of the stock claimed to have been converted with that claimed to have been lost from all the circumstances in the case on both sides." No exception was taken to this instruction; the error relied on by the appellant being that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

The plaintiff testified that when he purchased the stock he did not take the numbers of the certificates, and could not say what the numbers were. The broker through whom he purchased it testified that he had purchased for the plaintiff 150 shares of the capital stock of the above-named corporation, represented by certificates with the above-named numbers. He stated, however, that his recollection of the numbers was based entirely upon the bill therefor which he had made out to the plaintiff before he delivered the stock to him, and that his reason therefor was that he checked off the certificates by writing the numbers of the same upon the back of the bill. He also testified that when he handed the bill to the plaintiff the plaintiff threw it back upon the desk, and that he (the witness) placed it in a small account book kept by him, and that it had remained there until the day before the trial, when, upon a search among his papers, he found it. The bill was produced, and upon inspection the writing upon the face appeared quite faint, while the numbers upon the reverse were written very heavily. The witness stated that he was unable to account for this discrepancy. He also stated that it was his custom to indorse the numbers of certificates sold by him upon the back of the bill presented to his customers, but a bill was shown in which he had failed to observe this custom. Moreover, the bill presented to the plaintiff purported to be for 300 shares of the capital stock of this corporation, while the numbers of the certificates written upon the reverse thereof represented only 250 shares. There was no other evidence tending to identify the certificates found by Goettert with those lost by the plaintiff, and, in view of the above testimony of the broker, it may well be assumed that, under the above instruction of the court, the jury disregarded his statements regarding the numbers upon the certificates sold to the plaintiff, and, if so, the plaintiff failed to maintain his action.

When the jury brought in their verdict certain of the jurors stated, in answer to an inquiry from the court, that they doubted the identity of the stock. We cannot review the action of the jury in determining the weight to be given to the testimony in this particular, and as the court, upon the motion for a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, refused to set aside the verdict, it must be assumed that he also was satisfied that the plaintiff had failed to show his ownership of the stock found by Goettert. The judgment and order are affirmed.

BANKS—DEPOSITOR—INDORSEMENT OF CERTIFICATE—RIGHT TO RECALL DEPOSIT—LIABILITY OF BANK FOR PAYMENT—APPEAL—NOTICE.

1. Where a depositor delivered his certificate to the bank, indorsed to the sheriff, with directions to pay him the money whenever he should deliver to the bank for deposit a certificate of redemption of certain lands, and the sheriff never complied with the condition or made any claim to the money or certificate, the depositor may recall his deposit, and payment of the money to him by the bank discharges it from all liability.

2. Unless notice of appeal from the judgment was made within six months after its entry, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, the appeal cannot be considered.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Edward I. Jones, Judge.

Action by B. McGorray against the Stockton Savings & Loan Society and another. From a judgment in favor of the defendant society, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

Elliott & Elliott and A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Nicol, Orr & Nutter, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brings the action to recover from defendant bank $12,778.05 alleged to have been deposited with the bank by plaintiff on September 19, 1894, with instructions "to pay the same to Thomas Cunningham, sheriff of San Joaquin county, provided the said sheriff called for the same and left with the bank for plaintiff a certificate of redemption of certain real property on or before the 15th day of November, 1894." The complaint further alleges that "the said sheriff having failed to call for said money and leave for plaintiff with said bank said certificate of redemption, and the time for so doing having elapsed, the plaintiff demanded of said defendant bank * * * the amount of money deposited with it as aforesaid," which was refused, etc. This demand is alleged to have been made about November 15, 1894. Upon this complaint judgment was demanded against the defendant bank. The bill of exceptions shows that on motion of defendant the court ordered plaintiff to bring in Cunningham as a party to the action, by proper amendment; that thereafter plaintiff filed an amended complaint, in the title of which he named Cunningham as defendant; that no allegation was made of or concerning Cunningham, or any interest asserted by him in the money in controversy; that Cunningham appeared by general demurrer, and it was sustained by plaintiff's consent, and plaintiff's counsel refusing to amend as to Cunningham, and plaintiff consenting, judgment on demurrer was given in favor of Cunningham, and he seems to have passed out of the case. The court found: That on September 19, 1894, plaintiff deposited with the defendant bank $12,778, and at his request the bank issued to plaintiff a certificate of deposit as follows: "No. 61,575. Stockton Savings & Loan Society. Stockton, Cal., September 19, 1894. Certificate of Deposit 15. B. McGorray has deposited in this bank ($12,778) twelve thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight dollars, payable to himself or order on return of this certificate properly indorsed. S. S. Littlehale, Assistant Cashier. This certificate does not bear interest. Not subject to check." That subsequent to the issuance and delivery of the certificate McGorray indorsed it as follows: "Pay to Thomas Cunningham, sheriff of the county of San Joaquin. [Signed] B. McGorray." That thereafter, and with said indorsement thereon so made by him, McGorray delivered said certificate to the bank, with instructions to hold the same subject to the order of Cunningham, sheriff as aforesaid, and to deliver the same to him and pay him said money "at any time when he (said Cunningham) should deliver to the defendant for plaintiff a certificate of redemption of certain lands situate in the county of San Joaquin." That defendant has ever since held and now holds said certificate, and it has been during all said time, and is now, ready, able, and willing to deliver the same to Cunningham upon his delivering to it, for McGorray, a certificate of redemption of said land, and defendant has been able and willing at all said times to pay the money represented by said certificate to plaintiff upon the proper indorsement thereof. That plaintiff on several occasions inquired of defendant at its bank how he could obtain the money represented by said certificate, and on each occasion was informed by defendant's officers that such money would be paid on the indorsement of said certificate by said Cunningham. That in the month of May, 1898, plaintiff demanded of defendant payment to him of said sum, and at the same time defendant, on said demand, offered to pay plaintiff said money upon the written order of said Cunningham, or upon the indorsement of said certificate by Cunningham. That such order or indorsement of said Cunningham was at no time obtained or made, and no demands other than as above were ever at any time made, by plaintiff, and no certificate of redemption of said land has been delivered to defendant for plaintiff. As conclusion of law, the court found that, by the indorsement of said certificate of deposit and delivery thereof to defendant, plaintiff created and vested in Cunningham, sheriff of said county, an apparent interest in said certificate and the money represented thereby; that defendant cannot safely pay said money, or any part thereof, without the order or indorsement of the certificate by Cunningham, and plaintiff can take nothing by his action. Judgment went for defendant, from which, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

There is no evidence whatever that Cunningham at any time had any interest or claimed any interest in the money or certificate of deposit. He was not in privity with either the plaintiff or the bank. He had nothing to do with making the deposit. The indorsement of the certificate to Cunningham did not in itself operate to transfer any title to or interest in it, or in the money it represented, in the absence of any act of Cunningham by way of acceptance or confirmation. He was a stranger to the transaction and in ignorance of it, and it was only in the event that he did a certain thing that the certificate was to be delivered to him and he was to be entitled to the money. He never did this thing, and it is not pretended that he was prevented from doing it by plaintiff, or that he ever offered or that he still desires to do it. When brought into court as defendant he made no claim to the property, and suffered the case to be tried without answer by him. Defendant asked that he be made a party to the action, and yet when brought in it took no steps to cause Cunningham to answer. The fact is that Cunningham made no claim to the property, so far as the evidence discloses, and it was a matter of indifference to plaintiff whether he became a defendant or not. Defendant asked in its answer that Cunningham be made a party, but it did not allege that he claimed any interest in the property, or that he "made demand * * * for such property" upon defendant, as required by section 386, Code Civ. Proc. Cunningham was not put to his answer by either party, and, so far as we can see, the case stands as though Cunningham at no time had anything whatever to do with the matter, and was wholly ignorant of what plaintiff had done. The question then is, could plaintiff recall his deposit, and would the payment of the money to him by defendant discharge the latter from all liability? We think the answer must be in the affirmative. The bank became the agent of plaintiff to do a particular act (Civ. Code, §§ 2295, 2297), and the principal (plaintiff) could terminate the agency at any time before the act was performed and before any rights of third persons had intervened. The agency was terminated by its revocation. Id. § 2356. The evidence was that the condition on which the particular act was to have been performed never happened, and that the only third person who by any possibility was concerned in the matter is not shown to have acquired any rights, or to have been in any way interested in the subject of the agency. Upon revocation of the agency by plaintiff the burden was on defendant to show that other claim was made upon the deposit, and in this defendant failed, and plaintiff was entitled to have the money paid to him.

Respondent's point that the notice of appeal from the judgment was not made within six months after entry of judgment, and such appeal cannot be considered, is well taken (section 939, Code Civ. Proc.); and this court cannot, therefore, direct a judgment to be entered for plaintiff, if it were so disposed. Plaintiff gave notice of a motion to vacate the judgment, and enter another and different judgment, and correct the conclusions of law filed in the action, under sections 663, 663½, Id. This notice was separate from the notice of motion for a new trial. The motion for a new trial was heard and denied, but the motion to vacate the judgment and correct the conclusions of law seems not to have been made, nor was any order entered on such a motion. We assume that appellant does not rely on this motion. No question is raised, however, as to the consideration of the motion for a new trial, and we will raise none. It was specified in the notice that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, and that the decision is against law. Assuming that the evidence supports the findings, still it must follow, from what has been already said, that the order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

NOLAN BROS. SHOE CO. v. NOLAN. (S. F. 1455.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1900.)

TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES-INFRINGEMENT—DECEPTION OF PUBLIC—FAMILY NAME—INJUNCTION.

1. Plaintiff's acquiescence in defendant's use of a certain trade-name for a number of years in a wholesale shoe business does not preclude him from objecting to its use in a retail shoe business, since the mere use of a trade-name in one business does not give the right to use it in another business.

2. Where a retail dealer and his predecessors have conducted a business under a trade-name for 22 years in a city, another's use of the same name in the same business may be restrained as an infringement of the former's rights.

3. In an action to restrain the use of "Nolan Bros." as a trade-name, that the name "Nolan & Sons" was used by complainant's predecessor for a time does not show an abandonment of the term "Nolan Bros.," where the latter name at no time for a period of 22 years prior to the suit was absent from complainant's place of business.

4. In a suit to restrain the use of "Nolan Bros." as a trade-name in a retail shoe business, the fact that defendant was successor to a wholesale firm doing a shoe business under the name of "Nolan Bros." will not entitle him to the use of such name in the retail shoe business as successor to such firm, as the latter is a distinct and different business.

5. In a suit to restrain the use of "Nolan Bros." as a trade-name, a contention that "Nolan," being a family name, could not be used as a trade-name, so as to exclude its use by another of the same name, cannot be sustained, where such trade-name was used by defendant as "W. H. Nolan & Co., Successor to Nolan Bros., 10-12 Sutter Street," and all the name except the "Nolan Bros." was inconspicuous characters, only visible for a short distance, so as to deceive the public into believing that it was complainant's place of business.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Bill by Nolan Bros. Shoe Company against W. H. Nolan to restrain the latter from using the name "Nolan Bros." in connection with his business as a retail shoe dealer. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Goodfellow (Jas. L. Robison, of counsel), for appellant. Smith & Murasky (C. W. Lynch and F. G. Drury, of counsel), for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Two brothers by the name of Nolan were engaged for 10 years in carrying on a wholesale shoe business in the city of San Francisco under the name of "Nolan Bros." One brother sold his interest in the business to the other, and that brother (W. H. Nolan) shortly thereafter closed out the wholesale business, and opened up a retail shoe business at another point in the city, under the name of "W. H. Nolan & Co., successor to Nolan Bros." A third brother, P. F. Nolan, had been engaged in the retail shoe business in the city of San Francisco for 22 years, some of this time in company with J. C. Nolan, a brother, and some of the time joined with one or more of his sons. In the year 1895, and shortly after the defendant W. H. Nolan had launched his retail shoe business upon the world, P. F. Nolan placed his business into a corporation under the name of "Nolan Bros. Shoe Company," and thereupon that company brought this action to restrain defendant in the conduct of his business from using the trade-name "Nolan Bros." The action is based upon the claim that such use is an infringement upon the rights of plaintiff to the use of the name of Nolan Bros.

It is asserted upon the part of defendant that plaintiff allowed him to use the name "Nolan Bros." in the conduct of his shoe business for a period of 10 years without objection, and that it is now too late to attack his right to its use. Whatever legal effect this long term of use might have as against plaintiff's claims, if defendant had been engaged in the retail shoe business, we will not decide; for during that period of time defendant was only engaged in the wholesale shoe business, and for that reason no occasion or necessity arose for plaintiff to make any objection. The use of the name by the defendant did not interfere with plaintiff's business, and hence it was an immaterial matter to him. Plaintiff was not injured by the use of the name and therefore was not concerned in the use. If defendant had been using the name "Nolan Bros." for these 10 years in the conduct of the plumbing business, plaintiff surely could not have objected. It does not appear from the showing here made that defendant's wholesale shoe business interfered with plaintiff's retail shoe business to any degree; and without a showing of injury plaintiff had no right, under these circumstances, to object to defendant's use of the name, any more than if the defendant had been engaged in the plumbing business. The mere use of a trade-name in one business does not give a party a right to its use in any other business. We therefore attach no importance to the use of the name "Nolan Bros." by defendant for 10 years without objection upon the part of plaintiff, and we hold that the case stands exactly as if defendant engaged in the retail shoe business, never having been in the wholesale business.

Upon the foregoing assumption, has plaintiff such an interest in the name "Nolan Bros." as to be entitled to an order restraining defendant from making use of it? And this depends upon whether or not plaintiff's predecessor in interest had established a right to the use of the trade-name "Nolan Bros." in the retail shoe business when defendant started his retail shoe business. We will not give the evidence in great detail upon this question. While to some extent it may be said to be conflicting, yet we deem it ample to support the restraining order made by the trial court to the effect that the defendant's use of the name was an interference with plaintiff's rights. Plaintiff's predecessor in interest had been carrying on the retail shoe business in the city of San Francisco 22 years or more, and in a great many ways, and certainly for a great portion of that time, was doing business under the name of "Nolan Bros." The evidence before us of abandonment of the name by plaintiff's predecessor in interest does not establish the fact. The fact that the name "Nolan & Sons" was used as a trade-mark for a certain period of time by plaintiff's predecessor in interest is but a circumstance, and not at all sufficient of itself, to prove an abandonment. "A person may temporarily lay aside his mark and resume it without having in the meantime lost his property in the right of its use. Abandonment in the nature of a forfeiture must be strictly proven." Browne, Trade-Marks, § 681. In Julian v. Drill Co., Price & St. Am. Trade-Mark Cas. 572, 573, it is said: "Abandonment means general abandonment to the public, and must be shown affirmatively and positively as affecting the interests of the public." At no time during the period of 22 years was the name "Nolan Bros." absent from the place of business. For 14 years continuously prior to the commencement of this action four metallic signs, in conspicuous places upon the front of the store, bore the trade-name "Nolan Bros."; for 13 years immediately prior to the commencement of the action within the doorway of the store a large glass sign carried over its front the words "Nolan Bros."; for the same length of time a large sign bearing the words "Nolan Bros.," so that all could see it, was visible from the office door; and for the past 2 years prior to the commencement of this action it is conclusively established by the affidavits that the business was in all substantial respects carried on under the name of "Nolan Bros." The fact that other trade-names may have been used by the plaintiff for a short period of time in connection with the one here involved cannot neutralize the effect of the evidence quoted. Our conclusion is that this evidence greatly lacks in showing an abandonment of the right of plaintiff to use the name "Nolan Bros." Coleman, Burden & Warthen Co. v. Dannenberg Co. (Ga.) 30 S. E. 639, 41 L. R. A. 470, is cited to support the contention that P. F. Nolan could not, by using the name, "Nolan Bros. Shoe Co." two years before incorporation, acquire any right to the use of the name "Nolan Bros." It is claimed upon this point that the use of tags by P. F. Nolan, conspicuously indicating and representing that the business conducted by him was owned and conducted by a corporation, was a fraud on the public, by which he could not acquire any right. On examination, we find the case cited fails to support the contention, while Block v. Distributing Co. (C. C.) 95 Fed. 978, is the other way.

It is next claimed "that defendant had the absolute right to use a sign indicating that he was the successor to Nolan Bros., 10-12 Sutter street, that being the fact." What we have already said is opposed to this contention. The wholesale business carried on by defendant and his brother in another portion of the city is not the same business now carried on by defendant. The latter is a separate, distinct, and different business, and the statement upon the sign that he (defendant) is a successor of the business formerly conducted under the name of "Nolan Bros., 10-12 Sutter Street," is not correct. No one succeeded to that business, and it had no successor. The business became extinct, and the sign does not express the facts.

It is insisted that "the family name of a tradesman or manufacturer cannot be made a trade-mark so as to exclude the right to its use by another bearing the same family name." This contention is sound to a limited extent only. If the name is used in a manner clearly indicating an intent to mislead and deceive the public, then the use of the name will be restrained by a court of equity. The first answer to appellant's contention in this regard is found in the fact that it is not a use of the family name "Nolan," standing alone, to which objection is made, but it is a use of the name "Nolan Bros.," and in a case like that at bar the principle of law invoked seems to have no application. Furthermore, it is shown by the affidavits "that the said defendant established a retail boot and shoe business at No.

1022 and 1024 Market street, * * * and over such store placed a large sign containing the words and figures following, to wit, 'W. H. Nolan & Co., Successors to Nolan Bros., 10-12 Sutter Street.' That the words 'W. H. Nolan & Co., Successors to,' and the words and figures '10-12 Sutter Street,' are in such small and inconspicuous letters and figures that the same cannot be read at a distance of more than seventy-five feet or one hundred feet, while the words 'Nolan Bros.' are in such large and conspicuous letters, and so prominently displayed, that the same may be readily seen and read for a distance of nearly three hundred feet thereof." It is also stated in the affidavits of various parties that said sign is a deceptive sign, and is calculated to deceive the public, and lead the public, the dealers and buyers of boots and shoes and footwear, and the patrons and customers of plaintiff, to believe that the plaintiff is conducting a retail boot and shoe store, and a branch place of business, at Nos. 1022 and 1024 Market street. It is further shown that almost daily, ever since the establishment of said store by said defendant at Nos. 1022 and 1024 Market street, the salesmen of plaintiff have encountered many of the buyers of boots and shoes and the customers and patrons of plaintiff, who have purchased shoes at the store of defendant under the impression and belief that they were dealing with the plaintiff. Under the foregoing facts appellant's contention upon the proposition that he has here advanced is undermined. England v. Publishing Co., 8 Daly, 375.

The remaining propositions advanced by appellant are not considered meritorious. For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

SECURITY LOAN & TRUST CO. v. MATERN et al. (L. A. 735.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1901.)

MORTGAGES—ADDITIONAL SECURITY—PLEADING—ONE CAUSE OF ACTION—RELEASE OF PART OF LAND—MORTGAGE OF THIRD PARTY—CONSIDERATION.

1. A mortgagee released part of mortgagor's land at his request, taking a mortgage on the property of B. as additional security. The agreed payments not being made, the mortgagee sought to foreclose the original and the subsequent mortgage. The complaint set out the making of the mortgages, in a first and second count, and averred that each mortgage was given as security for the same note. Held, that only one cause of action was stated against defendants, though different counts were used and different relief was sought from different defendants.

2. Where a mortgagee released his mortgage as to part of the land, taking a mortgage on another's lands as additional security for the payment of the mortgagor's note, the second mortgagor was a proper defendant in an action to foreclose the first mortgage, since he was responsible for any deficiency that might arise on foreclosure of the first mortgage.

3. Where a mortgage stated that it was given as security for a note dated March 1, 1895, "according to its terms," made by M. in favor of plaintiff, and secured by a mortgage of the same date, giving the date and place of record of the mortgage, there was a sufficiently definite description of the obligation for which it was given, and hence the mortgage was not invalid for want of definite description.

4. Where a mortgage was executed as security for the payment of an instrument "according to its terms," which were set forth in another recorded mortgage, the fact that the instrument was not a note, though referred to as such by the mortgage for security, does not invalidate the mortgage, since the mortgagor is presumed to have known its character, it having been set forth in the public records.

5. Where plaintiff released a part of mortgaged premises from the lien of its mortgage on condition that the mortgagor would obtain another mortgage for it as additional security, and a third party executed such mortgage at the request of the mortgagor, there was a sufficient consideration for the execution of the latter mortgage.

6. Where defendant testified that he had executed a mortgage without consideration, evidence that he had executed such mortgage at the request of another mortgagor in order to enable the latter to make an exchange of that portion of his mortgaged premises, which the mortgagee released in consideration of the new mortgage, and that such release and mortgage were deposited together in escrow, and then recorded at the same time, was admissible to rebut defendant's testimony.

7. Where a mortgage given in consideration of the release of a portion of other mortgaged premises was shown to be one transaction with the release, the release did not absolve defendant from liability on his mortgage.

8. Where a mortgage was given as additional security for the payment of a note secured by another mortgage, an agreement by a third party to guaranty the obligation of the latter mortgage was no defense to plaintiff's right to foreclose the mortgage given as security.

9. Where a mortgage was given as additional security for the payment of a note secured by a mortgage on other premises, the conveyance of the latter premises to defendant, who had made the mortgage for additional security, was no defense to an action to foreclose such mortgage together with the original, since such conveyance was not of record or delivered at the beginning of the action, though its date was anterior thereto.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by the Security Loan & Trust Company against Lena B. Mattern and another to foreclose certain mortgages. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Dunnigan & Dunnigan and Luke D. Bechtel, for appellants. Miller & Brown, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant Lena B. Mattern executed to the respondent a mortgage bearing date March 1, 1895, upon certain land in the county of Los Angeles, to secure payment of the sum of $3,500, according to the terms of a promissory note therefor executed by her to the plaintiff at the same time, with certain coupons for interest therein specified and described. The mortgage was recorded March 18, 1895. In August, 1897, the mortgagee executed at the request of Mrs. Mattern a release of a portion of the mortgaged land, and at the same time, in consideration thereof, the appellant Bechtel executed to the respondent a mortgage upon certain other property to secure the payment of the note executed by Mrs. Mattern. The release bears date June 24, 1897, and the mortgage of Bechtel bears date August 2, 1897, but each instrument was delivered and recorded August 9, 1897. Mrs. Mattern having failed to make the payments as agreed by her, the present action was brought for the foreclosure of her mortgage; the plaintiff also setting forth in its complaint the execution by Bechtel of his mortgage to secure the same obligation, and praying for a sale of the land described in each mortgage. Answers to the complaint were filed on behalf of each of the appellants, and the cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, directing a sale of the property described in the Mattern mortgage, and that, if the proceeds thereof should be insufficient to satisfy the amount of the plaintiff's claim, the property described in the Bechtel mortgage should then be sold, and, if then there should be a deficiency, judgment therefor should be docketed against Mrs. Mattern. From this judgment, and from an order denying them a new trial, Mrs. Mattern and Bechtel have appealed.

Each of the appellants demurred to the complaint upon the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, uncertainty, and want of facts to constitute a cause of action. The demurrers were chiefly based upon the theory that two distinct causes of action are set forth in the complaint,—one against Mrs. Mattern and one against Bechtel; and the demurrers specified several objections to portions of the complaint which are therein styled as counts, but which are treated by the demurrants as distinct causes of action. The court properly overruled these demurrers.

Although one portion of the complaint is entitled therein "First Count," and another portion "Second Count," the portions so entitled do not purport to set forth separate causes of action, but to state the facts by which the defendants, Mattern and Bechtel, are respectively related to the plaintiff's cause of action. A complaint, while setting forth a single cause of action, may at the same time ask for different relief from different defendants, according as they are connected with this cause of action; and its character is to be determined from its contents, rather than from a misnomer on the part of the pleader. The averment that the mortgages referred to in the different counts were given as security for the payment of the same promissory note, and that this note which is set forth in each of the counts is the same note, indicates with sufficient clearness that only one cause of action is set forth in the complaint. Under the averment that the Bechtel mortgage was executed as additional security for the payment by Mrs. Mattern of the notes secured by her mortgage, Bechtel was properly made a defendant for the purpose of securing to the plaintiff, according to the terms of its mortgage, any deficiency that might arise upon the foreclosure of the Mattern mortgage. See Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200. The statement in Bechtel's mortgage that it was given as security for the payment of a promissory note dated March 1, 1895, "according to its terms," made by Mrs. Mattern in favor of the plaintiff, and secured by a mortgage of the same date, giving also the date and place of record of the mortgage, was a sufficiently definite description of the obligation for which it was given.

Neither is the mortgage invalidated because the instrument set forth in the Mattern mortgage, to which it refers, is not strictly a promissory note, within the definition of the Civil Code. Having executed his mortgage as security for the payment of an instrument "according to its terms," which is set forth in a public record, he is presumed to have known its character, and will not be relieved from his obligation because he has styled it a "promissory note." As the complaint sets forth at length the instrument for which the Mattern mortgage was given, its designation as a promissory note is immaterial. That instrument expressly provides for the payment of the interest coupons which are therein described, and no uncertainty is created by subsequently setting forth at length the form of these coupons.

The objection to the averment in the complaint in reference to the item of $29.57 advanced for the preservation of the Mattern property needs no consideration, since no claim therefor was made by the plaintiff at the trial, and the item is not included in the judgment.

The defendant Bechtel alleged in his answer that the mortgage executed by him was without any consideration, and at the trial he gave testimony to the same effect. Aside from the consideration which is presumed from a written instrument, a sufficient consideration was shown for the execution of his mortgage. It was shown that he had executed it at the request of Mrs. Mattern, and that prior to its execution, Mrs. Mattern being desirous of effecting an exchange of a portion of the mortgaged premises for other property, a contract for that purpose was prepared by him; that the plaintiff agreed to release this portion of the premises from the lien of her mortgage upon the condition that Bechtel would make this mortgage; that he executed the mortgage at the request of Mrs. Mattern; that the mortgage thus made by him, together with the release by the plaintiff, were deposited in escrow until it was shown to the satisfaction of the plaintiff that Bechtel's property was unincumbered; and that the two instruments were placed of record at the same time. The contention that this evidence was outside of the pleadings was properly overruled. The evidence was admissible in rebuttal of Bechtel's testimony that he had executed his mortgage without any consideration. The further objection that, by introducing the release of a portion of the mortgaged premises, Bechtel was absolved from liability upon his mortgage, is without merit, since it appeared that the mortgage was given for the purpose of procuring the release, and was a part of the same transaction, and that this transaction was conducted in part by Bechtel himself, and was carried into effect with the knowledge and consent of all the parties interested. As the release was given at the request of Mrs. Mattern, her objection that the action is for a foreclosure of only a portion of the property originally mortgaged is entitled to no consideration.

The agreement by Trexler to guaranty the obligation of Mrs. Mattern was not available as a defense to the plaintiff's right to foreclose the mortgage given by Bechtel. Neither was the conveyance of the mortgaged premises to him from Mattern available as a defense in the action. This conveyance was not of record at the commencement of the action, and, although bearing date prior thereto, is averred by Bechtel in his answer to have been delivered to him and recorded June 9, 1898, subsequent to the commencement of the action.

Many other objections to rulings of the court in receiving or excluding evidence are presented by the appellants in their brief, as well as to the action of the court in the trial and determination of the cause, but they are not of such a nature as to demand extended consideration. The objection that the court erred in adjudging the attorney's fee allowed to the plaintiff to be a lien upon the land of Mrs. Mattern, thereby creating a greater deficiency to be enforced out of Bechtel's land, is not sustained by the record. The court finds the amount due upon the promissory note for principal and interest thereof, and declares that that amount is a lien upon the lands described in her mortgage, and in its decree directs a sale of sufficient of the land "to raise the amount due unto the plaintiff for the principal and interest and costs of this suit and the expenses of sale." The court does not find or decree that the attorney's fees allowed by it are a lien upon the land of Mrs. Mattern, or direct the sale of any property in satisfaction thereof. The court was authorized to fix the amount of the attorney's fees without receiving any evidence upon the subject. Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272, 40 Pac. 394. The judgment and order are affirmed.

ing was said about the deposit of a jury fee, and it is perfectly manifest from the record that the rule of the superior court in respect to that matter was never considered as having any bearing upon the point to be decided. The ruling of the court denying a jury trial was based simply and solely upon the ground that the defendants were not entitled to a jury, and, this ruling being made, it would have been a perfectly vain and useless act to deposit or tender the jury fee. The rule merely requires the jury fee to be deposited by the party demanding a jury before the commencement of the trial, and, if a jury trial is denied in advance, the rule can have no operation. Besides, the party making the demand has all the time before the commencement of the trial to make his deposit. Here, when the demand was made, there was no jury in attendance, and the trial by the court, to which the defendants were forced, began and ended before it was possible for a jury trial to have commenced. For these reasons I think the failure of defendants to deposit or offer the jury fee is no answer to their position. It is quite as clear that they did not waive their right to a jury by any of the proceedings referred to in the department opinion. There can be no waiver of a jury except in one of the three modes enumerated in section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Swasey v. Adair, 88 Cal. 183, 25 Pac. 1119; Biggs v. Lloyd, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 831. If these conclusions are correct, the appeal has been disposed of by an erroneous decision of the only point considered in the opinion of the department, and the serious and important question in the case—the question decided in the superior court, and the question most elaborately argued by counsel here—is left untouched. I think it called for a decision, and that the appeal should not have been disposed of without a decision.

(S. F. 1,654.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1901.)

In bank. On rehearing. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 63 Pac. 66.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. The appellants claimed that the issues raised by their answer were properly triable by jury. When the cause was first entered upon the trial calendar of the superior court, there was a controversy between plaintiffs and defendants as to whether it was a court or jury case; and that court, holding with the plaintiffs, marked it as a court case. In that condition it remained on the calendar until, previous cases being disposed of, it was called for trial. The appellants did not then ask for a continuance, but they renewed their demand for a jury trial, supporting their demand by an argument in which they attempted to show that the nature of the issues to be tried entitled them to a jury. SAN MATEO COUNTY v. COBURN.
(S. F. 1,450.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1901.)

In bank. Rehearing denied.

For opinion in department, see 63 Pac. 78.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. A county, within the meaning of section 14 of article 1 of the constitution, is either a municipal corporation, or it is not a corporation at all; and in either case it is entitled, in condemning a right of way, to set off benefits against damages. Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 159, 21 Pac. 547; Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 549, 21 Pac. 958. In my opinion, a county is a municipal corporation, within the meaning of this clause of the constitution; and the decision in People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, that it is not a municipal corporation, within the meaning of another provision (i. e. the prohibition of the creation of municipal corporations by special laws), is not inconsistent with this view. The term "municipal corporation" has a broad sense and a restricted sense, and it is used in these different senses in the two clauses of the constitution. In one it comprehends counties, and in the other it does not.

McCLAIN v. HUTTON et al. (Sac. 712.)

CONTINENTAL BLDG. ASS'N v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1901.)

In bank. On motion to modify judgment. Granted.

For former opinions, see 61 Pac. 273, and 63 Pac. 182.

PER CURIAM. In the judgment of the court in bank in this case it was directed that the costs should be allotted one-half to the appeals of Mrs. Hutton, and one-half to those of the Continental Building & Loan Association,—the former to be paid by the respondents, including the appellant Chandler, in amounts proportionate to their respective claims; the latter by the respondents, excluding the appellant Chandler, in the same proportions. L. H. Holt should also have been excluded with Chandler. The judgment is therefore modified in this respect, and Mrs. Hutton will be allowed to recover the costs allotted to her, in the proportions stated, against the respondent cross complainants named in her notice of appeal; and the Continental Building & Loan Association, the costs allotted to it against the respondent cross complainants named in its notices of appeal, with the exception of the cross complainants Chandler and Holt, as to whom its appeal has, in effect, failed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1901.)

CONTRACTS—EXECUTION — SIGNING — ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—FEES—QUANTUM MERUIT.

1. A writing signed by an attorney, reciting the receipt by him of a certain note from defendant for collection on contingent fee, was binding on the attorney, though not signed by defendant.

2. Where an attorney received a note for collection on contingent fee and assurance that there was no defense, but, on the obligors setting up fraud, the attorney went to trial without further agreement, and afterwards prepared a transcript for appeal, he could not recover on a quantum meruit for his services; the trial not having occurred until long after the answer was filed, and the attorney having had knowledge of the defense and the amount of work involved.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by J. H. Lavenson against J. H. Wise. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. Joseph Rothchild, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for services as attorney at law rendered defendant by Joseph Rothchild, Esq., plaintiff's assignor. Defendant denied the alleged indebtedness, and, as a separate answer, alleged that the firm of Christy & Wise, composed of John H. Wise (defendant) and Harry E. Wise, was the owner of a promissory note for $9,760, made by one James Murphy and one E. Smalley; that said Rothchild represented to said firm that he could collect the money due on said note, whereupon it was agreed between Rothchild and Christy & Wise that said firm should pay said Rothchild $50, which was then paid, and "should, when the money due on said note was collected, and only out of the proceeds of the collection of said note, and not otherwise, further pay said Rothchild the sum of $500, as fee in and for the collection of the money due on said note, by suit or otherwise"; that Rothchild commenced suit on said note, but failed to collect the same, or any part thereof, and has abandoned all attempt to collect the said note; that said unsuccessful attempt to collect said note was the only service performed by said Rothchild for said firm or for defendant. The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiff had a verdict for $1,000. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for new trial.

The evidence of plaintiff tended to show that plaintiff's assignor performed services in relation to the collection of the note referred to in the answer which were of the value of $1,000; also services in relation to an accounting between Wise and Murphy and Smalley, or the "Yellowstone Saloon," as the place is called, the sale of one-half interest in which was the consideration for the note; also services in relation to the sale of certain goods by Wise to Wise and Murphy. Some evidence was given as to the amount of work done by Rothchild in relation to the accounting, and in the matter of the sale of goods by Wise to Murphy and Smalley. Mr. Rothchild testified that his services in each of the two latter matters were reasonably worth $250, and this is undisputed by the evidence, as is also his estimate of the value of his services, to wit, $1,000, for bringing the suit on the note. The principal question in controversy arises in regard to the agreement to collect the note. The testimony tended to show that when he undertook the business it was with the understanding that it was an ordinary case on promissory note, to which there was no valid defense, and that Mr. Rothchild was employed because he had information about Murphy's business and property, from which he was assured he could collect the judgment when obtained. I think it fairly inferable from the evidence that, when the agreement presently to be stated was entered into, Rothchild understood from what Wise told him, or led him to believe, that the case would not be litigated. With this understanding Rothchild signed and gave to Wise the following paper: "San Francisco, Dec. 9th, 1895. Received of Mr. John H. Wise a note for nine thousand seven hundred and sixty ($9,760.00) dollars, dated April 15th, 1895, payable six months after date, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. Said John H. Wise to pay upon demand the sum of fifty ($50.00) dollars for court costs and the sum of five hundred ($500.00) dollars as a fee upon collection of the same. [Signed] Joseph Rothchild." On December 14, 1895, Mr. Rothchild filed a complaint in the action on the note referred to in the receipt, and on January 11, 1896, the defendants in that action filed an answer. The note was payable to D. H. Whittemore, or order, indorsed to Christy & Wise by Whittemore, and by them indorsed to John H. Wise, who brought the action and is defendant here. The answer admitted the execution of the note, but alleged that it was without consideration, and that Wise took it with full knowledge of that fact; that the consideration was a half interest in the Yellowstone saloon, its fixtures and stock of merchandise, which Christy & Wise had agreed to sell and transfer to Murphy and Smalley, the makers of the note; that Christy & Wise neglected and refused to make the transfer of the saloon, and on November 8, 1895, Murphy and Smalley notified Christy & Wise that they had rescinded said contract of purchase, and declined to pay said note; that it was agreed between Christy & Wise and Murphy and Smalley that the note was to be paid from the income of the saloon, and not otherwise, of which Christy & Wise had full knowledge; that John H. and Harry E. Wise falsely represented to the makers of the note at the time of said purchase that the daily receipts of the saloon were $100 per day, whereas they were but $35 per day, and that one McCallum, who they represented was an experienced saloon keeper, had agreed to buy the other half of the saloon, and could bring in much business, etc.,—all of which was alleged to be false. Other false and fraudulent representations were set up in the answer, on account of which, and the failure on the part of Christy & Wise to keep their contract, Murphy and Smalley had, in November, 1895, rescinded, and notified Christy & Wise that they would not pay said note. The trial of that action commenced on December 10, 1896, and lasted several days, and on February 25, 1897, the court made its findings in favor of defendants in the action, and judgment followed for defendants. The evidence is that Wise directed Rothchild to take an appeal to the supreme court, and the latter gave the usual notice, and prepared the transcript, comprising 340 pages of typewritten matter. Wise paid the reporter for this work. Plaintiff testified: "I then made a demand on Mr. Wise for five hundred dollars in that matter, and he declined to pay it, and I never received a cent." Rothchild's connection with the case then ceased, and what became of the appeal is not disclosed.

It appears without conflict that upon the filing of the answer to the suit on the promissory note Rothchild had knowledge of the nature of the defense set up. An assistant in his office devoted several days to looking up questions of law likely to arise under the issues presented by the answer. The case was not tried for nearly a year after issue of fact was joined. There is no question but that Rothchild knew, or had reason to know, that the defense set up to the note would defeat payment if it prevailed, and that, in any event, it meant litigation, which he had not contemplated when he entered into the agreement with Wise. He testified: "I had a conversation with Mr. J. H. Wise about it [the answer] and he told me it was not true. These things could be disproved; they could not prove it." He testified that he received the note "on the terms set out in the receipt" and continued in the case until after the trial; that after the trial "I asked him [Wise] what he proposed to do about it, and he said he would take the case to the supreme court. Q. You had not said a word about changing this agreement? A. Not a word at all. Q. After you had received that transcript, and put him to that expense, that was the first time you suggested that you would not go on with the case? A. I did nothing of the kind. I told him to pay the $500. Q. Was that the first intimation that you gave that you were not going on? A. After the trial. I never bothered him during the trial, because I did not have time. Q. You never bothered him during the year 1896? A. Not at all. Q. You never bothered him for a month after the trial, did you? A. Oh, I do not know the time. Some time after the trial I asked him for $500, and he declined to pay it. Q. That was the first time there was any change in the terms of the agreement? A. I do not know what you mean by 'change.' The first time I ever asked him for money was after the trial. I signed an agreement to do certain things. He never agreed to do anything. Q. Didn't you receive the note on these terms? A. I suppose so; yes. Q. Well, was not that the agreement? A. I do not know. I do not see how you can pin a man down to an agreement if he [Wise] did not sign it. I was willing to trust him. I did not ask him for any writing. I was willing to take it that way. The receipt merely recites the terms, and Mr. Wise had a doubt about the propriety of turning over a $9,000 note, and I had to satisfy him that I was perfectly responsible." At another part of his testimony he testified: "I went on because John H. Wise told me these allegations [referring to the answer] were not true. He could prove they were not true." Again, he testified: "Q. Now, Mr. Rothchild, did you inform Mr. Wise in any way that you would not go on with the case on these terms? A. No, sir. Q. You never told him that, did you? A. No, sir. Q. You went on through the year 1896? A. Yes. Q. Under this agreement? A. Yes. Q. You tried the case under this agreement? A. No, I did not. Q. Did you tell him that you would not continue under the agreement? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ask him for any other agreement? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever speak to him on any occasion about another agreement? A. I could not do it, because I was in the middle of a trial. I never knew the true state of the facts." Mr. Rothchild seems to have been of the impression that his receipt to Wise was not a contract because Wise did not sign it. This is an erroneous view of the receipt. It was an agreement on Mr. Rothchild's part to take the case on the terms proposed by him, and Wise became bound by it when he delivered the note to Rothchild under that agreement. It was not necessary for Wise to sign it. He acted under it, and this was sufficient to bind him. The serious question is: Could Mr. Rothchild go forward under his contract, and try the case, after he knew it was to be seriously litigated, and might be defeated, without informing Mr. Wise that this new phase of the matter would involve labor not previously contemplated, and that he would require a larger contingent fee, or would require some fee in the event of failure to obtain judgment? Upon the face of the agreement the fee was contingent. That agreement was not changed by Mr. Rothchild, nor attempted to be changed, until after the trial and judgment had gone against his client. Mr. Rothchild did nothing and said nothing which would lead Mr. Wise to suppose that any change was to be made in the contract of employment. It is true, Wise told him the allegations of the answer were untrue, and he could prove them to be so, and that the defendants in that action could not prove what they had alleged. Mr. Wise may have so thought and so believed, and, whether he did or not, it was Mr. Rothchild's duty to inform him that the answer so changed the matter from its original aspect that a new agreement would have to be made as to his compensation. Saying nothing and doing nothing to indicate an unwillingness to continue as he had begun, Mr. Rothchild must be held to have continued under the only agreement then existing between the parties.

Upon this phase of the case there is no conflict in the evidence. By his own testimony, we think, Mr. Rothchild has shown that he ought not to have recovered for services in the case brought against Murphy and Smalley. In the conversation which preceded the signing of the receipt there was nothing said about paying any fee in the event the suit was litigated. It was assumed by both parties that it would not be litigated. But there is nothing in the evidence which would warrant the assumption that Wise willfully or fraudulently deceived Rothchild in this regard; and, if he did so, still, as soon as the fact came to Rothchild's knowledge (as it did when he was served with the answer), he should have promptly rescinded, or demanded some different arrangement. He could not proceed with the case as though the contract was still in force, with a mental reservation that he would repudiate it, or rescind it after the trial, should his client be cast in the suit. To justify such a course would be to allow fraud to be met by fraud, and this the law will not allow.

Respondent contends with much confidence that he should recover in this action because recovery on the note was prevented by Wise. The facts on which this claim rests were all brought to Mr. Rothchild's attention in the answer of Murphy and Smalley to Wise's suit against them, and in the course of the preparation for trial. Even though Wise gave him every assurance that he could overcome this defense, it did not change the fact that the contract of employment still bound Mr. Rothchild, and continued to do so until modified, superseded by another, or rescinded. Mr. Rothchild had good cause for rescinding the contract, or for refusing to proceed under it, but it was too late to rescind after it had been performed. Under the facts in the case as they now appear, we are unable to discover any ground upon which the present action on quantum meruit can rest as to the matter of the suit against Murphy and Smalley. The verdict was general, and we cannot, therefore, determine what part of the $1,000 awarded plaintiff was for services other than those in the matter last above mentioned. The cause should be remanded for a new trial, and we advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

STUMPF v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SAN LUIS OBISPO COUNTY. (L. A. 753.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1901.)

HEALTH—SANITARY DISTRICTS—ELECTION—JURISDICTIONAL FACTS—EVIDENCE—HEAR-SAY—UNSWORN STATEMENTS—CERTIORARI—RETURN.

1. Where the return to a writ of certiorari to review the action of a board of county supervisors in creating a sanitary district shows no evidence of posting the order calling the required election, nor a recital in the proceedings that notice was posted, the election was void, and the subsequent declaration of the board that the district was duly organized was a nullity; and therefore all the orders, records, and proceedings of the board should be annulled.

2. Where the return to a writ of certiorari to review the action of the board of supervisors in creating a sanitary district did not show that any evidence was taken or heard as to whether the signatures to the petition for its establishment were genuine, or whether 25 of them were resident freeholders in the district, it was error on the hearing for the court to permit a witness who had signed the petition, and was present when it was presented to the board, to testify that the board questioned him as to the residence of the signers, and whether they were freeholders, since, as his statements before the board were not sworn to, they were mere hearsay when repeated before the court, and did not prove the residence or signatures of the signers.

3. Where the board of supervisors, in determining whether 25 of the signers of a petition for the formation of a sanitary district were freeholders and residents in the district, and that their signatures were genuine, relied on the mere unsworn statement of one of the signers, instead of having the facts established according to rules of evidence required in the courts, the sufficiency of such evidence as proof may be reviewed on certiorari, since it was in proof of jurisdictional facts.

4. Where, on certiorari to review the action of the board of supervisors in creating a sanitary district, it appeared that the only evidence taken before the board as to the genuineness of the signatures of the signers of the petition for the creation of the district, and whether 25 of them were freeholders and residents thereof, was unsworn to and improper, it would be useless to require a further or amended return to show evidence of jurisdiction; and, no leave to make such return having been requested, the orders, records, and proceedings of the board will be annulled.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; E. R. Unangst, Judge.

This is a proceeding by J. W. Stumpf to review the action of the board of supervisors of San Luis Obispo county in the matter of the alleged creation of Templeton sanitary district, in said county. From the judgment Stumpf appeals. Proceedings annulled.

P. O. Chilstrom and S. M. Swinnerton, for appellant. A. E. Campbell (Venable & Goodchild, of counsel), for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The plaintiff based his application for the writ upon an affidavit, as required by section 1069 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The writ was issued and served, and a return thereto was made, setting out the petition for the formation of the district, which purported to be signed by 27 "residents and freeholders" of the district therein described. On November 7, 1898, the board made an order reciting that "a petition in due form having been received from residents and freeholders of the district herein-after described," praying for the creation of a sanitary district, and ordering that an election be held on December 10th by the qualified electors residing within the district, the boundaries of which were stated in the order designating the place at which the election should be held, and the persons who should conduct the same, and further ordering "that a copy of said order be posted for four successive weeks prior to said election in three public places within the proposed district," and that it should be published for four successive weeks in the Templeton Advance. The return to the writ further shows that officers of the district were nominated, and an affidavit of the publication of said order calling an election was made and filed; that on January 4, 1899, the board canvassed the returns of the election, and found the whole number of votes cast to be, for a sanitary district, 59 votes, and against it 44 votes; and that persons therein named had been elected, respectively, to the offices of sanitary assessor, and members of the sanitary board,—and declared that “a sanitary district, to be known and designated ‘Templeton Sanitary District,’ has been duly established,” with boundaries therein described. The return does not show that any evidence was taken or heard as to whether the signatures to the petition were genuine, nor whether 25 of them were each a resident freeholder within the boundaries of the proposed district; nor does the return show that the order calling an election was posted in three public places within said proposed district for four weeks, or at all, or that any evidence in regard thereto was heard. The defendant also filed an answer to the petition for the writ, denying the allegations of the petition. This was irregular. The return to the writ constitutes the answer, as well as evidence, and the case is heard thereon, unless upon motion an additional or amended return is made. Upon the hearing, however, Mr. Whicher, the clerk of the board of supervisors, was called by the plaintiff, and testified that no evidence was received by the board as to whether or not the signers of the petition were residents and freeholders within the district; that no witnesses were produced or examined before the board upon that question; that Mr. Smith, a member of the board, examined the names, and was satisfied with them. Mr. Fisher was called by the defendant, and testified that he was one of the petitioners; that he was present at the time the petition was presented to the board. He was then asked several questions by counsel for defendant, as to whether he was questioned by any member of the board as to the residence of the signers of the petition, and whether the petitioners were freeholders, and whether Supervisor Smith did not go over the names and question him in “regard to them.” These questions were each objected to by plaintiff upon the ground that it did not appear that the witness was sworn before the board, and that the questions were incompetent. Each objection was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted. The witness answered each question affirmatively, and further testified that Supervisor Smith looked over the petition and asked witness about the names,—if they were freeholders,—“and I said, ‘Yes. If you are not satisfied, you can go down and look at the records;’ and he said, ‘We will take it for granted.’”

No objection was made upon either side to the introduction of parol evidence, and the question of its admissibility need not now be considered; but, if its admissibility be conceded, the court erred in overruling plaintiff's objections above noted, for the reason that the unsworn statement of the witness made before the board of supervisors was incompetent, and its repetition before the court was mere hearsay, or the repetition of un-sworn statements, and did not tend to prove that, as a matter of fact, the petitioners were each residents and freeholders within the proposed district, and that their signatures were genuine. The determination of these questions, upon which the jurisdiction of the board depended, required the exercise of judicial power; and, as the statute did not prescribe the character of the proof by which they should be determined, they must be established in accordance with the rules of evidence recognized by the courts and the common law. “An exception to the rule that the sufficiency of the evidence will not be reviewed is made when the question is whether jurisdictional facts were or were not proved. This exception arises out of the most important office and function of the writ,—the keeping of inferior courts and tribunals within proper bounds. If the decision of the inferior tribunal as to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish jurisdictional facts were not reviewable, the writ of certiorari would be of no avail as a remedy against an assumption of jurisdiction. And, for the purpose of enabling the reviewing court to determine whether jurisdictional facts were established, it will require a return to be made of the evidence upon which such facts are based.” 4 Enc. Pl. & Prac. p. 262. This court has said: “In all cases it is essential that there be proof of a sufficient petition, inasmuch as without it the board could acquire no jurisdiction to act, and its proceedings would be absolutely void. * * * Upon certiorari, though the inferior tribunal is required to certify only matters of record, yet, if the jurisdictional facts do not appear of record, it must certify not only what is technically denominated the ‘record,’ but such facts, or the evidence of them, as may be necessary to determine whatever question as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal may be involved.” In re Madera Irr. Dist. 92 Cal. 296, 333, 335, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, citing Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 52; People v. Board of Delegates of San Francisco Fire Dept., 14 Cal. 479; Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 300. The statute authorizing the formation of sanitary districts requires that the order or proclamation calling an election “shall be posted for four successive weeks prior to the election, in three public places within the proposed district, and shall be published,” etc. The return shows that proof of publication was made by affidavit of the publisher, in due form; but there is no evidence of posting, nor is there even a recital in the proceedings to the effect that such notice was posted. Without such posting the election was void, and the subsequent declaration of the board of supervisors to the effect that the Templeton sanitary district was duly organized is a nullity. As it is only the evidence that was heard by the board of supervisors upon questions essential to their jurisdiction that can be considered by the court in determining whether the board acquired jurisdiction, it is obvious from the parol testimony hereinbefore recited that it would have been useless for the court to require an additional or amended return; and, no leave to make an amended return having been requested, we advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and that judgment be entered annulling all the orders, records, and proceedings of the board of supervisors in the matter of the alleged creation of Templeton sanitary district, in said county of San Luis Obispo.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, it is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and that judgment be entered annulling all the orders, records, and proceedings of the board of supervisors in the matter of Templeton sanitary district, and adjudging that said district has no legal existence.

SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
(S. F. 1,462.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1901.)

TAXATION — ASSESSMENT — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY — BANKS — RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID — INTEREST.

1. A sworn statement of taxable property returned by a taxpayer is not conclusive on the assessor, and he may assess property omitted therefrom without requiring the taxpayer to appear and testify in relation thereto.

2. The term "loans on stocks and bonds," used in describing an item of property assessed to a savings bank, sufficiently describes the property.

3. The fact that loans made by a bank are secured by property which is exempt from taxation does not render such loans untaxable.

4. A finding that a 20 per cent. increase in an assessment for taxation applies only to certain items of property assessed is warranted where the items raised can be ascertained by mathematical calculation.

5. Civ. Code, §§ 1915, 1917, allowing interest as damages between parties to an action, does not apply to the state or any of its political subdivisions; and a taxpayer entitled to recover illegal taxes paid to a county under protest, as provided by Pol. Code, § 3819, which makes no provision for the payment of interest, cannot recover interest thereon.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Savings & Loan Society against the city and county of San Francisco to recover taxes paid under protest. From a judgment allowing the recovery of a portion of such taxes, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. N. Brown, for appellant. H. T. Creswell and James L. Gallagher, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover certain taxes which were paid under protest. In response to a demand made by the assessor of the city and county of San Francisco, plaintiff, between the first Monday of March and the first Monday of July, 1896, returned a verified statement purporting to contain a complete list of all its property subject to taxation for that fiscal year. Without requesting a corrected statement requiring plaintiff to appear and testify in regard to the statement returned, the assessor, of his own motion, made an assessment upon the property described in the statement, as well as other property omitted therefrom. The added property was found by the court to have belonged to plaintiff on the first Monday of March of the year named, and this finding is not disputed. It appears also that on June 25th plaintiff received notice in writing from the assessor of the property assessed, including the added items and giving their valuations. Plaintiff did not appear before the county board of equalization, or request any reduction of the assessment or any alteration, or that the added property be omitted therefrom. In September the state board of equalization ordered the entire assessment roll of defendant to be raised 20 per cent., except certain property; and the auditor thereupon raised plaintiff's assessment accordingly, as will hereinafter appear. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff for the taxes assessed upon "state and mining bonds" of which it appeared plaintiff owned none, and the amount of the tax assessed upon the 20 per cent. increase of the face value of the "county and school-district bonds." Plaintiff's suit was for the entire tax paid, excepting only the amount thereof which was assessed upon the property listed to the assessor by plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment on bill of exceptions.

1. Plaintiff contends that, "until he shall have subpoenaed and examined the taxpayer who has furnished to him a sworn statement, the assessor can do nothing but accept the statement as true, and act upon it as a full and correct list of the taxable property of the one by whom or on whose behalf it has been made and returned." Plaintiff devotes the greater part of its opening brief to a discussion of this proposition, and the learned counsel for plaintiff has also furnished us with an elaborate discussion of the question in review of the decision rendered here, since the original briefs were filed, in People v. National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., 123 Cal. 53, 55 Pac. 685. The court is asked to re-examine the question there decided adversely to plaintiff's present contention: (1) Because its determination "was not essential to the disposition of that case"; and (2) because "the chief constitutional and statutory province of the statement [made by the taxpayer] has been overlooked." So far as we can see from the argument now made, the question was substantially the same in that case as in this, and the opinion then given shows that the proposition had careful attention, and we are not disposed to recede from the position there taken. We do not regard the assessment complained of as the arbitrary assessment which the assessor is authorized to make under section 3633 of the Political Code. It was an assessment under the general powers given the assessor and the duties imposed upon him by law,—Pol. Code, § 3628 et seq., and section 3861, which latter requires him to take an oath that he has made diligent inquiry and examination to ascertain all the property within the county subject to assessment, and that the same has been assessed on the assessment books. We are entirely satisfied with the reasoning in the case above cited, upon the authority of which we must hold against plaintiff's contention.

2. The assessment contained the following items of personal property:

Furniture	$ 5,000
Franchise	5,000
Money	40,300
Money on deposit in Bank of California	86,286
Loans on stocks and bonds.....	861,358
State and mining bonds.....	173,450
County and school-district bonds....	349,327
Total	$1,520,721

Of these items the statement furnished by plaintiff contained only the first four. The remaining three were added by the assessor, the assessment as to the others being the same as returned in the statement of plaintiff. It is now contended that the assessment as to the item "Loans on stocks and bonds" was void for uncertainty, and because upon untaxable property. The rule as to the degree of certainty required in describing personalty in assessments for taxation is this: that the property shall be so described that taxpayers may know for what they are to be taxed. City and County of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 2 Pac. 264. Appellant makes a very ingenious argument—more ingenious than forcible—to show that the term "loans on stocks and bonds," according to Webster's definition of the word "loan," is without legal or actual significance, and, "as written, is not only not taxable property, but no property whatsoever." A "loan," it is shown by defendant, is (1) a lending; (2) that which is lent; (3) a permission to use; that ex vi termini a loan imports that the thing loaned has passed out of the possession and control of the lender into that of the borrower; that neither the "act of lending" nor the "permission to use" can be property; that the only thing that would be loaned on stocks and bonds would be money, and the fact that money has been lent would involve the fact that the money loaned (the loan) was not in the lender's possession, and could not be taxed to him; that, if the money can be found, it is to be assessed and taxed to the person who owns it, and cannot be assessed to two distinct persons. Subdivision 4, § 3650, of the Political Code provides that the assessor must list "all personal property, showing the number, kind, amount and quantity; but a failure to enumerate in detail such personal property, does not invalidate the assessment." The statute indicates that the classes of personal property should be set down separately, while a statement of every article need not be. People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432. In that case an assessment reading, "Money," valuation "$5,000"; "Money loaned," valuation "$125,000,"—was held to sufficiently describe the property. The money loaned was assessed to the lender, which seems to meet appellant's suggestion that such a thing is impossible. If the term "loans" means money loaned, we need look no further for authority in holding the designation or classification in the present case to be sufficient. Appellant's corporate name implies that appellant is engaged in the business of receiving money as "savings," and lending out or making "loans" of these deposited "savings" in the interest of depositors. These loans, it must be presumed, are evidenced by some sort of obligations of the borrowers, executed in connection with the hypothecation of the stocks and bonds as security for the loans; and these evidences of indebtedness of the borrower to plaintiff necessarily become solvent credits or choses in action,—promissory notes or contracts of pledge,—and are taxable unless for some reason they are made nontaxable by the law or the constitution, as appellant urges they are. Upon the point now under discussion, we think plaintiff could not have been misled by or mistaken as to the meaning of the terms used in classifying the personal property in question. In commercial and banking usage the meaning of the expression "loans on stocks and bonds" is as well understood as the expression "money in bank." If a proposed borrower should approach plaintiff's counter and ask the cashier if the society "made loans on stocks and bonds," the cashier would at once understand what was meant.

3. But, conceding the terms used to be sufficiently definite, appellant contends that, it being admitted that all these shares of stock in corporations formed under the laws of this state are not subject to assessment or taxation, these notes or other evidences of indebtedness constitute "the contract or other obligation by which the credit [the lender's counterpart of the borrower's debt] is secured," within the meaning of article 13, § 4, of the constitution; that as such they were, "for the purposes of assessment and taxation, to be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby; that as the whole includes all its parts, and as the whole of the property affected by these notes and contracts of pledge was not taxable, it must follow that every part of that property and every interest in it was likewise not subject to taxation. The claim seems to be that the term "property," used in the section of the constitution referred to, includes both real and personal property, and that, as plaintiff acquired an interest in the stocks by the loan, such interest can no more be taxed than can the property itself so held as security. We do not think it necessary to decide whether the term "property," as used in the constitution, includes personal property. Section 1 of article 13 includes "credits" within the meaning of the word "property," and provides that all property (except certain enumerated kinds) "shall be taxed in proportion to its value," etc. In the case of the mortgage of land the mortgage debt is taxed to the holder, and so would the debt be taxed to the holder if the security be some form of personal property not exempt. We cannot see any reason for holding that, because the security happens to be of some kind of property exempt by law, the debt secured thereby should also be exempt.

4. It is claimed that the money and solvent credits were illegally assessed, because raised above their face value by the state board of equalization. The court found that the increase was only upon the three items,—furniture, franchise, and county and school-district bonds. Appellant excepted to this finding as not supported by the evidence, and claims that it appears from the assessment book that the increase of valuation made by the auditor pursuant to the order of said board was upon all the personal property assessed to plaintiff. The assessment book showed the items and valuation as heretofore stated, amounting in the aggregate to $1,520,721. If the 20 per cent. increase had applied to all the personal property, it would have amounted to $304,724, whereas the actual increase was $71,865, or exactly 20 per cent. of the three items mentioned by the court, lacking 40 cents. An attempt was made by defendant to show by the witness Herzer, chief deputy in the assessor's office, what items were raised, to which plaintiff objected on the ground that the roll speaks for itself, and cannot be interpreted by the opinion of witnesses. The trial court took the view that, if the items raised could be arrived at by mathematical calculation, the roll must be held to be sufficiently definite, although it fails to designate each item which the auditor took into account to reach his aggregate. The witness' testimony contributed nothing to the meaning of the roll. As to the county and school-district bonds, the trial court gave plaintiff judgment for the tax increase thereon, which it had paid, and plaintiff was only required to pay the 20 per cent. increase on the value of the furniture and the franchise. We see no reason for holding the assessment void on the ground alleged. If the increase of the roll could be ascertained by including any one or all the other items, or by including one or more of them, and including or excluding one or more of the items found by the court to be the ones raised, there might be some ground for holding with appellant on the ground of uncertainty as to what property was burdened with the increase. But as there is no possible way to reach the amount of the increase, except by computing the 20 per centum on these three items, and as by so doing the result is readily ascertained, we conclude that the court was warranted in finding the fact as it did.

5. It is claimed that the court erred in not allowing interest from date of payment of the tax under protest; citing Civ. Code, §§ 1915, 1917; Perley, Interest, p. 135. The Code sections cited relate to interest as compensation or damage between parties to an action, and the language of the statute is general, and does not include the state or any of its political subdivisions. The state is not bound by general words of a statute which would operate to establish a right of action against it. Mayrhofer v. Board, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646; Whittaker v. Tuolumne Co., 96 Cal. 100, 30 Pac. 1016. The action here is brought under a new section of the Political Code (3819), in which no provision is made for the payment of interest. St. 1895, p. 335.

The view we have taken of the questions presented by appellant makes it unnecessary to particularly notice the alleged errors of law at the trial. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

CARTER et al. v. BUTTE CREEK GOLD-MINING & POWER CO. et al. (Sac. 787.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1901.)
APPEAL AND ERROR—UNDERTAKINGS—SUFFICIENCY—DISMISSAL.

Where an appeal bond recited that plaintiffs had appealed from a judgment, and also from an order denying a motion to set the same aside, in consideration of which, and of such appeal, the sureties undertook that appellants would pay all damages awarded against them on "the appeal," such undertaking was ambiguous, in that it did not show for which appeal it was given, and, not covering both appeals, it was fatally defective, and the appeals should be dismissed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action by T. O. Carter and others against the Butte Creek Gold-Mining & Power Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order refusing to set aside said judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Appeals dismissed.

T. F. Batchelder, J. G. Severance, and D. L. Forster, for appellants. Park Henshaw, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Respondents have moved to dismiss the appeals in this case. One of the grounds relied upon to secure a dismissal is based upon the claim that the undertaking upon appeal is substantially defective. This undertaking recites that whereas the appellants have appealed to this court from the judgment entered in the action, and also from the order denying plaintiffs' motion to set aside the judgment, now, therefore, "in consideration of the premises and of such appeal," the sureties undertake that appellants will pay all damages awarded against them on "the appeal." The case of Estate of Heydenfeldt, 119 Cal. 346, 51 Pac. 543, is similar to the case at bar. There the appeal was taken from various orders, and the sureties undertook "that said appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against her on said appeal." In this case the undertaking uses the language "the appeal." In the Heydenfeldt Case this court said: "It has been established by a long line of decisions of this court that an undertaking on appeal, such as the one given in this case, is entirely invalid for any purpose. People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191; Corcoran v. Desmond, 71 Cal. 100, 11 Pac. 815, and previous cases there cited; Associates v. Wilkins, 71 Cal. 626, 12 Pac. 799; McCormick v. Belvin, 96 Cal. 182, 31 Pac. 16; Centerville & K. Irr. Ditch Co. v. Bachtold, 109 Cal. 111, 41 Pac. 813. It is said in the Centerville Case, supra: "If the undertaking has no special reference to either matter appealed from, but is conditioned generally upon 'such appeal' (People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191; Corcoran v. Desmond, 71 Cal. 100, 11 Pac. 815), or 'said appeals' (McCormick v. Belvin, 96 Cal. 182, 31 Pac. 16), all the appeals will be dismissed upon the ground that by reason of its ambiguity it cannot be determined for which appeal it was given." For the foregoing reasons, the appeals are dismissed.

BANK OF CALIFORNIA v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1901.)

In bank. Rehearing denied.

For opinion in department, see 63 Pac. 81.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order of the court denying a rehearing. If it is not true that "the moneys here involved are moneys expended under the subsequent orders," as stated in the opinion of the court, then this appeal cannot be properly disposed of without deciding the question whether the first order of allowance ceased to be operative on the filing of the inventory or when the estate became insolvent. I think it clear that at least $47.50 has been allowed in this account for support of family in excess of the total amount payable under the last two orders, and, unless this sum is covered by the maxim de minimis, the appellants were entitled to a decision of the question presented by their appeal. In my opinion, even so small a sum as $47.50 is not within the rule de minimis, especially when it appears that the future proceedings in the settlement of this estate will be embarrassed by the question raised, but not decided, upon this appeal.

PEOPLE v. ANDERSON. (Cr. 603.)

MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The state contended that accused was guilty of manslaughter, in that, knowing that deceased had such an appetite for whisky that his death would result from an unrestrained use of it, gave it to him for the purpose of causing death, or so carelessly as to amount to criminal negligence. Deceased boarded at defendant's hotel, and on being taken ill was cared for by defendant. The physician instructed defendant to give a certain small quantity of whisky. Deceased was intoxicated when the physician first called, but he never saw deceased intoxicated thereafter. His stomach would not retain liquor. Defendant knew that deceased could not drink with safety. At one time during the illness a flask of whisky was in a drawer in deceased's room, but not where he could get it, and once when the physician asked for whisky accused took a flask from under the mattress, but did so with no attempt to conceal from whence it was taken. At the time deceased was too weak to get out of bed. Before the doctor was sent for, deceased drew a check for $2,000 in favor of accused, which he immediately tried to cash, but deceased subsequently disclaimed knowledge of the check, and refused to provide for defendant in his will, as urged to do by defendant. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Simon Anderson was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

S. M. Buck and J. F. Coonan, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HARRISON, J. The appellant was charged with the crime of murder in the killing of Thomas Kehoe, and upon his trial therefor was convicted of manslaughter. He has appealed from the judgment entered thereon upon the ground that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. The evidence established that Kehoe died from Bright's disease of the kidneys, superinduced by an excessive use of alcoholic drinks. It is claimed by the prosecution, in support of the verdict, that, with the knowledge that Kehoe had such a passion for whisky that his death would result from an unrestrained use of it, the defendant gave it to him to drink, or placed it within his reach, either for the express purpose of producing his death, or with such carelessness as to constitute a criminal negligence which would make him responsible for his death. There was no direct testimony that the defendant ever gave any whisky to the deceased, except in accordance with the directions of the attending physician, or was in any way instrumental in allowing him to obtain any whisky; but it is claimed that the circumstances connected with his death and the relations shown to have existed between him and the defendant are sufficient to justify the verdict. The deceased had for a long time been addicted to excessive drinking, and for some time prior to his death was an inmate of the hotel kept by the defendant. In the early part of April, 1899, while at the defendant's hotel, he had an attack of delirium tremens, and was under medical treatment therefor for about a week. After his recovery from this he remained under medical treatment for other troubles for another week, during a portion of which time the defendant was his nurse; and after his recovery from this he went about the streets as usual. The record does not give any account of his condition or doings from this time until after the 15th of May, except that he continued to room at the hotel of the defendant, and was occasionally seen upon the streets. At some time between the 15th and 20th of May he had evidently yielded to his passion for drink, and as a result thereof was taken with some kind of sickness which confined him to his bed, and required the attendance of a nurse. In the early part of this sickness the defendant alone took care of him, but after the 20th of May, an employé, one Nilsen, who came into his service on that day, assisted him, and thereafter, while the deceased remained at the hotel, the defendant cared for him during the day and until midnight, and during the remainder of the night Nilsen, who seems to have been a night watchman, relieved him by himself looking into the room of the deceased at frequent intervals, and ministering to his wants. Kehoe remained in the hotel until May 25th, when he was removed to a hospital, where he died on May 28th. Dr. Ottmer, who had been the medical attendant of Kehoe during his sickness in April, was sent for by the defendant Monday afternoon, May 22d, and attended upon the deceased from that time until his death. He testified that he found Kehoe in bed, in a very weakened condition, and in an advanced stage of Bright's disease of the kidneys, from which he had been suffering prior to his first attendance upon him; and he gave instructions to the defendant to give him a tablespoonful of whisky every three hours. There is no evidence that from this time Kehoe was given or had any whisky, except in accordance with this instruction. Neither is there any evidence that the defendant was present at any time when Kehoe drank any whisky, or in any way contributed to his drinking before he was taken down with his last illness; and although Dr.

Ottmer says that Kehoe, when he saw him that evening, was as drunk as he could be, and must have drunk a great deal to have got into the condition he was in, it was not shown that the defendant was in any way connected therewith, or ever knew that he had been drinking, until he took to his bed as the result thereof. Dr. Ottmer says that after his first visit Kehoe was sober whenever he called, and that at the first visit he did not want any whisky, since he had had all that he wanted; that he was sober after that evening, because he could not keep any liquor on his stomach; that in his weak condition a very little would make him appear to be quite intoxicated.

It was shown by the prosecution that while Dr. Ottmer was attending Kehoe in April he advised him that, if he continued to drink as he had been drinking, it would kill him, and that the defendant was present when this advice was given; that during his sickness in May whisky was permitted to be in his room, and an opportunity afforded to Kehoe to get the same in the absence of his attendants; and it is urged that when the defendant assumed to nurse and care for him during his last attack it was an act of criminal negligence to permit any whisky to be placed within the reach of Kehoe, or so that he would have an opportunity to satisfy his craving for it. As a part of the evidence in support of this claim, it appears that when Nilsen first began to assist the defendant there was a pint flask of whisky in a drawer in Kehoe's room, but Nilsen states that it was where Kehoe could not get at it. It was also shown that a flask of whisky was at one time upon a stand, and that there was at another time a flask upon the bureau; but, as the defendant had been instructed to give Kehoe a tablespoonful of whisky every three hours, and as it appeared that Kehoe was too weak to get out of bed, the jury were not authorized to hold that it was criminal negligence to allow the flask to be in the room. On Monday evening, May 24th, an attorney went to Kehoe's room, together with Dr. Ottmer and a friend of Kehoe's, for the purpose of having him execute his will, and they were afterwards joined in the room by the defendant. Kehoe's weakness was so great that he could scarcely talk; and when the doctor asked for whisky, that he might give him a hypodermic injection of strychnine and whisky for the purpose of enabling him to answer the questions put to him, the defendant reached across the bed, and took a small flask of whisky, partly filled, from under the mattress at the side of the bed. It is urged from this fact that the jury were authorized to find that the whisky was placed there by defendant to enable Kehoe to get at it and drink it. Aside from what has before been said that there is no evidence that Kehoe did drink any of it, Dr. Ottmer also testified that, although it was within Kehoe's reach, if he had drunk it he could not keep it down, as he would vomit even water. It must also be borne in mind that the defendant took the flask from the bed openly, in the presence of several persons; and it is hardly to be supposed that, if he had placed it there with any sinister motive, he would thus publicly have betrayed himself. Moreover, it is only a conjecture that the flask was placed there by the defendant.

Testimony was offered on the part of the prosecution that on Monday afternoon, before the defendant sent for Dr. Ottmer, Kehoe made a check in favor of the defendant for $2,000, as a gift to him, and that the defendant had two persons affix their names as witnesses thereto; that immediately upon its receipt the defendant sought to have it cashed by the bank where he had been informed that Kehoe had money on deposit, but the bank, being suspicious, declined to pay it; that, on Wednesday evening, Kehoe, while his will was being prepared, disclaimed all knowledge of making the check, and, although urged by the defendant to make some provision for him in his will, refused to do so. These facts are urged as showing motive on the part of the defendant that he desired the death of Kehoe in order that he might obtain his money. If it be assumed that Kehoe made the check at the suggestion or request of the defendant, that fact has no tendency to show that the defendant gave him any whisky. A sufficient motive for obtaining the check would be found in a purpose to take a wicked advantage of the impaired condition of Kehoe's mind for mere purposes of greed, in the belief that his physical condition was such that he would never recover, or know of having made the check. We are clearly of the opinion that there was no evidence before the jury from which they were authorized to find that Kehoe came to his death by reason of any act of the defendant. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

McNAMARA v. OAKLAND BUILDING & LOAN ASSN. (S. F. 1365.)

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—BY-LAWS—WITHDRAWAL OF MEMBERS—LOANS—PREMIUMS—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—SET-OFF—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. The provisions of the act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 252), amending Civ. Code, div. 1, pt. 4, tit. 16, governing building associations, do not apply to associations incorporated prior to the enactment of the amendatory act, unless they have elected to continue their existence thereunder, as provided by section 646, authorizing such election.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 644, giving building associations power to fix the terms on which members may withdraw, it is competent for an association to enact a by-law providing that a borrowing member cannot withdraw before his loan is fully paid, except by the consent of the directors.

3. A clause in a mortgage given by a borrowing member of a building association, providing that, in case of foreclosure, the association shall have the option to apply on the mortgage note the cash surrender value of shares of stock pledged by the borrower, less all fines and penalties, and that thereupon the shares shall become the property of the association, gives the borrower no right to set off payments made on the stock against the amount due on the loan, nor does it compel the association to do so.

4. A borrowing member of a building association occupies the dual relation to the corporation of borrower and stockholder, each of which is distinct from the other.

5. Evidence that a borrowing member of a building association had a copy of its by-laws, providing that the premium on the loan should be deducted from the principal, and that he voluntarily paid interest on the mortgage note, which included the premium for six years, is sufficient to support a finding that he knew he was to pay such premium.

6. A borrowing member of a building association, who has consented to pay a premium on his loan as fixed by the board of directors, in violation of a by-law requiring the money to be loaned to the highest bidder, cannot complain of such violation where no fraud is shown, and all the applicants for loans were successful, and none of them suffered by the failure of the directors to invite public bids.

7. The early proceedings of a building association showed that its attorney, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage providing for the payment of attorney's fees, had been its regularly salaried attorney, as provided by a by-law prescribing the duties of corporation attorney, and authorizing the board of directors to fix his compensation, but there was no evidence that he occupied that position when the suit was brought, and it did not appear that he was then paid a salary by the association. Held, that the allowance of attorney's fees was not error.

8. Where the complaint, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage stipulating for the payment of reasonable attorney's fees, sets forth the provision in the mortgage, a finding that the mortgagor executed the mortgage is equivalent to a finding that he agreed to pay reasonable attorney's fees.

9. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage stipulating for the payment of a reasonable attorney's fee, it is unnecessary to aver that the fee claimed is reasonable.

10. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage given by a member of a building association, full equity is done by giving him credit on his loan for the present cash value of his shares, ascertained by a public sale thereof.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by J. N. McNamara against the Oakland Building & Loan Association. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. Clark (W. H. Linforth, of counsel), for appellant. John Yule, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff's action is to cancel a mortgage given by plaintiff to defendant's assignor, the Oakland Building, Savings & Loan Association, upon certain real property in the mortgage described, and for the recovery of three fully paid up shares in said association, or their par value, to wit, $300.

The complaint contains a copy of the mortgage, and the note for the payment of which it was security. Defendant answered December 30, 1896, and at the same time served and filed a cross complaint against plaintiff for judgment on the note, for the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, and for the sale of certain 15 shares of the capital stock of defendant's assignor, which had been pledged by the terms of the mortgage as further security. The court found as conclusions of law: That plaintiff was entitled to no relief; that there is due from plaintiff to defendant the principal sum of the note, to wit, $1,200, and interest at 8 per cent. per annum from September 1, 1896, amounting to $76; also attorney's fees, amounting to $250, and to costs of suit; and that defendant is entitled to decree of foreclosure and sale of the land mortgaged and of the said shares. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Defendant and its assignor were incorporated under title 16, pt. 4, div. 1, of the Civil Code of this state, the latter about October 3, 1889, and the former about April 24, 1890. Neither of said corporations elected to continue its existence under section 646 of the Civil Code, as amended by the act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 252). The court found the following facts: That in October, 1889, defendant's assignor loaned to plaintiff the sum of $1,200, plaintiff executing to it his promissory note for that amount, payable to said corporation or order six years after date, bearing 8 per cent. interest, payable monthly in advance, to be compounded if not so paid, and, in case of default in paying any monthly interest, the payee was given the option to deem the principal to be due. The note recited that it was secured by mortgage of even date, and a pledge of 15 shares of the capital stock of the mortgagee series No. 1. Defendant's assignor, mortgagee, "at a meeting of its directors, September 5, 1889, fixed the premium on all loans which it should make to borrowers at 20 per cent. on amount of loan made," and fixed the rate of interest at 8 per cent. Before plaintiff executed said note he was informed of this premium charge, and that the amount thereof ($240) would be included in the amount of the note given by him, and that interest would be charged on the whole amount. He received the sum of $960 and no more, but gave his note for $1,200. The mortgage was first recorded October 16, 1889. Plaintiff paid to defendant's assignor, as provided in the mortgage, the sum of $139.50, down to May 5, 1890, and no more, of which $72 was paid for and applied to the interest on said note, and $67.50 was paid and applied on account of the purchase price of said shares. Without the knowledge of plaintiff, defendant's assignor transferred to defendant the note and the security on May 5, 1890. Defendant had no knowledge of any agreements between its assignor and plaintiff, except as contained in the said written instruments, except that it was understood and agreed between plaintiff and defendant that if plaintiff should pay the interest as provided in the note, and should pay the monthly installments on said shares as provided in said mortgage, "then in that event, and as soon as and when the said fifteen shares of stock, with the installments paid in, and the interest and proportional profits of said shares of stock, should and would equal $100 per share, said corporation would thereupon satisfy said mortgage, * * * and surrender to plaintiff three shares of said stock, * * * paid up." Beginning with the month of June, 1890, and to August, 1896, plaintiff paid to defendant, agreeably to the mortgage, the sum of $1,162.50, and no more, of which the sum of $600 was for interest on said note, and $562.50 on account of the purchase price of said shares, and was full payment for interest and installments on said shares to and including August, 1896, but such payments were insufficient to mature said stock or make it of value of $100 per share, or any value greater than $70.20. No part of the principal of said note has been paid, and of the interest only to August 31, 1896, and no more. The monthly installments on said shares have been paid to include August, 1896, and no more. At the commencement of the action, defendant had no money in its possession belonging to plaintiff. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings, specifying each separately. We will endeavor to deal with such as seem to present the salient features of appellant's contention.

1. Appellant claims that the debt was not due when the action was commenced. The note was dated October, 1889, and was payable six years after date, or October, 1895. The suit was commenced September 15, 1896, and the cross complaint was filed December 30, 1896. It is not disputed that on the face of the instrument the action to foreclose could be brought, but it is contended that by the provisions of the act of 1891, supra, it was prematurely brought. It is sufficient answer that neither defendant nor its assignor elected to continue its existence under section 646, Civ. Code. The provisions of the act of 1891 do not apply. It may be here observed, for it concerns the further examination of plaintiff's points, that we have nothing to guide us in determining the rights of the parties, except as we find it in the statute relating to these associations, and in the by-laws framed thereunder, and in the contracts entered into. Associations kindred in character to that of defendant and its grantor exist in many of the states of the Union, and also in England, where they had their origin. Although transplanted into this country in comparatively recent years, they have given rise to much litigation, and the decisions on many questions are far from harmonious. Naturally, too, the decisions vary because of different statutory provisions under which the cases have been decided. Mr. Deering states that our Code provisions governing these associations are principally drawn from the act of May 20, 1861 (St. 1861, p. 567); and, as we have no previous decisions of this court on the subject, it appears to be necessary to give, at least, an outline of the statutory provisions under which defendant and its assignor were organized. They are found in sections 639 to 647, inclusive, of the Civil Code, as they stood prior to the amendments of March 31, 1891. The corporation may be organized with or without a capital stock, and may raise funds, in shares not exceeding $200 each, payable in periodical installments. Section 639. It may borrow money to carry on its objects. Section 640. It may purchase real estate, and erect buildings for its members, and may make loans to its members for the purpose of aiding them to acquire and improve real estate. Section 641. It may insure the lives of its members and debtors. Section 642. It may purchase and hold real estate for purposes named. Section 643. Section 644 is the one most important in determining the questions before us. It provides that "the by-laws of such corporations must specify the amount of the periodical subscriptions or payments to be made by each member, the time and manner in which such payments are to be made; the fines and forfeiture for default; * * * the terms and conditions upon which loans may be made to its members and by them repaid to the corporation; the manner in which a person may become, and cease to be, a member; the conditions on which members may withdraw from the corporation, and the provisions for the payment to withdrawing members of the sums of money due to them, arising from subscriptions or payments, and the proportion of the profits such withdrawing member may receive on withdrawal." Section 645 requires the secretary, once each year, to prepare a full and explicit statement of the corporation affairs, and print the same in one or more newspapers, and circulate the statement among the members. Section 646 was repealed in 1874, as also was section 648. Section 647 provided for the consolidation of two or more such corporations, or the transfer of the engagements and the funds and property of one to another, but not to the prejudice of the right of any creditor of either corporation. It will be noticed that the provisions place but few restrictions upon the corporation. The legislative injunction of greatest importance to members is found in section 644, and that section, in effect and in terms, requires the corporation to outline and define its scheme in the by-laws. The act of 1891, supra, made many and important changes and additions to the law, apparently with some intelligent reference to the law in other states, and to the better established systems for such associations. But with this later act we can have no concern, and much of the learning found in the decisions of the courts of other states, and many of the principles laid down elsewhere for the government of this class of corporations, are of but little value in the present case.

Plaintiff's action appears to have been brought upon the theory that at the end of six years, having made all his payments, he was entitled to have his mortgage canceled, and, as he had subscribed for 15 shares and borrowed only on 12 shares, he was entitled to have 3 shares returned to him fully paid. It is not improbable that representations were made that the series to which his shares belonged would mature in six years. The maturity of the mortgage debt points that way. But there is nothing in the evidence, and plaintiff offered no legal evidence, to show that there was any agreement that such would be the result. On the contrary, as we shall see, the by-laws plainly contemplated an uncertain period for the maturity of the stock.

2. Appellant contends that, if payment of the note could be enforced, he had the correlative right to offset his payments and his earnings, and that, if he is granted this right, it will appear from the evidence that the debt is paid. Appellant is mistaken as to the nature of the agreements into which he entered. He occupied the dual relation to the corporation of borrower and stockholder, each of which was distinct from the other. Under the scheme, he could not be a borrower without becoming a stockholder, but he could be a stockholder without being a borrower. The purposes of the corporation declared in its articles were to accumulate funds upon shares, not exceeding $100 each, payable in one sum, or in periodical installments, and from fines, premiums, loans, and interest and other lawful sources, to borrow money, and to loan out funds of the corporation to members. A subscriber to the shares was required by article 2, § 2, of the by-laws to pay monthly installments of one dollar per share, "until each share of the series of stock upon which such monthly payments shall be made, together with the earnings of such shares, shall reach the value of $100." (Amended as to borrowing members by allowing them the election to pay 50 cents per month instead of $1.) If not a borrower, he could pay in full, if he preferred, and have his paid-up certificate. The scheme, however, was largely one for the loan of money to members, and was so contrived, at least in theory, that by payment of interest on the note, and by small monthly payments, a member could pay for his shares, and, if not otherwise in default, upon surrender of the shares, fully paid up, to the association, it operated to pay his loan. A member was entitled to borrow upon the security of his subscribed shares, and such other security as was required, $100 for each share. But the by-laws provided that the "mortgages, bonds, or other securities shall remain in force and on deposit as collateral security, until each member shall have received satisfaction in full for his or her claim of one hundred dollars per share, whereupon the mortgage or mortgages shall be canceled, and collateral bonds or other securities returned to said borrower or borrowers." As plaintiff subscribed for 15 shares, and only borrowed $1,200, he would, if he had made all required payments, have been entitled to 3 shares fully paid up, and would also have been entitled to have the mortgage canceled. Provision was made for withdrawals, whereby a stockholder could withdraw and receive the amount of dues actually paid upon each share, with interest, after some deductions provided for; but no member could withdraw who had taken a loan until such loan was fully paid, unless by the consent of the directors. It was competent for the association to fix the terms on which members might withdraw, in the absence of statutory provisions. End. Bldg. Ass'ns (2d Ed.) § 31. The Code (section 644) gives the association the power to fix, by its by-laws, the terms on which a member may withdraw. I can find nothing in the by-laws, and nothing in the contracts entered into by plaintiff, warranting the claim that, notwithstanding he had defaulted in his payments on the mortgage, and also on his shares, he still had the right to offset his payments previously made against the amounts still due from him. The only clause in the mortgage bearing upon the point is one that, in case of foreclosure, gives to the mortgagee the option, without notice to the mortgagor, to apply on the mortgage note the cash surrender value of the shares, less all fines, penalties, etc., and thereupon the shares should become the property of the mortgagee. But this gives the mortgagor no right to make the offset, nor does it compel the mortgagee to do so. The mortgagor having ceased all payments, and by suit having sought to compel the cancellation of his mortgage, the mortgagee is within its rights in asking a foreclosure of the mortgage and a decree for the sale of the shares, and, presumably, they will bring their cash value, and plaintiff will have his credit therefor. That the relations of borrower and stockholder are separate and distinct, in associations such as defendant's assignor, seems to be well settled. End. Bldg. Ass'ns (2d Ed.) §§ 123, 477. And it is general law that payments on account of collaterals are not payments on account of the debt they secure. The pledging of shares as collateral security for the payment of the debt "is a recognition of the distinct standing of the member as a member and as a debtor." Id. § 477, and cases cited.

3. It is contended by plaintiff that the evidence does not support the finding that a premium on the loan was fixed at 20 per cent. or any other sum, and that there is no evidence that he agreed to pay a premium. He complains also that he was entitled to a loan of $1,500, for which he applied, but received only $960, and should be compelled to pay the latter sum, if any, and no more. It is true that plaintiff applied for $1,500, and that the by-laws entitled him to a loan of $100 on each share. It is true, also, that he received but $960, for which he gave his note for $1,200. The evidence is sufficient, we think, to support the finding that plaintiff knew he was to pay a premium. He had a copy of the by-laws, as all members had, and these by-laws provided that the premium bid should be deducted from the principal. He paid interest on the note and installments on the shares for several years, and must have known for what he was paying. The proceedings of the directors show that, at a meeting held September 5, 1889, when plaintiff's and other loans were allowed, the premium was fixed at 20 per cent. The note called for $1,200, and included $240 premium, leaving $960 for the borrower. This was part of the plan for creating funds, in which plaintiff shared with other members, into which he entered with his eyes open. He testified that he would not have signed the note had he understood that he was to receive but $960, and it appeared that the money was not in fact paid until after the note and mortgage were delivered. Still, plaintiff does not allege nor attempt to prove fraud, and he made so many payments voluntarily, after he must have known the full effect of his contracts, that his testimony that he would not have signed the note had he known the facts cannot avail him.

The proceedings of the corporation directors show that the loan was allowed to plaintiff for $1,500. We cannot see that he can complain that the directors finally found that they could loan him but $1,200. He certainly could not expect to receive $1,500 on his note for $1,200, and, if he had received $1,200 in money, his note must have been for $1,500, to include the premium. The by-laws required that the money should be "loaned out in open meeting to the highest bidder or bidders. The premium bid shall be deducted from the principal," etc. The premium in this case was not thus determined, but, as plaintiff consented to pay it as fixed by the directors, we do not see that he can complain of this violation of the by-laws. All the applicants for loans at that time were successful. No one of them suffered by the failure of the directors to invite public bids for the money. If the association suffered, the matter cannot be inquired into in this action. If, as we have said, the by-laws were not strictly pursued, the plaintiff cannot complain in this action. Indeed, as a member, having himself been a party to the violation and receiving the benefits thereof, he ought not to be heard to complain.

4. Appellant claims that it was error to allow attorney's fee, for the reason that the attorney of defendant was its regular salaried attorney; citing the by-laws, which prescribe the duties of the corporation attorney, and provide that he should receive such compensation as the directors should determine. Some of the early proceedings of the corporation defendant show that its attorney in this action was its regularly appointed attorney, but there is no evidence that he occupied that relation when this suit was brought, and, if there were any such evidence, it does not appear that he was paid a salary or other compensation by the corporation. The by-laws authorize such compensation to be made, but do not fix the amount. Plaintiff has not brought suit within the rule laid down in Bank v. Treadwell, 55 Cal. 379. The mortgage in terms provides, in case of foreclosure, the mortgagor shall pay reasonable attorney's fees, "and the payment of such costs and expenses and attorney's fees by the mortgagor is secured hereby." The cross complaint contains an averment setting forth the provisions of the mortgage, and alleging that the attorney's fees therein provided for were secured thereby, and the prayer asks for reasonable attorney's fees. There is no allegation that the sum claimed is reasonable, nor is there any finding of the fact, and therefore it is claimed defendant is not entitled to attorney's fees. It is found that plaintiff executed the mortgage, which is equivalent to a finding that he agreed to pay a reasonable attorney's fee for the mortgage so provided. The averment that the fee claimed was a reasonable amount is not necessary. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435. The attorney's fee was not the cause of action, but an incident to it. Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 Pac. 144, affirming Carriere v. Minturn. See, also, Brooks v. Forrington, 117 Cal. 219, 48 Pac. 1073. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755, does not overrule or conflict with Carriere v. Minturn. As an averment was unnecessary, so also was a finding. The conclusion of law that defendant was entitled to recover attorney's fees rested upon the provisions of the mortgage, and the court could determine what amount would be reasonable without hearing any testimony thereon. Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 234, 39 Pac. 758; Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272, 40 Pac. 394; Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 254, 53 Pac. 796.

5. Appellant contends, also, that he was entitled to have an account taken, and all of the money paid by him credited on the debt, and a finding as to the duration of the association, and judgment against him for the amount he would have to pay at the winding up of his series; citing End. Bldg. Ass'ns, §§ 130, 134, 444, 445. It was proved by a witness, conceded by both sides to be an expert accountant and familiar with the workings of defendant and other like corporations, that plaintiff's shares had not matured September 15, 1896, when the action was brought, and that if the earnings continued to be what they had been in the past, i. e. what was termed 13⁵/₇ per cent. monthly compound, it would take 8³/₄ years from the time payments commenced for the shares to mature. But the witness said it could not be ascertained certainly in advance when the series would mature, for the obvious reason that the earnings were an unknown quantity for the future. We cannot see that there is anything in the plan upon which defendant and its assignor were operating that would permit a shareholder, who was a mortgagor, to default in payments of interest and principal of his note and installments on his shares, and still entitle him to claim the full benefit of all his previous payments whenever he chose to default. Nor can we see how an accounting could be taken of the unascertainable earnings of a going concern, the shares of which mature at no fixed period, so as to protect other shareholders. Nor can we see that any equitable principle would warrant our holding that defendant should pay back to plaintiff moneys which, by the terms of his agreement, were to be surrendered, upon his default, for the benefit of the other shareholders. We have already seen that he gets the present cash value of his shares by public sale, the proceeds to be credited on his notes. Whether the investment is a wise one to the borrower, who makes all required payments, we are unable to say, but it is clearly not so to one who cannot persist in his payments until the scheme closes, or until the series to which his shares belong has matured. We cannot find, however, either in the statute or in the by-laws, or in the contracts entered into, any authority for equity to interpose so as to aid the unfortunate borrower in the situation of plaintiff. Mr. Endlich says (section 149): "There is obviously a great difference between the case of a member who has fulfilled, faithfully, all the requirements of his undertakings with the building association,—of those which relate to the duties of membership generally, as well as those which pertain to his position as a borrower,—and that of a member who, after obtaining an advance, neglects both classes of obligations, and renders himself liable to compulsory proceedings on the part of the society, which the latter is bound to institute all the more rigorously, as the success of the whole scheme depends upon the performance of all his duties as a member. Whatever, therefore, may be the advantages allowed to members voluntarily repaying loans, these provisions have no application, and offer no immunities, to those who become defaulters, and are, upon that ground, sued by the association upon the covenants of their obligations. Having thus violated the rules of the society, they are not entitled to the benefits held out to those who keep them, nor are they within the meaning of the statute designed to favor the conscientious borrowers." See the subject further treated at sections 480-482. We have seen that plaintiff will receive as a credit on his debt the value of his shares when sold, and, as these shares represent his interest in the association, he will thus receive all that he is entitled to as a defaulter, upon any principle of equity. This cash value was shown to be $70.20 per share, or $1,060.50 for 15 shares. In an elaborate and well-considered opinion, which Mr. Endlich regards "as definitely conclusive upon the controversy" (section 482), Paxson, J., in Watkins v. Association, 97 Pa. St. 514, holds that, in a suit brought against the borrower, the value of the defendant's stock, for the purpose of application to the extinguishment of his debt, is, "just what the defendant has paid on account thereof. This was all * * * the law gave him the right to apply. The value of stock beyond this consisted mainly of profits, in which a defaulting borrower has no right to participate." The learned justice then proceeds to show why this must be so. We are not called upon to affirm or deny this doctrine, and I refer to it to show that full equity is done in giving plaintiff the benefit of the value of his shares by sale in the open market. He paid on account of his shares $630 in all, as found by the court. It is possible that the shares will sell for much more than this sum, as their cash value was proven to be $1,060.50 at the time the action was brought.

Appellant assigns numerous errors occurring at the trial, most of which, however, depend more or less upon propositions already noticed. Appellant offered the testimony of plaintiff to show that when he purchased the shares he was told by some one, acting for the corporation, that his stock would mature in seven years. Again, he was asked whether Col. McMullen (one of the directors) ever represented to him as to the time when the stock would mature or the loan be discharged. Again, he was asked how he understood that he was to pay the note and mortgage and other similar questions as to his understanding of the transaction and his motive in entering into the engagement and like matters. We have examined this series of questions with some care, and while some of them, perhaps, were admissible, although their exclusion did no harm, the information sought was properly excluded. Under the issues in the case, plaintiff could not vary the effect of his contracts by showing that he did not comprehend their full meaning. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur GRAY, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MENDENHALL. (Cr. 658.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1901.)
ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—MALICE
—INSTRUCTIONS.

On prosecution for assault with intent to murder, an instruction that the malice necessary to make a killing murder might be either express or implied, though technically correct, was inapplicable and erroneous, as the intent must be proved in such prosecution, and implied malice may show no actual intent.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. H. Dunne, Judge.

William P. Mendenhall was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and appeals. Reversed.

Leon E. Prescott, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant was charged with and convicted of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, and appeals from the judgment given against him. The court instructed the jury as follows: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Such malice may be express or implied. It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature. It is implied when no deliberate provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart." It is insisted that this instruction, while pertinent and proper in a charge upon the crime of murder, is improper and erroneous where the offense is an assault with intent to commit murder; that the charge of murder may be established in the absence of proof of an intent to kill, but that the charge of attempt to commit murder cannot be established by proof merely of implied malice. In this we think the appellant's contention is sound, and that, in the crime charged, the court erred in instructing the jury as it did. In People v. Mize, 80 Cal. 41, 22 Pac. 80, there came under the attention of this court the following instruction: "They [the defendants] cannot be convicted of an assault to commit murder unless the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that, had the prosecuting witness been killed, defendants would have been guilty of murder. If the evidence shows that, had Henry Coffey been killed, one of the defendants would have been guilty of murder, then that one should be convicted." This court held the instruction to be erroneous, laying down the unquestioned proposition that while, to constitute murder, the guilty person need not intend to take life, to constitute an assault with intent to murder, there must be proved the intent to take life, and though the wrongdoer's act is such as, were it successful, it would be murder, if in truth he did not mean to kill he is not guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder. 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 270; 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 741. In People v. Wallace, 101 Cal. 281, 35 Pac. 862, an instruction identical with the one in the case at bar was complained of, but it was there said that, conceding the instruction to be erroneous, the defendant could not have been injured by it, as he was acquitted of the offense to which it applied. In People v. Burtle, 123 Cal. 303, 55 Pac. 998, defendant complained because the court instructed the jury upon express malice alone, properly excluding from their consideration the definition of implied malice. It was said by this court that it is doubtful whether the language of section 188 of the Penal Code should be given to the jury at all in the case of assault with intent to commit murder, and that it was intimated in People v. Wallace that the section should not be given, because "implied malice is not equivalent to that actual intent which is essential to the crime of assault with intent to commit murder." Under our Code a conviction of murder may be sustained either where a deliberate intent is manifested to take away the life of a fellow man, or where no considerable provocation appears, or where the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. Where a deliberate intent appears, there is present the express malice of the law. In the latter class of cases the malice is implied,—the law presuming it from the circumstances of the case,—though in fact the actual and deliberate intent to kill may not have been present in the mind of the wrongdoer. Therefore it is only in cases of murder of the first class, where express malice and deliberate intent are shown, that, the attempt failing, the wrongdoer may be found guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder. In murders of the other category the specific crime here charged is not contained.

Appellant further complains of the following instruction: "It is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove the intent, and if it appear that the alleged assault was committed under such circumstances as would, had death ensued, have mitigated the offense from murder to manslaughter, such intent was not premeditated, and you cannot find the defendant guilty of the charge preferred against him." This instruction is legally correct, though it is by no means a full exposition of the law. It is certainly true that in a case where, if death had ensued, a conviction of manslaughter alone would have been justified, the defendant (death not having resulted) could not be convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder; but, upon the other hand, as has been pointed out, even if death had ensued under circumstances which would have made the crime murder, he still could not be properly convicted of the lesser charge (the victim surviving) unless it were a murder committed with express malice.

The error in the instruction first above quoted was manifestly prejudicial. It cannot be said that the error was cured and rendered harmless by other instructions. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. If an indiscriminate assessment of the real property of different persons can be upheld upon any ground, it seems clear to me that it cannot be defended under the provisions of the Code respecting mistakes in the names of owners. A mistake in the name of the owner of a lot otherwise correctly assessed puts no obstacle in the way of payment of the proper tax by the real owner. But, if my land is assessed together with the adjoining property of another person, I cannot pay my tax without paying his tax. If I pay the whole tax, there is no means by which I can be reimbursed for the excess. If I do not pay, I must lose my land.

PEOPLE ex rel. SILVA v. LEVEE DIST.
NO. 6 OF SUTTER COUNTY
et al. (Sac. 687.)¹

LEVEE DISTRICT—SPECIAL LAWS—VALIDITY.

1. A levee district was organized under Act March 25, 1868, providing a method for the organization of such districts, and, such act being declared void as to the method of such organization, the legislature, by Act March 30, 1872, and Act March 31, 1891, p. 235, recognized the existence of such district. Held, that such legislative recognition gave legal existence to such district.

2. Act March 31, 1891, providing a new form of government for a certain levee district, is not in violation of Const. art. 11, § 6, and article 12, § 1, declaring that neither municipal nor private corporations shall be created by special laws, since such levee districts are not corporations, but mere governmental functions having attributes of corporations.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Quo warranto, on the relation of John F. Silva, against levee district No. 6 of Sutter county and others. From a decision affirming a judgment for defendants (63 Pac. 342), plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, Hart & Aram, and Kirby S. Mahon, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and M. E. Sanborn, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The opinion of the department heretofore filed herein is modified so as to read as follows: "This is a proceeding in quo warranto to test the legal existence of levee district No. 6. The other defendants are the officers of the district. The case was heard and determined upon an agreed statement of facts, which are the findings in the case. Upon these facts judgment was rendered for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Levee district No. 6 was organized under the act of March 25, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 316). By virtue of that act levee district No. 1 was created, and there was provided a scheme for the organization and government of other levee districts which might thereafter be formed. But section 21 of the act, setting forth the method of organization for such districts, has been declared unconstitutional and void. Moulton v. Parks, 64 Cal. 183, 30 Pac. 613; Brandenstein v. Hoke, 101 Cal. 134, 35 Pac. 562. It follows, therefore, and is conceded, that the organization of levee district No. 6, effected under section 21 of the act of March 25, 1868, was irregular and void. Notwithstanding this fatal irregularity in its organization, the legislature made distinct recognition of the existence of the district by an act approved March 30, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 734); and again by acts approved March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 235, and St. 1891, p. 237). The first of these acts of recognition was passed under the constitution of 1849, the latter two under the present constitution. That they are positive acts of recognition sufficient to invest the district with the functions and attributes which it had assumed to exercise under the law of 1868 may not be doubted, under the authority of People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 53 Cal. 346, and Reclamation Dist. v. Gray, 95 Cal. 605, 30 Pac. 779, unless it can be said that the legislature itself was without power so to validate the existence of a levee district thus irregularly organized. This is the contention of appellant. But legislative action in such matters is only circumscribed by the express limitations of the constitution. It is not questioned but that in the first instance, by direct enactment, the legislature could have carved out levee district No. 6 precisely as it did in the case of levee district No. 1. Where the exercise of a particular power is limited by the constitution, the legislature must act in the mode prescribed. But where there is no such limitation, if the legislature shall prescribe a mode for its exercise, which is, perchance, illegal, it may, by subsequent ratification or recognition, validate the acts done under the irregular mode. To illustrate: The present constitution forbids the creation of corporations for municipal purposes, except by general law. A special law creating a special municipal corporation would be violative of this constitutional inhibition, and no subsequent act of ratification or recognition by the legislature could validate that which, in the first instance, it had no power to do. But under the constitution of 1849 corporations for municipal purposes could be created by special law. If, then, the legislature, acting under that constitution, should so, by special law, create a municipal corporation, and for some reason the law lacked validity, the legislature, having the power thus to create the corporation, could, by ratification or recognition of its corporate existence, erect it into a valid municipality. If, then, levee district No. 6 be considered as a corporation (a matter inviting later attention), it was a corporation created for municipal purposes, and, notwithstanding this irregularity of its creation, the legislature could, as it did, give it a legal existence by its positive acts of recognition.

"But appellant still further contends that levee district No. 6 was a corporation for municipal purposes under the act of 1868 and the act of 1872 recognizing its existence; that a new and distinct organization was perfected for it under the act of March 31, 1891, passed under the present constitution; that the district elected to come under this act, and to exercise the corporate functions provided for by the act; that the act itself is void, and that, therefore, the district is improperly exercising corporate functions, from using which it should be restrained. Since levee district No. 6 was a legal entity before the passage of the act of March, 1891, if that act be itself void, it would not interfere with the legal existence of levee district No. 6, and the utmost which the court could do would be to require it to exercise the powers which it had theretofore enjoyed under the act of 1868 and the acts amendatory thereto, and restrain it from exercising any new rights or powers under the act of 1891. But, upon the other hand, respondent insists upon the validity of the act of 1891, and upon its right to exercise the powers conferred upon it by that act, and thus a further consideration of the question is demanded. Appellant's argument against the validity of the act of March 31, 1891, is that levee district No. 6 is a corporation for municipal purposes; that under the constitution corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; and that the act of March 31, 1891, dealing, as it does, with levee district No. 6 alone, and providing a new form of government for it, is a special law. Section 1 of article 12 of the constitution, having reference to private corporations, provides that they may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by a special act. Article 11, § 6, of the constitution declares that corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws. The act of 1891 is unquestionably a special law. If levee district No. 6 be a corporation, it is certainly not a private corporation, and must come under the designation of article 11, § 6,—'a corporation for municipal purposes.' And if it be a corporation for municipal purposes within the meaning of that article and section, then indubitably, the act of March, 1891, forcing upon a levee district a new, distinct, and different organization, is special and inhibited legislation. But is levee district No. 6 a corporation for municipal purposes within the meaning of the constitution? Expressions will be found in the cases where such organizations have been designated 'corporations for municipal purposes,' or 'public corporations,' or 'corporations for public purposes'; but these were convenient phrases of designation and description, rather than judicial declarations as to the nature and character of these agencies. The question propounded is conclusively answered by People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016. It is there held that a reclamation district, conceding it to be a corporation, is not a corporation for municipal purposes, within the meaning of the constitution. But as such levee districts or reclamation districts are distinctly not private corporations, it must follow that, if they be corporations, they are corporations in a class by themselves, and the general powers of the legislature for their creation, organization, and control are in no wise limited by the constitution of the state. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed."

SPIELBERGER v. THOMPSON. (Sac. 734.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1901.)

In bank. Motion for rehearing denied.

For opinion in department, see 63 Pac. 132.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing, and from the judgment of affirmance. The statement of facts contained in the department opinion is based exclusively upon the findings of the superior court, but those findings are assailed as being contrary to the evidence; and, in my opinion, several of those which are most material to the conclusion of the court are wholly unsupported by any evidence contained in the record. The uncontroverted facts are that Philip Oppenheimer was trustee of an estate of about $70,000. He was also one of the beneficiaries, and the remaining beneficiaries were his mother, his brother Emanuel, the payee of the note in controversy here, and his sister, the maker of the note, and the defendant herein. Emanuel had induced his mother to commence an action to vacate the trust upon the ground of fraud. He and his brother and sister were made defendants in that action, but he, by answer and cross bill, took sides with his mother in favor of dissolving the trust. His sister and his brother Philip answered, defending the action. The litigation having reached this stage, all parties became anxious to settle the controversy, and Emanuel represented to his sister that nothing stood in the way of a dismissal of the action and cross action except the refusal of his mother's attorney to allow a dismissal until he should be paid or secured in the payment of his fee, amounting to $1,500; and he agreed that if she would give him her note for that amount "he would pay said attorney his fee, and obtain a judgment dismissing the said action." Upon this representation, and in consideration of this promise, the note in controversy here was executed and delivered. It appears very clearly from all the evidence in the case that the representation was false, and that the promise was never performed in its true and proper sense. As to the representation, if there had been nothing in the way of a dismissal of the action except the objection of the plaintiff's attorney, that, so far from being a formidable obstacle, was no obstacle at all; for nothing could have been easier than to substitute another attorney (as was afterwards done), who would make the motion to dismiss. But it will appear that the obstacles to dismissal were of another character, and the fault lay at another door. It is shown clearly by all the testimony, including the explicit admission of Emanuel himself, that he never took the note to his mother's attorney, and never informed him that he had it. On the contrary, he kept it among his private papers for about a month, and then pledged it as collateral for money borrowed of Charles Heisen, which money he used in his private business. The first thing this defendant heard of the note after delivering it was when it was presented, with a demand of payment, by Heisen's agent. She did not pay it, and afterwards Emanuel redeemed it and pledged it again to C. W. Clarke to secure other advances. This is what he did with the note which he had promised to use for the payment of his mother's attorney. Nevertheless he claims that he, by his attorneys, promptly moved to dismiss the action. He asserts that he and they made numerous attempts to procure the dismissal. He does not testify—and there is no evidence of any sort—that his mother's attorney moved to dismiss the action, or that he or she ever consented to a dismissal. And the finding of the court goes no further than the evidence on this point. It does not appear in the case anywhere, or in any way, that the plaintiff in that action ever consented to a dismissal, unless her consent is inferred from the finding that "the dismissal was delayed through the acts and conduct of the attorney representing the defendant herein in that action." But clearly this finding does not necessarily imply the consent of the plaintiff at the time of Emanuel's numerous attempts, which he claims to have made shortly after receiving the note. The final settlement and dismissal of the action was not reached for five months after the delivery of the note, and not until after a trial of the action and a decision in favor of the defendants on the merits; and then it was based upon further negotiations, and apparently upon new considerations, independent of the payment of $1,500 to the plaintiff's attorney. Some delay in this final settlement may have been due to the acts of defendant's attorney,—as, for instance, his successful defense of the action,—and at the same time it may be true that plaintiff did not consent in the beginning to a dismissal.

But if this fatal objection to the finding is waived, and it should be held that, taking the findings altogether, they may be construed to mean that promptly after receiving the note Emanuel did not only move to dismiss his cross action, but also procured his mother's consent and that of her attorney to dismiss her action, the only result is to put Emanuel in other difficulties. He confesses that he did not pay his mother's attorney, did not inform him that he had the note to secure him, but used the note to raise money for his private business. If, under these circumstances, the attorney nevertheless consented to a dismissal of her action, it proves that the representation made by this defendant that he would not consent to a dismissal without payment or security for his fee was false, and the whole transaction a fraud.

But, aside from this, it was no performance of his contract for Emanuel to make motions and efforts to procure a dismissal of the actions. His contract was to procure a judgment of dismissal, and that without unreasonable delay. The findings of the court with respect to this matter are that Emanuel did pay the fee of his mother's attorney, that the action was finally dismissed, and that the delay in dismissing it was caused by the acts of the attorney representing the defendant. All these statements are literally true, but they are true with such qualifications as to render them wholly immaterial. The action was finally dismissed, but not for five months after the delivery of this note, which during all that time Emanuel had been using to raise money for his own purposes; and in the meantime the case had been tried, and a decision rendered by the superior court that the trust was valid, advantageous, and free from fraud. Can it be claimed that a dismissal of the action under these circumstances was a compliance with Emanuel's agreement to procure a judgment of dismissal? When this defendant gave her note to secure a dismissal of that action, the advantages that would have accrued to her by an immediate dismissal were that she would have been saved the trouble and expense of a trial, and would have secured herself from whatever risk of being defeated in the litigation she may have had reason to apprehend. It may also be reasonably supposed that it was a motive of controlling weight with her to avoid the pain and scandal of a public trial of charges of fraud preferred by her mother against her brother. By his failure to dismiss the action before it had been tried and he had been defeated on the merits, Emanuel deprived his sister of every possible advantage she could have expected when she gave her note.

But it is said in the opinion of this court that the delay in the dismissal was largely occasioned by the defendant herself. The only support for this statement is in the finding of the superior court, above quoted, which, it will be observed, does not say that the delay was caused by any fault of the defendant, but by the acts and conduct of the attorney representing the defendant in that action. This, as above remarked, is true in a literal sense, but with a serious qualification. The same attorney represented this defendant and her brother Philip in the defense of that action, and it does appear by the testimony of Philip in this case that his attorney (who happened also to be his sister's attorney in defending that action) did in his behalf, and upon grounds peculiarly affecting his interest, oppose the motion of Emanuel to dismiss. There is not the slightest atom of evidence that he opposed the dismissal on behalf of the defendant, or at her instance, or for any benefit to her; and if he deemed that the interest of Philip, who was absent from the state, was opposed to a dismissal, it is not easy to see how the defendant could have prevented his opposition, or why she should be held responsible for it. Besides, the agreement of Emanuel to procure a judgment of dismissal bound him to obtain the consent of Philip, so far as his consent was essential, and to comply with whatever conditions Philip attached to his consent. There is no hint or suggestion in the findings or evidence that the defendant conspired with Philip to exact unreasonable conditions as the price of his consent, and to hold her responsible for his action is unjust and unwarranted.

Finally, with respect to the settlement of the case and the payment of plaintiff's attorney: The case was settled when there was nothing left to settle except the costs of a litigation which had been instigated (unjustly as it appears) by Emanuel, and which he should have paid. He did pay his mother's attorney, but the amount was only $800, instead of the $1,500 he represented to be necessary, so that by his recovery in this action (he is represented here by his assignee) he makes a handsome bonus out of his sister, and practically escapes the consequences of his fault by throwing the entire expense upon her. I think a more equitable result might have been attained without doing violence to any rule of law.

MILLER & LUX v. BATZ, County Treasurer.
(L. A. 800.)

PUBLIC LANDS — SWAMP LANDS — COMPENSATION FOR RECLAMATION — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

1. A mandamus proceeding against a county treasurer to compel the payment of a sum due for the reclamation of swamp lands was submitted on agreed facts which showed that the land was reclaimed by plaintiff's predecessor, but which failed to show an assignment of the claim to plaintiff, and the writ was denied because the purchase of the land did not amount to an assignment. Pol. Code, § 3477, requires such money to be paid to the original purchaser or his assignee. The judgment was affirmed on appeal, and a rehearing was granted on the representation that such question was not raised in the brief of either party, and the petition for rehearing stated that plaintiff was assignee of the person reclaiming the land. Held, that the cause would be reversed and remanded, with leave to plaintiff to amend his petition and present additional evidence.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 338, requiring an action on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, to be brought within three years, does not bar a proceeding to compel the payment of money due for the reclamation of swamp lands, since Pol. Code, § 3477, and the preceding sections requiring the payment of two dollars per acre to the purchaser of swamp lands when the reclamation is completed or so much money is expended therein, is a contract between the purchaser and the state, and is not a liability created by statute.

In bank. On rehearing. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 61 Pac. 935.

HARRISON, J. The judgment appealed from was affirmed in department June 15, 1900 (61 Pac. 935), upon the authority of Carpenter v. Savings Union (Cal.) 61 Pac. 92. A rehearing was granted upon the representation that the question upon which the Carpenter Case was decided had not been presented by the plaintiff or by the defendant either at the trial in the court below, or in the briefs here upon the appeal. In view of this fact, and of the further fact that the plaintiff states in its petition for rehearing that the reclamation of all the lands in the district was made entirely by its immediate predecessors in interest, and not by the original purchasers of the lands, and that before the commencement of this action appellant's immediate predecessors in interest executed an assignment to it of the claim now involved, we have determined to remand the case, with leave to the plaintiff to amend its petition and submit additional evidence in support thereof, should it be so advised.

As the statute of limitations, which is pleaded as a defense, and has been argued upon this appeal, will doubtless arise upon the next trial, it is proper to consider the same. Counsel have discussed in their briefs the applicability of different statutes of limitation upon the plaintiff's cause of action, but as the defendant has pleaded only the statute prescribed in subdivision 1, § 338, Code Civ. Proc., it is only necessary to determine whether the action is barred by the provision thus pleaded. That subdivision prescribes three years as the time within which an action may be commenced upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. The plaintiff's cause of action herein is not founded upon a liability created by statute, but is based upon a contract between him and the state, and is subject to only those provisions of the statute of limitations which are applicable to causes of action arising out of contractual relations. The state has, in effect, declared in section 3477 of the Political Code, and preceding sections, that the holders of certificates of purchase of swamp and overflowed lands may reclaim the same, either by themselves or through the agency of a reclamation district, and that whenever the works of reclamation are completed, or the sum of two dollars per acre has been expended in the work of reclamation, there shall be repaid to each purchaser or his assigns out of the swamp-land fund, after making certain deductions therefrom, his proportion of the amount which has been contributed to that fund. The purchasers are under no obligation to reclaim the land, but the state agrees that, if they do reclaim it, it will repay to them this amount of money. The obligation of the state to make this payment is not a liability created by statute, but arises from the acceptance by the purchasers of the offer made by the state, and the performance of the work which the state has prescribed as the condition upon which it will make the payment. This obligation in favor of the purchaser is of the same character and arises at the same time as does his right to receive a patent for the land. The fact that the obligation is evidenced by statute does not render the plaintiff's cause of action one "created" by statute. All contracts with the state have their authority in some statutory provision, but it is not to be assumed, in the absence of express provision to that effect, that the legislature intended to prescribe a different rule of limitations for actions against the state upon its contract from that for actions upon other contracts. The liability of the state to the plaintiff herein results from its agreement to repay the money, but it is not "created" by the statute, as is the liability upon a swamp-land assessment for reclamation purposes (People v. Hulbert, 71 Cal. 72, 12 Pac. 43), or the liability of a stockholder for his proportion of the corporate debts (Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 103 Cal. 594, 37 Pac. 499), or the right to maintain an action for the recovery of taxes (City of San Diego v. Higgins, 115 Cal. 170, 46 Pac. 923). Such liabilities are "created" by statute, and exist only by express declaration of the statute. The distinction is clearly pointed out in Higby v. Calaveras Co., 18 Cal. 176, where the court said in reference to the question then under consideration, and that it was governed by the statute which is here pleaded: "This duty is not cast by contract, but by the law; and the same law provides the compensation, or, in other words, creates the liability upon the part of the county to pay the compensation." Although the action is against the respondent as treasurer of the county, it is for the purpose of recovering money which has been paid to the state, and which the state, for its own convenience, has deposited with the county, as one of its governmental agencies. The plaintiff's right to maintain the action against the respondent is measured by his right to maintain it against the state. See Kings Co. v. Tulare Co., 119 Cal. 509, 51 Pac. 866. The nature of the cause of action, and not the form of the action, determines the applicability of the statute of limitations. De Haven v. Bartholomew, 57 Pa. St. 126; Higby v. Calaveras Co., supra. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend its petition.

FOERST v. KELSO. (S. F. 1,448.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1901.)

DAMAGES—PLEADING—AMBIGUITY—DEMURRER.

Where the complaint prayed damages for injuries occasioned to plaintiff's person and property, real and personal, but did not specify the particular amount of damages sustained as to each, a demurrer to the complaint for ambiguity and uncertainty was improperly overruled.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Minna Foerst against John Kelso. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Edwin L. Forster, for appellant. F. J. Castelhun, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The complaint in this action prayed damages for injuries occasioned to plaintiff's property and person by reason of blasting operations negligently conducted by the defendant. It charged that the blasts showered a rain of rocks upon plaintiff's house and premises, "killing chickens and breaking boards of house, stable, woodshed, chicken house, and fence"; that upon one occasion "two immense boulders of rock were blown upon plaintiff's premises, one of which struck plaintiff's stable and passed through the roof, breaking rafters and boards, one of which struck and injured plaintiff's shoulder; that the other boulder went crashing through the rear wall of the plaintiff's house, through a sink into the middle of plaintiff's kitchen, in the second story, breaking windows, dishes, etc."; "that said blasting also caused plaintiff to become sick, ill, and nervous, to such a degree that she has ever since suffered, and still suffers, from the effects thereof"; "that by reason of the premises plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of $5,000." To this complaint defendant interposed special demurrers for ambiguity and uncertainty, charging that it could not be ascertained therefrom for what injuries the plaintiff asks damages, —whether for personal injuries received by plaintiff, or injuries to her real property, or for the killing of her chickens, or for the shaking or damages of the houses in the neighborhood. To this respondent makes answer that it sufficiently appears from the complaint that the damages are sought for injuries to plaintiff's health and to her real estate and to her personal property, and that therefore the demurrer was properly overruled. In this reliance is placed upon the case of Sloane v. Railway Co., 111 Cal. 668, 44 Pac. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193; but, so far as the question here involved was concerned, it was there decided merely that while it was necessary for the pleader to point out the particulars in which she had sustained injuries, namely, the humiliation and injuries to her health, in order that evidence thereof might be given at the trial, it was not necessary that she should designate the particular amount of damage which she had sustained by reason of the indignity, distinguished from the amount sustained from the injury to her health. "These elements of damage," it is said "were not capable of computation, nor would evidence of such amount have been admissible. This amount was to be determined by the jury in the exercise of an intelligent discretion." In the present case the demurrant asks, in effect, that the plaintiff be required to set forth with exactness, as it was easily possible for her to do, the amount of damage which she claims to have sustained by reason of the injuries to her real and personal property; for defendant might be willing to concede a good cause of action in plaintiff for these amounts, while denying her any right of recovery for injuries to health. It is true that demurrers for ambiguity and uncertainty, when improperly overruled, should not always work a reversal of the judgment, and will not do so when it appears that the matters complained of by demurrer were so trifling as not to have affected any substantial right of the demurrant. Alexander v. Mill Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410. But it is also true that when the demurrer for ambiguity or uncertainty, improperly overruled, affects the substantial rights of a party, he is entitled to a reversal of the ruling. Such were the cases of Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119; and Mallory v. Thomas, 98 Cal. 647, 33 Pac. 757,—with which cases this is identical in principle. It follows, therefore, that the judgment must be reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer to

BOSQUI v. SUTRO R. CO. et al. (S. F. 1,594.)

CARRIERS—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—PERSONAL INJURIES—STREET RAILROADS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—INSTRUCTION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

1. Whether experienced railroad men are more competent to testify as to the speed of an electric car, and therefore entitled to greater credence than ordinary passengers, whose testimony has been admitted unchallenged, is a question for the jury, and their finding on the testimony, if supported by real and substantial evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Defendant's testimony, showing how the equipment of its electric road compared with the equipment of other roads, was properly excluded in an action by a passenger for personal injuries caused by the derailment of a car, when offered to show that defendant's cars could run over the track at a certain speed with safety.

3. The exclusion of defendant's testimony, showing at what rate of speed its electric cars could run with safety without derailment, was harmless, where defendant was permitted to show that the car on which plaintiff was a passenger could be run over the road at an excessive rate of speed without derailment.

4. An instruction to the effect that a carrier of passengers must exercise the care of a very cautious person, "surrounded by the same circumstances," is not objectionable as exacting a greater degree of care than can be reasonably exacted of a common carrier.

5. Whether the failure of a carrier of passengers to employ extremely cautious men is a breach of the carrier's duty to exercise the utmost care is prima facie a question for the court, and not for the jury, but the question whether such care has in fact been exercised is for the jury.

6. The rule that proof of the occurrence of an accident causing injuries to a passenger without fault on his part is proof of negligence on the part of the carrier applies to street-railroad companies operating cars by electricity or steam power.

7. An instruction stating a correct proposition of law, referring in no way to the evidence submitted, is not necessarily misleading.

Commissioner's decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Benjamin A. Bosqui against the Sutro Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Smith & Murasky and McKinstry, Bradley & McKinstry, for appellants. C. H. Wilson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for personal injury. The trial was by a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The injury was caused by one of defendant's cars leaving the rails and colliding with another of its cars coming from an opposite direction.

1. It is contended by defendant that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. Counsel argues the point upon the assumption either (1) that the judgment can be sustained only on the theory that defendant failed to overcome the presumption of negligence arising from proof of the accident; or (2) that evidence "real and substantial" (Driscoll v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 Pac. 591) was offered by plaintiff that the car was derailed because of its excessive speed; and defendant's counsel assume that plaintiff will not contend that the negligence of defendant was affirmatively shown in any way other than by proof as to the speed of the car. Plaintiff, however, contends, not only (1) that the car was being run at an excessive speed; but (2) that, with even ordinary care, the car could have been stopped after it left the rails, and before the collision; (3) that the incoming car should have been stopped before it collided with the car on which plaintiff was a passenger; (4) that the car was not derailed by gravel previously piled on the rails, as contended by defendant, but that any gravel found on them after the collision was thrown there by the car itself while running along the side of the rails; and (5) if it be true that some person, unknown to defendant, placed the obstruction on the tracks, still defendant was guilty of negligence in not stopping the car before the collision.

Defendant operates an electric street-railway line from the west terminus of the Sutter street car line to the Cliff House. Defendant's outgoing car 37 left its starting point going to the Cliff House at 8:35 o'clock p. m., April 9, 1897. On Richmond avenue, just beyond the crossing of Commonwealth avenue, and on a straight track, car 37 left the rails, and continued moving for a distance, variously stated as 70 to 100 feet, when it collided with defendant's incoming car 29. Plaintiff was riding on car 37, which was crowded with passengers, and received the injury complained of by reason of the collision. No question of plaintiff's contributory negligence arises, and the evidence is undisputed that the track was well constructed, and the appliances for operating the car in perfect order, and suitable for the purposes for which they were being used.

Upon the question of the speed of car 37 when it left the rails, it is conceded by defendant that the evidence is conflicting,—plaintiff's witnesses testifying to a speed of 15 to 25 miles an hour, and defendant's witnesses to a speed less than 8 miles an hour (the motorman put it at 7 miles),—but defendant claims that, its witnesses being experienced railroad men, "such testimony is entitled to more weight than that of ordinary railroad passengers." This view of the evidence seems not unreasonable, and, if the fact could be said to be one peculiarly within the knowledge of railroad men, should have had weight with the jury; but we cannot say, as matter of law, that the jury should have disregarded the one and accepted the other class of evidence. Defendant cites the case of Railroad Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 540, where it was held that "opinions of persons riding in cars, and not observing from the outside, should be excluded, unless the witnesses first show such extended experience and observation as to qualify them for forming such opinions as would be reliable." We cannot agree with this statement, but, even if sound law, no objection was made to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses upon this or any other ground. Their testimony went to the jury unchallenged. The question whether defendant's witnesses were more competent to testify to the point in issue than plaintiff's witnesses, and the reason for giving the greater credence to the opinions of defendant's witnesses, were considerations properly addressed to the jury, and with their conclusion, there being sufficient evidence to support it, we cannot interfere. But the unusual, if not a dangerous, speed of a street car on a straight track, unaccompanied by any other circumstance, is not negligence, and the court substantially so charged the jury. It was urged at the trial and is urged here that the evidence showed that gravel or loose macadam with which the street was paved had been piled on the rails by some person or persons unknown to defendant, and that the car was thrown from the track by this loose material, upon which the car came so suddenly that it was impossible for the motorman to check the speed, and prevent the car from running onto the obstruction. Plaintiff contended, and now urges, that the track was clear, and that this loose material, afterwards found packed upon the rails, was thrown there by the forward truck wheels as they passed along near the rails in the loose macadam, before swerving to the left towards the incoming car, and was run over by the rear truck wheels while still on the track, thus accounting for the crushed appearance of gravel on the rails after the accident. The motorman testified that he saw the obstruction when within 10 feet of it, and immediately set his brake; that the car ran over about 6 feet of the gravel on the track, and then left it, and collided with car 29 at a point about 70 feet distant; and that car 37 was running about 7 miles an hour when it struck the gravel. No other person saw any obstruction on the rails before the car went off, and there was evidence from which an inference might have been drawn that the gravel on the rails was pushed onto them by the car wheels after it left the rails. The motorman of car 29 testified that he saw car 37 jump the track when four lengths from his car, and he was traveling about 7 miles an hour up grade. The evidence was that both cars were so injured as to show that they came together with considerable force, so that, as testified by defendant's superintendent, "the front of car 37 was broken in, the glass broken and the steps wrenched and broken, and the front poles or stanchions broken. The kingbolt was also bent. Car 29 was damaged in a similar manner."

These stanchions were $3\frac{1}{4} \times 2\frac{1}{4}$ inches dimensions, and by the concussion passengers in both cars were unseated, and several of them thrown off the cars. An experienced engineer, a builder and operator of electric roads, Mr. Leland, testified that a car weighing 12 tons, 35 feet long (these weighed 12 tons, and were 37 feet long), proceeding down a $5\frac{8}{10}$ per cent. grade (the grade at the point in question), at the speed of 25 miles an hour, could be stopped in 50 feet; at 20 miles an hour, in about 42 feet; at 7 or 8 miles an hour, in less than its own length. He further testified: "In cases of emergency, electric cars are stopped by throwing in the reverse current. It is called slugging the motors, and it causes the motors to act as generators of electricity, which causes the car first to stop, and then go backwards. It is a very simple operation, and, if the car at the time of the accident was proceeding motor off (as the motorman testified was the fact), could have been applied instantly. I have never known it to fail, and it should always be resorted to in cases of great peril or imminent danger. It stops the car very quickly." It is not pretended that defendant's motorman resorted to this expedient, or did more than apply the brake, which he testified, from what he said he afterwards learned, did not have any effect after the car left the track. It is quite probable that the motorman of car 29, coming up this grade, could have stopped his car in time to have avoided the collision, if Mr. Leland's testimony is to be believed, and it be true that car 37 was going no faster than 7 miles an hour when it left the track. He saw car 37 coming towards him, and off the track, 148 feet, or 4 car lengths, away, and at the speed he was traveling he could have stopped his car in less than its own length, and, whether car 37 went 70 feet or 100 feet, after it left the track, the two would not have come together. Motorman Knox, of car 29, also testified that he set his brakes and reversed his motors, and was "nearly stopped" when the collision happened. He testified further: "The other that was approaching me was not going over 7 miles an hour, and much less, I think, at the time it hit my car." Mr. Knox does not state how far his car traveled after he applied the brakes and reversed the motor, but it could not have been over 35 feet, according to Mr. Leland's testimony. This would show that car 37, after the brake was applied, while the car was on the track, and with the brake on afterwards, to more or less purpose, ran, with its trucks in loose macadam, over 100 feet, and was, when it collided with car 29, still going at considerable speed, judging from the effect upon the two cars. The inference drawn by the jury from this evidence must have been that when car 37 jumped the track it was going at a high rate of speed, as plaintiff's witnesses testified, and faster than the usual speed of defendant's cars, and much faster than the statutory limit of 8 miles an hour; and that, even though the car was derailed by means of the obstruction, the collision would not have occurred but for the excessive speed of car 37 at the time it left the track. Then, too, the jury may have believed Mr. Leland in stating that car 37 could have been stopped by the slugging process he described, but which the motorman failed to apply or account for not applying. The jury may also have believed from the testimony that Motorman Knox, of car 29, was negligent in not stopping his car in time to avoid the accident. It was certainly his duty to do so if reasonably within his power, and defendant would be equally liable for failure of duty on his part as for failure of duty on the part of Motorman Rogers, of car 37. The evidence was conflicting upon all these hypotheses, and, while we might differ with the jury as to where the preponderance of the evidence lay as to one or more of the theories upon which the jury must have determined the case, we are not at liberty to interpose our judgment for that of the jury where, as we think was true, there was some real and substantial evidence to support the verdict.

Defendant's counsel correctly state the general rule that the breach of duty upon which an action is brought must be not only the cause, but the proximate cause, of the damage to plaintiff; and as stated by Shear, & R. Neg. § 26: "The proximate cause of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." This rule is sought to be applied on the assumption that the evidence shows beyond question that the proximate and only cause of the collision in the present case was due to the obstruction on the railway track. But the evidence is not all one way as to the fact, and, besides, it does not follow that the car would have left the track at all if the speed had been 7 or 8 miles an hour instead of more than twice that speed, as the jury were warranted from the evidence in believing it to have been. Furthermore, defendant's counsel ignore the evidence of a new cause for the collision arising after the car left the track. The nature of this evidence has already been suggested. For example, the excessive speed of car 37 may not only have caused it to leave the track when, at the usual speed, it would have safely passed over the gravel on the track (assuming that gravel was previously placed there), but, had the speed been 7 miles an hour instead of 15 or 20, the car would in all probability not have run 80 or 100 feet through the loose macadam, or, having done so, the two cars would have come together with little or no force.

2. Error is claimed in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the following question put to defendant's witness Superintendent Van Frank: "How did these rails used on this electric road compare with the rails used on other roads in town, both electric and cable?" In sustaining the objection, the court said: "You can go into probative matters as to how this road is built, if you want to show it is a safely built road and safely equipped." Counsel stated that their purpose was to show that on a road such as this, and with such cars as were there used, the cars could run over the track 30 miles an hour with safety. The court remarked: "I don't say you cannot prove that, but I don't think you can prove it in that way. You ask the witness now to compare the equipments of this road with equipments of other roads." We think the ruling was correct, and, besides, the record shows that counsel got what they wanted from the witness later on.

3. The same witness was asked the following question: "Now, at what rate of speed could those cars be run, if it were so desired, with absolute safety, so far as derailment was concerned?" The court sustained plaintiff's objection, and the ruling is claimed to be error. The court remarked that the objection was to the form only, and that counsel were entitled to some of the points suggested by the question, and counsel did immediately ask the witness whether a car such as No. 37 "could not be run over that road on a straightaway, barring curves, at a speed of thirty miles an hour, without derailment," and the witness answered that it could. Conceding error in the ruling, it was without injury.

4. Defendant asked certain instructions, marked "2" and "3," which the court gave, with modifications. The refusal to give the instructions as asked, and in giving them as modified, is assigned as error. The instructions involved were intended to guide the jury with reference to the duty of the motorman, and especially as to the degree of care required of him when suddenly confronted with an obstruction on the track whose presence there he could not reasonably have anticipated or foreseen. Defendant asked that the jury be told that defendant would not be liable if the motorman exercised such care as "would have governed an ordinarily prudent man in the same circumstances," etc. Again: That "the standard of care to be used by motormen * * * must be measured by the foresight and caution of the average prudent man standing in their shoes, and compelled to exercise care * * * in the same situation and surrounded by the same circumstances." The court defined the standard of care to be used by the motorman to be that of a "very cautious man standing in his shoes, and compelled to exercise care * * * in the same situation, and surrounded by the same circumstances." Again, the court said: "If he acted in the premises with the same care as would be exercised under the same circumstances by an extremely cautious person," etc. It is conceded by defendant's counsel that carriers of passengers must exercise "great care, or the utmost care, or even the care of very cautious persons," and that an instruction so stating would not have been erroneous "without the additional reference to surrounding circumstances"; but it is urged that as given the instruction "exacts double-distilled care of the defendant common carrier." The objection is stated in another form as follows: "The reasonable and prudent man, in view of the circumstances which surrounded Rogers, the motorman of car 37, would exercise the utmost care, and this is all that can be reasonably exacted of the common carrier. The extremely cautious person, under such circumstances, would exercise extraordinary care, which the law does not require of a common carrier." And it is urged that "the effect of such a rule would be to make common carriers insurers of their passengers, since a jury might always find an accident could have been avoided if the motorman * * * had exercised, under all the circumstances of the case, * * * such care as a 'very cautious man,' or an 'extremely cautious person,' would have exercised." It is further urged that it was for the jury, and not for the court, to say whether a failure to employ extremely cautious men is a breach of the carrier's obligation to exercise the utmost care. It was said in Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, after citing certain cases decided by this court: "It thus appears to be settled law in this state that a proprietor of stagecoaches is liable for the slightest negligence in regard to the vehicle provided by him; that he is responsible to his passenger for the utmost care and diligence of extremely cautious persons." In speaking of the rule as applied to railroad companies, the court said: "The railroad company is bound for the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons, and is responsible for any, even the slightest, neglect." Many cases are cited approvingly where such expressions are used as "extreme vigilance," "as far as human care and foresight can go," "greatest possible care," "is liable for the smallest negligence," "highest degree of care," and the like, as indicating the degree of care required. In McCurrie v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Cal. 558, 55 Pac. 324, the rule as to railroads was stated as follows: "The carrier of passengers is required to exercise the highest degree of care in their transportation, and is responsible for injuries received by them, while in the course of transportation, which might have been avoided by the exercise of such care." We cannot see that the instructions complained of intensified the rule by the use of any unwarranted adjectives. The use of the terms "very cautious person" and "extremely cautious person" finds ample justification in adjudicated cases of recognized authority, and the qualifying words, "under the same circumstances," seem to us rather favorable to defendant than otherwise, and, indeed, were used in the instruction asked by it. Negligence always is relative to the circumstances surrounding the case. Franklin v. Road Co., 85 Cal. 63, 24 Pac. 723.

It was for the court to instruct the jury as to what constitutes negligence, and hence it was not error for the court to instruct as it did. It is not true that it was for the jury to say whether a failure to exercise the utmost care, or the care which an extremely cautious man would, under the circumstances, have exercised, would constitute negligence. This was the function of the court, while the jury was to say whether such care had in fact been exercised.

5. It is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury that "the proof of the occurrence of the accident without fault of the passenger is prima facie proof of negligence on the part of the company." The claim is that the rule is not applicable to street-railway companies; citing Hastings v. Railroad Co. (Sup.) 40 N. Y. Supp. 93, where the cars were drawn by horses. The rule, as the trial court gave it, has been applied in this state to stagecoaches (Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460, and Bush v. Barnett, 96 Cal. 202, 31 Pac. 2); to elevators in buildings (Treadwell v. Whittier, supra); in the case of explosion in a dynamite factory (Judson v. Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 Pac. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718), where the principle upon which the rule rests was clearly stated; in case of a steam railway while operating in the streets of a city (McCurrie v. Southern Pac. Co., supra). There is no principle upon which an exception to the rule can be made in the case of street railways, especially where operated by electricity or steam power. The reason of the rule is equally applicable to electric cars operating in a city.

6. The court gave the following instruction: "If you find that there was an obstruction on the rails, the question arises, 'Would the accident have occurred if there had been no obstruction?' If you find that the accident would not have occurred without the obstruction, then, subject to what I have just told you, the obstruction was the proximate cause of the injuries to plaintiff, and he cannot recover from defendant, unless, on the whole case, it has been shown by competent evidence that defendant or its servants placed the obstruction on the rails, or unless the servants of defendant could, by the exercise of the care exercised by a very cautious person, have discovered the obstruction in time to have avoided the accident." There was no evidence whatever that defendant or its servants placed the obstruction on the rails, and it is contended that it was error to assume the possible existence of a state of facts which the jury had no right to find, there being no evidence of any such facts. In Peo- ple v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548, it was said: "If an instruction in a case is asked which refers to facts which there is no evidence to prove, it is not error to refuse to give it, and if given, although in fact erroneous in the abstract, it will not be regarded as an error for which the judgment will be reversed, unless it be manifest that the jury was misled by it to the prejudice of the defendant. Presumptively, however, an erroneous proposition of law, referring in no way to the evidence in the case submitted to the jury, has not prejudiced the defendant." If this latter statement be true, surely a correct proposition of law, under like circumstances, would not necessarily mislead the jury. In the present case there was not the slightest evidence or suspicion pointing to the defendant as having placed the obstruction on the rails, and we do not think the instruction assumes that any such evidence existed. We do not believe that the reference made to defendant in that connection could, in view of the evidence in the case, have made the slightest impression on the jury to defendant's prejudice. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: SMITH, C.; HAYNES, C.

County Government Act 1893 (St. 1893, p. 359) § 25, subd. 36, declaring that the county board of supervisors shall have authority to authorize the district attorney to appoint an assistant district attorney, which office was thereby created, was not unconstitutional, since the assistant district attorney was but a deputy, and by section 61 of the same act the district attorney could appoint as many deputies as he saw fit, and, if not a deputy, the board had power to authorize the district attorney to fill the office when in their judgment the public interest required it.

L. L. Cory, for appellant. N. C. Caldwell, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, who is auditor of Fresno county, to draw a warrant in favor of the petitioner for certain installments of salary alleged to be due him as assistant district attorney of said county. In the county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 346), in section 25, it is provided as follows: "The boards of supervisors in their respective counties, have jurisdiction and power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law: * * * Subd. 36. To authorize the district attorney to appoint an assistant district attorney, which office is hereby created," etc. Pursuant to this act, the supervisors of Fresno county, on the 19th day of November, 1895, duly authorized the district attorney to appoint such officer, and accordingly the appellant was appointed December 2, 1895, and immediately qualified, and has ever since continued to discharge the duties of the office. On the 16th of February, 1897, the board of supervisors of the county of Fresno made an order revoking and rescinding the order authorizing the district attorney to appoint an assistant. This action was brought to compel the payment of salary for the months of February, March, and April, 1898. In defense, the auditor contends that the statute giving the supervisors power to authorize the district attorney to make the appointment is void, and also that the rescinding of the order by the supervisors terminated the office. The last point above mentioned seems to possess merit, but, unfortunately, the auditor is in no condition to urge that defense. The plaintiff in his petition sets up, as an estoppel, a former judgment between the same parties in a proceeding to compel defendant to issue a warrant for salary which accrued in March, 1897. As a defense in that case, the auditor, who is also defendant in this, set up the order made February 15, 1897, re-

FREMAN v. BARNUM. (S. F. 1,614.)

JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA—MATTERS LITIGATED—MATTERS NECESSARILY INVOLVED—SUBSEQUENT ACTION—STATUTES—DISTRICT ATTORNEYS—ASSISTANTS—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

1. Where, in a suit by an assistant district attorney against a county for salary for a certain month, the question whether an order of the county supervisors, terminating his office prior to such month, was valid, was litigated, the decision was conclusive of the question in a subsequent suit by the attorney for salary for other months.

2. While, in an action by an assistant district attorney against a county for salary for a certain month, the question as to the constitutionality of the statute authorizing his appointment was necessarily involved, and must have been determined, not having been actually litigated, the judgment in such action was not conclusive of the question in a subsequent suit by such attorney for salary for other months.

seinding and revoking the said order made November 19, 1895, in pursuance of which the plaintiff was appointed. It is averred that the issue so raised was duly tried and determined by the court, and judgment rendered, in effect, holding that said attempt to rescind the order of November 19, 1895, was ineffectual, and did not deprive plaintiff of his right to be paid for his services. These allegations as to the former adjudication are not controverted in the answer.

The matter, then, was directly put in issue in the former action, and it was there duly tried and solemnly adjudged that, notwithstanding the rescinding order, plaintiff was entitled to his salary. The law upon this subject is stated by Justice Field in Cromwell v. Sac Co., 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195. It was held that a judgment between the same parties is an estoppel in another suit upon a different cause of action as to points or questions actually litigated and determined. If the point or matter of fact has, by them or those to whom they are privy in estate, been once distinctly put in issue, and solemnly found against them, they are precluded from contending to the contrary.

But this estoppel in actions upon a different cause of action only extends to matters actually litigated and determined, and not to questions involved, and defenses which might have been, but were not, made. This applies to the question as to the constitutionality of subdivision 36 of section 25 of the county government act of 1893. It is true that matter was necessarily involved, and must have been determined, before judgment could have been entered in the former suit. But it does not appear from the record that such question was raised and litigated. This being a different action upon a different cause of action, the defendant is not estopped from raising the objection. But that matter is easily determined. The assistant district attorney was but a deputy, and, by section 61 of the same act, the district attorney could appoint as many deputies as he saw fit. The statute only authorized the board to pay an additional assistant. That they may do this follows from the views expressed in Tulare Co. v. May, 118 Cal. 303, 50 Pac. 427.

If the plaintiff was not a deputy, but was filling an office created by the subdivision alluded to, the result would be the same. The board then had the power to authorize the district attorney to fill the office when, in their judgment, the public interest required it. In my judgment, the board could also cause the appointee to be discharged when, in their judgment, his services were no longer required (Ford v. Board, 81 Cal. 19, 22 Pac. 278), but defendant is precluded from making that defense. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Action by Arthur G. Field against Paul P. Austin and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

John E. Richards, John G. Jury, and J. H. Campbell, for appellants. H. C. Moore, N. Bowden, and Jackson Hatch, for respondent.

SMITH, C. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the court below for the sum of $13,310, with interest and attorney's fee, alleged to be due on seven promissory notes made to the plaintiff by the defendants. The complaint is in the ordinary form. The defense was fraud in the procurement of the contract. The questions involved relate exclusively to the sufficiency of the findings. The answer of the defendant Potts—besides denying that the notes were given for valuable consideration, and alleging that they were wholly without consideration—"avers (1) that each of said notes was given for a part of the purchase price of certain shares of the Western Granite & Marble Company, a corporation, (2) all of which shares were then, and have ever since continued to be, and now are, entirely worthless and valueless; * * * (3) that each of said notes was procured by and through the false and fraudulent representations of the plaintiff, to wit, that said stock was of the value of $50 per share, or more, and that a dividend of ten per cent. on that valuation had already been earned, and would be paid on or about May 1, 1893, all of which the plaintiff knew to be false, and without any foundation in fact; that no dividend has ever been paid on said stock since the making of said notes." The answer of the defendant Austin is to the same effect, but the fraud is alleged in more detail, and additional circumstances are mentioned; as, e. g. that the plaintiff controlled the officers of the corporation, and caused them to make false and misleading statements and reports, etc. It will be sufficient, however, to consider only so much of his answer as corresponds to that of his co-defendant. The findings of the court, so far as material, are that the notes sued upon were made in pursuance of a written contract of even date, by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed to sell, and thereby did sell, certain office furniture and other property, specifically described, used in the plaintiff's business "of brokerage, insurance, and real estate," together with the business, and also 650 shares of the capital stock of the Western Granite & Marble Company, for the sum of $45,750, to be paid $10,000 in cash, $25,000 by the joint notes of defendants, and $10,000 by the several notes of each for $5,000; "and that there was not then, nor had there been prior to that time, any confidential relation existing between them, and said Field did not at any time prior to the consummation of said contract or thereafter do or perform any act or thing tending to conceal from the defendants the value or standing of the properties for the purchase of which they were negotiating from him, nor did he in any way prevent, or attempt to prevent, any or either of them from making fair and full investigation on their account into the values of the several properties mentioned, * * * and that in fact the several properties so sold and transferred did possess an actual value, and were not valueless"; and, finally,—as in fact appeared from the absence of allegations on the point in the answers,—"that there had been no rescission or offer to rescind."

1. The above findings, it is quite clear, do not respond to the issues as to fraud made by the allegations of the answers, and the case therefore stands without findings as to these issues. Nor, as appears from the opinion of the court inserted in the bill of exceptions, was it designed to find on them. The theory of the court, as there expressed, is that the answers, owing to the failure to allege a rescission, or offer to rescind, or to allege damages, eo nomine, could not be regarded as cross complaints to rescind, or for damages for fraud or deceit; and hence that "the only defense set up to these notes is a want of consideration," or, as elsewhere expressed, "a total failure of consideration." But the facts alleged in the answers show that the defendants were damaged, and also the extent of the damage; and upon proof of those facts and of the fraud alleged they would have been entitled to recoup against the notes either to the whole amount of the notes, if the stock was entirely valueless, or to such less extent as the proofs might justify. The law on this point is well settled. Nor would the case be altered even had it been found that the stock given as the consideration of the notes had some value. This would affect only the extent of the relief. "There are three methods by which, in cases like the present, a party defrauded may obtain relief: (1) Cancellation or rescission, etc. * * * (2) Affirmative relief by an action to recover compensation for the injury sustained by the fraud of the defendant, where no cancellation is necessary as * * * the basis of such recovery. (3) Defensive relief, whereby the fraud is set up by way of defense to defeat an action brought to enforce an apparent obligation or liability." Toby v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 498, 33 Pac. 553. And in the last case "it is permissible for the defendant to recoup to a partial extent, or to defeat the action to the entire extent of the note, for fraud in the obtaining of the note or in its consideration [even] where it is admitted that the party who gave the note retained the goods, and made no offer to return them." Bell v. Sheridan, 21 D. C. 374. Or, in other words, "in cases like the present fraud may be given in evidence as a defense, and will be an answer to the whole demand, or in abatement of the damages, according to the circumstances of the case. This is the true, as well as a salutary, rule, and well calculated to do final and complete justice between the parties most expeditiously and least expensively." Beecker v. Vrooman, 13 Johns. 302. And to same effect, Groff v. Hansel, 33 Md. 163; Applegarth v. Robertson, 65 Md. 493, 4 Atl. 896; Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 230, 13 L. Ed. 109; Whitney v. Allaire, 4 Denio, 556.

2. The findings also fail to respond to the allegations of the answers as to the consideration. The allegations are: (1) That the consideration of the notes was the stock; (2) that this was entirely without value. On these points the court simply finds the terms of the contract, and that "the several properties so sold and transferred by the said Field did possess an actual value, and were not valueless." But this refers not specifically to the stock,—which, according to the allegations of the answer, constituted exclusively the consideration of the notes,—but, generally, to all the property sold, and would be equally true whether the stock be or be not of any value. It is true that in the written contract an aggregate sum is mentioned as the consideration for the transfer of the property generally, and that, as the court says, "no valuation was thereby placed upon any of the items composing the consideration"; and, consequently, that prima facie the contract was entire. But it was competent for the defendant to show by parol testimony what the consideration in fact was; that is to say, that the consideration of the notes was the stock, and the consideration for the other property the $10,000 paid in cash. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2; Civ. Code, §§ 1614, 1615; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 284, 285, 304; Hendrick v. Crowley, 31 Cal. 476; Stufflebeem v. Arnold, 57 Cal. 11. On the proof of this fact the transaction would stand precisely as though it were so recited in the contract, and the case would thus come under the general principle of construction applying to such cases, which is that a sale "of different articles at different prices is not an entire contract, unless the taking of the whole is essential from the character of the property, or is made so by the agreement of the parties, or unless the transaction is of such a nature that a failure to obtain a part of the articles would materially affect the objects of the contract, and thus have influenced the sale, had such a failure been anticipated." Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 256. Or, as more tersely expressed: "Where a number of articles are bought at the same time, and a separate price agreed upon for each, although they are all included in one instrument of conveyance, yet the contract, for sufficient cause, may be rescinded as to part and may be enforced as to the residue. But this cannot properly be said to be an exception to the rule [applying to cases where there is a sale of several articles for one consideration. Civ. Code, § 1608], because, in effect, there is a separate contract for each separate article." Miner v. Bradley, 22 Pick. 459, citing Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Bos. & P. 162. Nor does it make any difference whether the facts are recited in the written contract, or proved by evidence aliunde,—as was held in the latter case, where the aggregate consideration only was recited, and proof was allowed that part of it corresponded to one of the properties sold, and the balance to the other. See, also, Mayfield v. Wadsley, 3 Barn. & C. 361; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 272; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601. In the present case it appeared from the evidence of both parties that in negotiating the sale the property other than the stock was estimated to be of the value of $10,000,—which was paid in cash,—and the stock itself at $55 a share, making in the aggregate the amount of the notes; and there was other evidence tending to show that the consideration of the notes consisted wholly and exclusively of the stock. The defendants were, therefore, entitled to a finding on this point, and, in connection therewith, to a finding on their allegation that the stock was of no value, and on findings in their favor on these points would have been entitled to rescind without returning the stock (Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 593; Canal Co. v. Roach, 78 Cal. 554, 21 Pac. 304; Gamble v. Tripp, 99 Cal. 226; 33 Pac. 851; Vineyard Co. v. Tuohy, 107 Cal. 254, 40 Pac. 386); or, to state the point more simply, would have been entitled to judgment on the ground that there was a total failure of consideration for the notes. The findings are, therefore, insufficient, even on the theory adopted by the court that the sole issue was "whether there was a total failure of consideration"; for it was competent for the defendants to prove their allegations that the consideration of the notes was the stock, and that this was of no value, and the court failed to find on either of these issues. We advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

FINDLAY v. POTTS et al. (S. F. 2,388.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1900.)

PROMISSORY NOTES—NEGOTIABILITY.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3087, 3093, providing that a negotiable instrument is a written promise or request to pay a certain sum of money in conformity with title 15, c. 1, art. 1, defining a negotiable note, a note with a stipulation for an attorney's fee in case of suit is not negotiable.

Action by James W. Findlay against Fred S. Potts and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

John E. Richards, John G. Jury, and J. H. Campbell, for appellants. H. C. Moore, N. Bowden, and Jackson Hatch, for respondent.

SMITH, C. This action was brought by plaintiff, as assignee of Field, to recover $10,000 alleged to be due on four promissory notes executed in pursuance of the contract involved in Field v. Austin (S. F. 2,387; just decided) 63 Pac. 692, and belonging to the same series as the notes sued on in that case. The notes all contain stipulations for attorney's fees in case of suit, and are, therefore, nonnegotiable. Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 Pac. 415; *Same v. HEDGE et al. v. WILLIAMS. (Sac. 724.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1901.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT —INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—MASTER'S LIABILITY—APPEAL.

1. Defendant's farm superintendent, who was also a member of a hardware firm, directed an employé of the firm to go to the farm, and repair a leak in a distillate tank, one of the appliances of the farm. By reason of the negligence of such employé in lowering a light into the tank an explosion occurred, by which plaintiff's decedent, a farm servant of defendant, was killed. Held, that under Civ. Code, § 2009, defining a "servant" as one who is employed to render personal services to his employer otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such services remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, that the hardware firm, notwithstanding defendant's superintendent's connection therewith, was an independent contractor, and not defendant's servant, and, the firm having entire control of the employé by whose negligence the accident occurred, such employé was not defendant's servant, so as to render him liable for the result of his act.

2. Where there is no substantial conflict in the evidence on an issue as to whether a servant was the servant of defendant or an independent contractor, a finding that he was defendant's servant is not binding on the appellate court, which, on appeal, must decide such issue as a matter of law, under the facts.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Etta Hedge and others against J. H. Williams. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

J. F. Boller and Bradley & Farnsworth, for appellant. Roth & McFadzean, J. E. Shuey, and Chas. G. Lamberson, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This action was brought by the surviving wife and minor children for damages occasioned by the death of Joseph A. Hedge, the husband and father. Defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The material facts in the case are as follows: Defendant was the owner of a large fruit farm near the town of Porterville. One A. H. Schultz was the superintendent of defendant in the management of the farm. A large tank, used to store distillate, was located upon the premises. Schultz discovered that the tank was leaking, and directed that the distillate be withdrawn therefrom, which was done, with the exception of possibly an inch in depth at the bottom of the tank. Schultz was also a member of the firm of Schultz & Wilson, dealers in hardware, tinware, plumbing, etc., in the town of Porterville. One Fontaine was in the employ of Schultz & Wilson, directly in charge of that portion of the business, including the repairing of tanks, etc., and had made this particular tank some years in the past. Schultz instructed Fontaine to repair the leak in the tank, and took him, with his implements of labor, to the place where the tank was located. The deceased, Hedge, was the servant of defendant, and was engaged in fixing a casing surrounding the tank. Upon the arrival of Fontaine at the tank, he climbed upon it, called for a lighted lantern and a string, opened the manhole, let down the lantern within, and immediately a disastrous explosion occurred. Hedge, Schultz, and Fontaine were all seriously injured. Hedge died; the others recovered. It will be seen from the foregoing statement that the facts are neither many nor complicated; yet the dual capacity in which Schultz was acting—his Jekyll and Hyde character, as it were—adds an additional element of interest to the case.

It is claimed by appellant that Fontaine stood in the position of an independent contractor; in other words, that Schultz & Wilson stood as independent contractors in repairing the tank, and that Fontaine was their servant. It is next claimed that, if Fontaine was not the servant of Schultz & Wilson, he was the servant of defendant, and, Hedge being his fellow-servant, Fontaine's negligence could not form the basis of a recovery by Hedge's relatives. Of course, this contention is sound, unless defendant was guilty of negligence in selecting Fontaine to do the work. We return to the first proposition urged. Did Fontaine stand in the position of an independent contractor? If he did, then the defendant is not liable; for independent contractors alone must bear the damage occasioned by their negligence.

After viewing this evidence from every side, we are brought to the conclusion that Fontaine, in repairing this tank, was not the servant of defendant, and that his negligence in causing the explosion was not the negligence of defendant. First let us eliminate Schultz from the case in his dual capacity, and deal with him alone as a member of the firm of Schultz & Wilson. Then we have defendant personally going to the firm of Schultz & Wilson, and requesting that a man be sent out to repair the leaking tank. Defendant may go one step further, and request that Fontaine be sent out to repair the tank. Assuredly, Fontaine, under these circumstances, would be the servant of Schultz & Wilson, and not the servant of defendant. For nine years Fontaine had been in the employ of Schultz & Wilson, and as their employé he went with his tools to repair the tank. The firm had the power to discharge him at any moment, even at the very moment when the soldering iron was hot in his hand, and the solder ready to be applied. He was paid by the firm for his labor. Defendant could hold the firm liable if his work was negligently done. Looking at the case from this angle, Fontaine was not the servant of defendant. As the servant of Schultz & Wilson, he stood in the position of an independent contractor; and the facts fit the case of Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, where the owner of a building employed a plumber to repair the water pipes, and this plumber was held to be an independent contractor.

Again, let us eliminate Schultz from the case in his character as a dealer in hardware, etc. Then we have him as the superintendent of defendant, requesting the firm of Wilson & Co. to repair this tank; or we may go one step further, and say he requested the firm to send out their man Fontaine to repair the tank. Under these circumstances, Fontaine still would be the servant of Wilson & Co., and to no degree the servant of defendant. In the early English case cited in Bennett v. Truebody, supra, where a butcher hired a drover to drive a bullock, the drover was held to be an independent contractor, and not the servant of the butcher. Coleridge, J., said: "The thing done is the driving. The owner makes the contract with the drover that he shall drive the beast, and leaves it under his charge, and then the drover does the act. The relation of master and servant, therefore, does not exist between them." It can hardly be claimed that the firm of Wilson & Co. were the servants of the defendant in repairing the tank; yet, if they were not defendant's servants, then their employé, Fontaine, certainly was not.

It seems to follow from the foregoing assumptions that, in the eyes of the law, the dual capacity in which Schultz was acting in no way affects the merits of this litigation. As to the law, the case would be the same if he were alone a member of the hardware firm, or alone the superintendent of the defendant. Schultz's dual capacity in no way changes the contractual relations between these various parties. Indeed, in no aspect of the case were there any contractual relations existing between the defendant and Fontaine as to the repairing of the tank. Defendant could not discharge him from the work. Only Schultz & Wilson could do so. Defendant was not paying him for his labor, for Schultz & Wilson were paying him. There being no contractual relation between Fontaine and defendant, it is impossible in law that Fontaine should be the servant of defendant.

Section 2009 of the Civil Code provides: "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master." Schultz & Wilson were not the servants of defendant, tested by this section. Defendant could not be termed their master, for they were doing this work in the pursuit of an independent calling; and, this being so, they were independent contractors, and Fontaine was their servant. See Shear. & R. Neg. § 81. Adam & Kibbe employed McGearey to take down a flagstaff from their building. In an action for damages brought by a third party for injuries received in taking down the flagstaff, it was held that McGearey was an independent contractor, and alone liable. Ahern v. McGearey, 79 Cal. 44, 21 Pac. 540. That case is similar in principle to the case at bar. See, also, Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017. Upon the part of respondent it is insisted that the verdict of the jury is conclusive as to the capacity in which Fontaine was acting in repairing the tank. This contention could only be sound if there was a substantial conflict in the evidence. But here, as to this particular branch of the case, there is no conflict in the evidence. And upon a state of facts of that character it becomes the duty of the appellate court to decide, as matter of law, what the facts prove.

The declarations of Hedge, the deceased, made to third parties after the accident, form no part of the res gestæ, and should not have been admitted against these plaintiffs. The case being remanded, it becomes unnecessary to consider the legal soundness of the instructions given to the jury upon the point. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

In re DEVINCENZI'S ESTATE. (S.F.2,208.)¹

FIGONI v. DEVINCENZI.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1901.)

ADMINISTRATOR—SALE OF REALTY—ORDERS—APPEAL—JURISDICTION OF AP-PELLATE COURT.

Where an appeal was taken from an order annulling an administrator's sale of realty before the same had been entered of record, the appellate court acquired no jurisdiction, and hence an order entered by the superior court at the direction of the supreme court confirming such sale was void, since the first order of the superior court still stood, and the court acquired no jurisdiction to enter the second.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Application by Antonio Devincenzi, as administrator of the estate of Giovanni Devincenzi, deceased, for a confirmation of a sale of real estate. From an order confirming the sale Luigi Figoni appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. James A. Devoto and Devoto, Richardson & Long, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The respondent made a sale of certain real estate of the above-named decedent under an order of the superior court authorizing him thereto, and thereafter made his return to the court setting forth that he had sold the same to the appellant herein. At the hearing upon this return the appellant filed objections to a confirmation of the sale, and the court made an order vacating and setting aside said sale, and declaring the same to be null and void. This order was dated July 8, 1896, and was filed with the clerk of the court July 10th, and entered at length in the minutes of the court July 27th. On July 10th the administrator served upon the appellant his notice of appeal from said order, and the same, together with an undertaking on appeal, was filed with the clerk within five days thereafter. Upon the hearing of the appeal in this court the order was reversed (119 Cal. 498, 51 Pac. 845), and the remittitur thereon was filed in the superior court, and entered in its minutes, February 2, 1898. Thereafter the administrator applied to the superior court for an order confirming the sale to the appellant, and, after notice thereof and hearing upon the same, the court made an order confirming said sale. From this order the present appeal has been taken.

At the date when the appeal from the order vacating the sale was taken, that order had not been entered of record. The appeal therefrom was, therefore, premature, and gave to this court no jurisdiction to entertain the same. In re Pearsons' Estate, 119 Cal. 27, 50 Pac. 929; In re Scott's Estate, 124 Cal. 671, 57 Pac. 654. Being without jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the appeal, the direction of this court for a reversal of the order of July 27, 1896, was unauthorized, and the order was not vacated by such direction, but remained in as full force as if no appeal therefrom had been attempted. When, therefore, in 1898, the administrator asked for a confirmation of the sale, the superior court was confronted with a valid order by which that sale had been annulled, and was without jurisdiction to grant the application. Brady v. Burke, 90 Cal. 1, 27 Pac. 52, involved the validity of a judgment of the supreme court affirming a judgment of the superior court where the appeal was taken before the judgment had been entered. A formal judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the case of Brady v. Page, bearing date March 19, 1878, had been signed by the judge of the court, and findings and an order for judgment filed March 21, 1878. Judgment was not entered, however, until January 7, 1882. In November, 1878, the defendant appealed from said judgment to this court, and the judgment was affirmed. 5 Pac. 103. It was held that this court acquired no jurisdiction of the appeal, the court saying: "Until the judgment is entered, such court retains complete jurisdiction of the case, of which it cannot be divested by any unauthorized appeal to this court. If the attention of this court had been called to the fact that it had before it an appeal from a judgment which had never been entered, and which was still within the control of the lower court, the appeal would have been dismissed; but, whether this was done or not, the appeal was ineffectual, and this court was in fact without jurisdiction to entertain it. The appeal was futile, and the case remained in the lower court undisturbed." Under the principles of the foregoing cases it must be held that the superior court was without jurisdiction to make the order confirming the sale to the appellant. The order is reversed.

STEWART v. CALIFORNIA IMP. CO. (S. F. 1544.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1901.)

On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 63 Pac. 177.

PER CURIAM. In the petition for rehearing, on the part of the defendants, it is suggested that, the attention of the court having been particularly directed to a consideration of the question as to who was the master or employer of the engineer,—whether the city of Oakland or the California Improvement Company,—the real question, to wit, whether the engineer was liable at all, has been overlooked. The liability of the engineer is a necessary postulate to the discussion or inquiry in reference to who was his employer or master. If the damages resulted without any negligence on the part of the engineer, it would be altogether immaterial who employed him, or who was responsible for his acts. The court therefore could not and did not overlook that question. But, as the argument of the respective counsel was directed mostly to the controversy as to who employed the engineer, or was responsible for his acts, necessarily the opinion is mostly devoted to the consideration of that question. The court below finds that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by the negligence of the defendant, the engineer, Conger, without any fault or negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and that at the time the relation of master and servant existed between the California Improvement Company and said defendant Conger. These findings are supported by the evidence. Rehearing denied.

FLINN et al. v. MOWRY. (S. F. 1,604.)¹

CONTRACTS—RESCISSION—ABANDONMENT—SEPARATE INSTRUMENTS—PUBLIC WORK—STREET PAVING—CONSENT OF PUBLIC AUTHORITIES—NECESSITY—PRIVATE CONTRACT—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—INSTALLMENTS—MATURITY—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL—SEPARATE ISSUES—DENIAL IN PART—FAILURE TO APPEAL—EFFECT.

1. Where plaintiffs, desiring to obtain a contract for street paving, prepared a contract which was presented to defendant, a property owner, and, after negotiations between plaintiffs, defendant, and her agent, she directed the agent to sign the contract, which he did, but at that time only one other property owner had signed the same, and, it being a private contract, it was necessary that the owners of a majority of the frontage should sign the same in order to obtain a permit for doing the work, the contract was inchoate at the time of signing, and only became binding after the signatures of other property owners had been procured.

2. Where a contractor, in order to obtain defendant's signature to a street improvement contract, gave her a receipt for the difference between the price stated in the contract and the price agreed, the contract providing that the balance should be paid in installments, the contract and receipt, being executed at the same time, were parts of the same contract, and should be construed together.

3. Where, in an action on a street improvement contract, a paragraph of the complaint alleged that the amount due from defendant was payable in installments,—$200 60 days after the completion of the work, and $200 each month thereafter,—and proof had been given of such provision, the fact that plaintiffs, after both parties had rested, struck out that paragraph of the complaint by leave of court, did not preclude defendant from availing herself of these provisions by amending her answer to allege such provision, there being no occasion for her alleging it in her original answer, it having been alleged in the complaint.

4. Where a contract for street improvement provided that a balance should be paid, $200 60 days after completion of the contract, and $200 each month thereafter until the amount due should be paid, and contained no stipulation that, if the owner failed to pay any installment on demand, the contractor should have the right to recover the whole amount, failure of such owner to pay an installment would not entitle the contractor to a recovery of the contract price before the last installment had matured.

5. Where a street improvement contract required the owner to pay for the same in installments, the first installment to become due 60 days after completion of the work, the contractor, after having fully performed, was not entitled to rescind or abandon the contract as to the provisions for payment on the owner's failure to pay a single installment when due, and sue for the recovery of the entire price.

6. Where, in an action to recover the contract price of a street improvement payable in installments, the only objection by defendant to payment was that plaintiffs had not done the work in accordance with the terms of the agreement, such objection was not equivalent to a refusal to pay for the improvement so as to support a finding that, when the first installment became due, defendant refused to pay any sum, and has ever since refused to pay for the work.

7. Where, in an action on a street-paving contract, the complaint contained a claim for constructing a rock sidewalk in front of defendant's premises, and defendant made no denial of the allegation with reference to the sidewalk, and judgment was rendered declaring a lien for the amount due for the sidewalk alone, personal judgment only being rendered for the paving, and on motion a new trial was granted with reference to the paving, but denied in all other respects, and no appeal was taken from that part of the decree with reference to the sidewalk, defendant was not entitled to deny the making of the sidewalk contract for the first time in an amended answer filed on the retrial of the demand for paving.

8. Street Improvement Act, § 7, subd. 10, which declares that owners of land may perform the "grading" on the street in front of their property "after obtaining permission from the council to do so," applies only to the grading of streets, and hence no permit was required from the board of supervisors to authorize abutting owners to contract for the private "paving" of a street.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by one Flinn and another against Ellen M. Mowry. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Modified.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. J. C. Bates and D. H. Whittemore, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiffs entered into a contract with defendant to do certain work upon Laguna street, in San Francisco, in front of her property, and brought the present action to recover, after its completion, the amount agreed to be paid by her, and to have the same decreed a lien upon her property. The court rendered its decision in favor of the plaintiffs, giving them a lien upon one parcel of the plaintiffs' land for a portion of their claim, and a personal judgment against the defendant for the remainder. A new trial was denied, and the defendant has appealed.

Negotiations had been had between the parties with reference to paving the street, and a proposal therefor had been presented to the appellant on behalf of the plaintiffs, and a formal contract for that purpose, bearing date April 10th, was afterwards prepared by them, and submitted to her. By the terms of this contract she was to pay 24 cents per square yard for paving, but in the proposal originally made to her the plaintiffs had offered to do the same at the rate of 20 cents per square yard. Before the execution of this contract, viz. April 14th, the plaintiffs visited the appellant at her house, and while there the terms of the agreement were discussed,—Mr. Alpers, who appears to have acted in behalf of the appellant, and as her adviser, being also present,—and at that interview an instrument was prepared by the plaintiff Flinn, which purported to be a receipt from the appellant for the difference between 24 cents per square yard, as named in the contract, and 20 cents therefor, as had been agreed upon between them, and which also contained the following: "The balance of ($1,305.59) thirteen hundred five and ⁵⁹/₁₀₀ dollars to be paid in installments of two hundred dollars per month, the first payment to become due four months from date of completion, and each subsequent payment to mature within thirty days next succeeding, all without interest." After this agreement had been signed by the plaintiffs, the appellant expressed herself satisfied, and directed Mr. Alpers to sign the contract, which he thereupon did, as follows: "E. M. Mowry, per C. Alpers." At this time only one property owner had signed the contract, and, it being a private contract, it was necessary that the owners of a majority of the frontage should sign it, in order to obtain a permit for doing the work. The contract was, therefore, inchoate, and was left with Mr. Alpers, who afterwards procured other property owners to sign it, and returned it to the plaintiffs. This evidence was sufficient to justify the court in finding that the defendant entered into the agreement with the plaintiffs set forth in the complaint.

1. The two instruments thus prepared and signed by the respective parties constituted the agreement between them in reference to the work to be done by the plaintiffs and the payment therefor by the defendant. They were parts of one transaction, related to the same matter, were signed at the same time, and are to be taken together, with the same effect as if the terms of both had been incorporated in one document, and signed by both parties (Civ. Code, § 1642), and are to be construed, so far as practicable, so as to give effect to every part of each instrument (Id. § 1641). The provision in the instrument first prepared, wherein the appellant agreed to make the payment "upon the completion of the work," and the provision in the instrument of April 14th, wherein the plaintiffs agreed that the payment should be made in monthly installments of $200 each, are easily reconciled by considering that this change in the time of payment was agreed upon after the instrument of April 10th had been prepared, and submitted to the appellant. The instrument of April 14th, being signed by the plaintiffs, is, under section 1654, Civ. Code, to be interpreted most strongly against them. Its terms are equivalent to an express agreement that the plaintiffs should not be entitled to payment, and would not demand it, except in monthly installments of $200 each. That this was the understanding of the plaintiffs is shown by their complaint as originally filed, and upon which they presented their case to the court, wherein, after alleging as one of the terms of the instrument of April 10th, that each of the owners of property fronting on the street agreed to pay for the work "upon the completion thereof," they allege, in paragraph 8, "that at the time of entering into said agreement it was further modified as to said defendant, E. M. Mowry, so that the amount due from her thereunder should be paid as follows: $200 to be paid 60 days after completion of said contract, and $200 each month thereafter until the amount due thereunder should be fully paid"; and also by the fact that, after they had completed the work, they demanded from the appellant only the first installment of $200. After both parties had rested, the plaintiffs, by leave of the court, amended their complaint by striking out the above paragraph 8, but the defendant was not thereby precluded from availing herself of the modification therein alleged. Inasmuch as this modification was originally alleged in the complaint, there was no occasion for setting it up in her answer, and, as it had been introduced in evidence, she had a right to avail herself of its provisions, after the complaint was thus amended, by amending her answer so that the allegations might conform to the proofs.

The contention of the respondents, that the failure of the appellant to pay this installment when it was demanded gave them a right to a recovery of the whole amount of the contract price, cannot be maintained. No stipulation of this nature is contained in the agreement, and such right did not arise from a mere failure of the appellant to make the payment. Certain cases have been cited by them in support of this contention, wherein it has been held that in contracts for the sale or manufacture of goods to be delivered in installments, and paid for at each delivery, a failure on the part of the buyer to make a payment may be under such circumstances as will justify the seller to consider the contract as repudiated, and to release him from further performance. It is also the rule that, where a continuing or executory contract has not been fully performed on either side, the repudiation of the contract by one party, or his refusal of further performance, will justify the other party in treating the contract as at an end, and give to him a right of action for damages for its breach. See Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 228. The rule in these cases has, however, no application to a contract for labor which has been fully performed on one side, and there remains only payment therefor. There can be no rescission or abandonment of a contract by a party who has fully performed his part of it. The obligation of the other party is measured by the terms of his agreement to the same extent as in any other contract. If this obligation is for the payment of money, and by his agreement such payment is to be made in installments, a failure to pay the first installment will no more give a right of action to recover them all than in the case of an ordinary promissory note which is made payable in periodical installments, and in which there is no provision for the maturity of the whole amount upon the failure to pay one of the installments. The agreement in the present case is specific and unambiguous that the defendant should make the payment for the work done by the plaintiffs in monthly installments of $200 each, and the finding of the court that the plaintiffs gave to the defendant "an option to pay the money due for said work in monthly installments of $200" is not sustained by the evidence. Neither does the evidence sustain the further finding that "when said first installment became due defendant refused to pay any sum at all, and has ever since refused to pay anything for said work." The complaint merely alleges that she had not paid the sums due upon the contract. The only evidence tending to support any finding of nonpayment was that the plaintiffs had demanded payment of the first installment. The only objection that is shown to have been made by the defendant to the performance of her part of the contract was her claim that the plaintiffs had not done the work in accordance with the terms of their agreement. This is not the equivalent of a "refusal" to pay any sum at all. As only one of these installments had matured at the commencement of the present action, the court erred in deciding that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment for the full amount of the contract price.

2. In addition to the claim upon the contract for paving the street, the complaint set forth a claim for constructing a bituminous rock sidewalk on the street in front of a portion of the appellant's land. Defendant filed her answer January 16, 1895, but did not deny the allegations in reference to this sidewalk. The case was tried upon these pleadings April 13, 1896, at which time the court found in favor of the plaintiffs, and that they were entitled to a lien for the amount due for laying this sidewalk, amounting to $241, and also to a personal judgment against the appellant for the amount due upon the contract for paving the street. Upon motion of the defendant for a new trial the court set aside that portion of its decision upon the contract for paving, ordered a new trial as to the issue thereon, and denied the motion for a new trial in all other respects.

Another trial was had upon this issue in November, 1897, and the court again made its decision thereon in favor of the plaintiffs. After both parties had rested at this trial, the plaintiffs, by leave of the court, amended their complaint by striking out the above-named paragraph 8, and the defendant afterwards filed an amended answer, in which she denied that she had made any contract for laying the sidewalk. The findings herein recite the proceedings had upon the former trial, including the former decision in reference to the claim for laying the sidewalk. The appellant, in her statement on motion for a new trial, specified as one of the grounds for setting aside the decision that this finding in reference to the sidewalk is not sustained by the evidence. It was not necessary that the evidence in reference to this claim should be incorporated in the statement. No issue thereon was presented by the answer on which the cause had been originally tried, and the decision made thereon became a part of the records of the court, which it could adopt and include in its final decision. The order for a new trial excluded this portion of its decision from any further consideration, and by failing to appeal therefrom, or otherwise to seek to have the order modified, it became final as to the defendant, and was not affected by her afterwards filing an answer in which the allegation was denied. The right of the court to limit its order for a new trial to a portion of the issues in the case is well established. Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 Pac. 437.

3. It is urged by the appellant that the court erred in excluding certain questions tending to show that the street was closed by the plaintiffs while performing their work thereon, and that in the performance of their contract they dug up and disturbed the street. These questions are claimed to have been proper for the purpose of showing that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs did not obtain permission from the board of supervisors to do the work, the contract therefor was illegal, and could not be the basis of a recovery. City and County of San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal. 25, 43 Pac. 396, is relied upon in support of this contention. That case, however, was decided upon the provision in subdivision 10 of section 7 of the street improvement act, which declares that the owners of land may perform the "grading" upon the street in front of their property "after obtaining permission from the council to do so." The contract in the present case is for other work than grading, and this provision of the section has no application. A contract is not to be held unlawful unless it is either contrary to some express provision of the law or to its policy. Civ. Code, § 1667. This restriction on property owners from doing work upon the street in front of their property is limited to grading, and the provision in a subsequent portion of the section that "whenever any owner or owners of any lots or lands fronting on any street shall have heretofore done or shall hereafter do any work (except grading) on such street in front of any block at his or their expense," the work so done shall be excepted from any order for improving the street, implies the right of the owner to do such work, and to contract therefor, without obtaining such permission. Under their general supervision of the streets of the city the board of supervisors have adopted an ordinance forbidding any one from digging up or disturbing a street without the permission of the superintendent of streets; but, as permission from the superintendent was obtained in the present case, the questions which were excluded by the court were immaterial. That portion of the judgment decreeing a lien against the lands of the defendant in the sum of $238.76, and directing a sale of said lands in satisfaction thereof, is affirmed. The judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,146, with interest thereon, for the paving and curbing of Laguna street, is reversed, and a new trial is ordered of the issues upon which the said personal judgment was given. The order denying a new trial, so far as it applies to the issues upon which the judgment was rendered for laying the sidewalk, and decreeing a lien thereof, is affirmed.

MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—BY-LAWS—ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY—FINDINGS.

1. By-laws of a benefit insurance association form a part of the contract of insurance, and the association may require a substantial compliance with a by-law in regard to changing the beneficiary, or refuse to pay the benefit secured.

2. A beneficiary who has formally joined in a written assignment of a benefit certificate to secure an obligation of the assured is estopped from denying the sufficiency of the transfer.

3. Civ. Code, § 2911, provides that a lien is extinguished by lapse of the time within which an action can be brought in the principal obligation. Held, in an action on a life policy which has been assigned as collateral to secure a claim against the assured, where the issue was whether the claim was barred by limitations, that the failure to find on that issue was reversible error.

Action by Thomas J. Conway against the Supreme Council Catholic Knights of America and others. From a judgment for all other defendants, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff and the defendant supreme council appeal. Reversed.

HENSHAW, J. In 1889 the defendant the Supreme Council of the Catholic Knights of America, a beneficial order incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, issued its benefit certificate to one John M. Conway, by which, upon the death of John M. Conway at a time when he was in good standing in the order, there should be paid to his nephew, Thomas J. Conway, the sum of $2,000. The defendants Noonan, Shay, and Menihan became sureties for John M. Conway in the sum of $1,600, and to protect and secure them an assignment and transfer was made to them of the policy. The assignment declared that the transfer was made as security, and it was executed by both the assured and his nephew, Thomas J. Conway. In June, 1893, the defendant sureties were compelled to pay $1,600, the amount for which they were held upon their undertaking. In August, 1896, John M. Conway died in the state of California, of which he had been a resident for some years. This action was begun by the nephew, Thomas, against the benevolent order to recover the amount of the policy. The sureties were called in and made parties defendant. They asserted a right to the moneys due on account of the policy by virtue of the foregoing facts, or at least to sufficient to reimburse them for their outlay. After trial, judgment passed for the defendant sureties, and the plaintiff and the Supreme Council of the Catholic Knights appeal from this judgment and from the order denying them a new trial.

The by-laws of the Catholic Knights provide a specific mode in compliance with which the beneficiary named in the certificate may be changed. It has uniformly been held in organizations such as this that the by-laws form a part of the contract, and that the association may require a compliance with them, or refuse to pay. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 104 Cal. 177, 37 Pac. 865; Levy v. Magnolia Lodge, 110 Cal. 297, 42 Pac. 887; Hass v. Association, 118 Cal. 9, 49 Pac. 1056. In this instance there was no substantial compliance with the requirements of the by-laws, and it must therefore be held that, were these sureties merely seeking to enforce their demand against the order, the latter would be justified in law in its refusal to pay. But the actual situation here presented is somewhat different. All the parties in interest are before the court, and equity may be done. As between the original beneficiary and the Catholic Knights there is no dispute but that the nephew would be entitled to the money. He has a well-founded and strict legal claim to a recovery, but the equities of the defendant sureties are not to be overlooked. Having regard to them, it is clear that the plaintiff, who had formally joined in the written assignment upon the security of which the defendants Noonan and others paid out a large sum of money, would be compelled to reimburse them to the extent of their outlay, with interest, and would be entitled to receive for his own benefit only the difference between the $2,000 and that amount. In other words, there would be raised against him a clear estoppel in pais to deny the sufficiency and validity of the transfer. But another consideration enters into the matter. Both Conway and the Catholic Knights answered the pleadings of the defendant sureties, urging "that the claim and obligation so set up by said Noonan, Shay, and Menihan against said John M. Conway, deceased, is barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, and the assignment of said benefit certificate made as collateral for said indebtedness has lapsed and is barred by said section, and has fallen and become of no force and effect whatever." The findings of the court are merely that the sureties were compelled to pay and did pay in June, 1893, and that John M. Conway died in August, 1896. By section 2911 of the Civil Code it is provided that a lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation. There is no doubt but that the principal obligation in this case was barred, under the provision of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure pleaded, unless it had been reduced to judgment, or in some other equally effective form had been kept alive and enforceable. The court has failed to find upon this vital question, and the judgment and order must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded. It is so ordered.

HABISHAW et al. v. STANDARD QUICKSILVER CO. (S. F. 1,459.)

INJURY TO MINER—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

An experienced miner, who had worked in a mine for a year and a half, was injured by a piece of rock falling on him, owing to insufficient lagging. He was provided with lights, by which he could see for a distance from 15 feet to 30 feet, and had worked in that part of the mine for a day and a half. There was testimony of a fellow workman that an examination of the condition of the lagging was made by deceased just before he commenced his work, on the day on which he was injured, but such witness was successfully impeached by showing that he had declared that he had knowledge which would entitle plaintiffs to win their case, but would not give it unless paid therefor. Held, that there was a conflict of evidence requiring the question of contributory negligence or assumption of risk to go to the jury.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; R. W. Crump, Judge.

Action by Bertram J. Habishaw and others against the Standard Quicksilver Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Cross, for appellant. W. T. Baggett, Dan Jones, and T. J. Sheridan, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs, who are the surviving wife and children of Thomas Habishaw, deceased, sued the defendant to recover damages for the death of Thomas Habishaw, the husband and father, alleging that he was killed in defendant's mine through the negligence of the defendant and its servants and employes. The negligence pleaded consisted of the failure by the defendant to provide a flooring or lagging over Habishaw's head, so as to prevent rock or other material, which might become loosened in the operations of the mine, from falling upon him. For the want of such flooring or lagging, a rock of large size fell a distance of about 12 feet, and in its fall struck Habishaw, and caused his death. The verdict of the jury was for plaintiff, and from the judgment which followed, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The contention of appellant is that the deceased, an experienced miner, was either guilty of contributory negligence in working where and as he did, knowing of the absence of lagging or flooring, or that in so working, with knowledge of the conditions and situation of the mine, the risks he ran became known to him, that he assumed them, and that, therefore, the defendant is not liable. Appellant urges that Mr. Habishaw being provided with lights by which he could plainly see for a distance of from 15 to 30 feet, and being an experienced underground miner (who had worked in that particular mine about a year and a half), as such experienced miner he would know whether or not such lagging or flooring was necessary or proper for his protection from injury; and that, having worked in that particular place for a day and a half immediately preceding the injury, by the ordinary use of his senses under such circumstances he must have known, or should have known, that there was no covering or flooring or lagging at a distance of about one foot over his head (the seventh floor), or at a distance of about seven or eight feet over his head (the eighth floor), covering the set immediately over where he was working; and that, knowing such facts and the probable results, it was contributory negligence on his part to continue to work in that place without such flooring or lagging, if the same was reasonably necessary for his protection from injury. It is insisted by the appellant that the evidence upon these matters is uncontradicted, and that the question becomes, therefore, one of law. By the respondent it is asserted that upon the question of contributory negligence there is a conflict in evidence, and that in any event, conceding the facts to be undisputed, it is not a case in which as a matter of law the court can say that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, but is a case in which the question is properly referable to the jury.

We think this latter position is sound. The deceased had worked in the mine for a year and a half, and in this particular portion of the mine where the accident occurred for a day and a half. It is conceded to have been the duty of the timber men at the mine to have provided for the security of the miners by timbering and flooring or lagging. That with the light which the deceased carried he could have seen for a distance of from 15 to 30 feet, and should, therefore, have known whether or not the proper lagging was in place; whether or not the place had been properly lagged before the accident, and the lagging had been removed or destroyed by blasting; whether or not Habishaw knew that it had been properly lagged in the first instance, and was guilty of contributory negligence in going to work at the time of the accident without again verifying his knowledge,—were all matters not so plainly pointing to contributory negligence as to justify the withdrawal of their consideration from the jury. The testimony of the witness Farmer, a fellow workman with the deceased at the time of his death, to the effect that an examination of the condition of the lagging was made by Habishaw just before he commenced work upon the fatal day, may well have been disbelieved by the jury, in view of the fact that Farmer was successfully impeached by a showing that he had declared that he had knowledge which would entitle plaintiffs to win their case, but would not give it unless paid therefor.

The case is one of those where the question of contributory negligence, or the question of the assumption of known risks, was proper for submission to the jury, whose verdict in this regard is final. Sanborn v. Trading Co., 70 Cal. 261, 11 Pac. 710; Magee v. Railroad Co., 78 Cal. 436, 21 Pac. 114; Martin v. Railroad Co., 94 Cal. 331, 29 Pac. 645; *Davies v. (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1901.)
DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—KINDRED OF THE HALF BLOOD—RIGHTS OF INHERITANCE.

By Civ. Code, § 1394, "kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance comes to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor must be excluded from such inheritance." Held, that in the excepted case thereunder the kindred of the half blood were not absolutely excluded from inheriting, but merely postponed to those of the whole blood, and that the provision had no application between kindred in different degrees.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Francis D. Smith, deceased. Appeal from a decree of distribution. Reversed.

Rodgers, Paterson & Slack, for appellants. J. N. Young, for respondent.

SMITH, C. This is an appeal from a decree of distribution. The deceased, who died intestate, inherited the property distributed from her father. She left, surviving her, her husband, and two half-sisters on the mother's side, the appellants. The whole of the property was distributed by the decree to the respondent, and the appellants excluded. The case turns upon the construction of the provisions of the Civil Code governing successions, and especially of those of sections 1386 (2) and 1394. By the former provision it is especially provided, in the case here presented, that the husband shall take one half of the estate, and the sisters the other half; but it is contended that by the latter section the sisters are excluded, as not being of the blood of the ancestor from whom the defendant derived the estate; and it was so held by the court. But I do not think this contention can be sustained. The section in question consists of two clauses connected by the conjunction "unless," which, as said by Lord Mansfield (Wilson v. Smith, 3 Burrows, 1556), "means the same as 'except,' and hence implies merely an exception to the first clause." Stand. Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Ryan v. Andrews, 21 Mich. 234, 235; In re Kirkendall's Estate, 43 Wis. 173-175, 177, et seq.; Rowley v. Stray, 32 Mich. 75, 76. The last clause can, therefore, apply only to the class described in the first, or, in other words, to the class from which it constitutes an exception, which is kindred "in the same degree." Hence it can have no application to the relations between different classes as determined by degree of kindred or otherwise (as, e. g., between half brothers or sisters and remote collateral kin), or between grandparents and uncles or aunts,—as in Ryan v. Andrews and in Re Kirkendall's Estate, supra. The effect of the provision is, therefore, simply to subdivide each of the classes as determined by degree of relationship into two classes, namely, those of the full and those of the half blood, and in each class to postpone the latter to the former. Its effect, therefore, is precisely that of the Missouri statute cited in 61 Am. Dec. 664, or of the Indiana statute cited in Robertson v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 336. Hence the provision has no application as between kindred in different degrees, but the relative claims of these are determined exclusively by the provisions of section 1386 of the Civil Code, where the term "brothers and sisters," and other terms denoting kindred of various degrees, are used in their proper sense, and "according to the approved usage of the language" (Id. § 13) must be held to include those of the half as well as of the whole blood. Rowley v. Stray, supra, and cases cited page 75. The two sections, therefore (1386, 1394), in no wise conflict, but together prescribe a system not only complete and harmonious, but also equitable, and in accordance with the general sentiments of mankind, on which in fact, and not on the obsolete feudal reasons on which the common-law doctrine of inheritance of real estate was based, our law of succession is based. This construction is supported by the cases cited above, in which substantially similar enactments were construed; and also by the case of Robertson v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 336, where the statute construed is different, but the principle of the decision is the same. In that case there was an old statute (cited supra) identical in effect with ours, which had been superseded by a new statute couched in less definite terms; and it was held that it would be unreasonable, the statute admitting of a different construction, to construe it as postponing the kindred of the half blood "until after there was a failure of all kindred of the intestate who have the blood of the ancestor from the estate descended, however remote in degree,"—a principle equally applicable here. There are two cases that seem to conflict with these views, viz. Perkins v. Simonds, 28 Wis. 90, and Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555. But the former is expressly limited, and in effect overruled, in Re Kirkendall's Estate, 43 Wis. 175. And again in Shuman v. Shuman, 80 Wis. 476, 50 N. W. 670, it was held that the provision construed did not apply to personal property, which was also in effect to overrule the decision; for neither in the laws of Michigan nor in our own is there room for such a distinction. It may be added that the attention of the court was not drawn to the grammatical construction of the question. Hence the court assumed that "the words of the section are general," not noticing the fact that the first clause refers only to the class specified, and that the latter could not have a more extensive application. The same remark applies to the Kansas case. The true rule is stated by Judge Cooley in Rowley v. Stray, supra, as follows: "Ours is but the expression of a general policy which has always characterized our legislation, * * * and which, * * * in most respects, has put the half blood on a footing of equality with the whole blood in the law of descents. * * * A discrimination against the half blood is the exception, and is not to be extended beyond the obvious intent. And nothing seems plainer to us than that under this statute the half blood are only excluded when there are others in the same statutory class who are to be preferred by reason of being of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came to the intestate. This was the view taken by us when Ryan v. Andrews, 21 Mich. 229, was before us, and further reflection has confirmed us in it." It follows that the appellants are entitled to their shares of the estate as prescribed in section 1386, subd. 2. The order appealed from should be reversed.

McFARLAND, J. The transcript presents two appeals by the executor,—one from an order entered March 23, 1899, settling his third annual account, and the other from an order entered at the same time directing him to pay the claim against the estate of Peter A. Kearney, amounting, with interest, to $613. The main question involved in the appeal first above mentioned is whether the court erred in disregarding a former order made November 24, 1897, settling appellant's second account, and in expressly setting aside said former order and resetting the former account, and disallowing nearly all the items of credit therein which had been allowed and settled by the former order. The facts necessary to be stated are these: Appellant filed his first account as executor in December, 1894, with a report of his administration, the account showing that he had on hand $102.47; and after due notice of the hearing on February 6, 1895, the court on that day made an order settling and allowing the account as presented. On June 15, 1897, he filed his second account, in which, beginning with the $102.47 balance on hand as per the first account, a great many items of receipts and expenditures are set forth. The items of expenditures consisted mainly of interest on a mortgage on the real property of the estate, taxes and insurance on the same, repairs on the buildings on the property, which was rented, necessary to keep the same in proper condition, water rates, etc. The account showed total receipts, $1,022.47, and total expenditures, $737.62, leaving a balance on hand of $284.85. An order of court was duly made setting the hearing of this account for the 28th of June, 1897, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the court room of the court, and notifying all persons interested in the estate "then and there to appear and show cause, if any they have, why the said account should not be settled and allowed." Thereafter, on August 3, 1897, the court made an order in which it was declared that proof had been made to the satisfaction of the court "that notice of said settlement had been given as required by chapter 10, tit. 11, pt. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as ordered by the court," and, further, that "it appearing that said account is true and correct, and is supported by proper vouchers, it is ordered that said account be, and the same is hereby, settled and allowed as presented and filed." On December 30, 1898, the executor filed his third account,—the one from the order settling which this appeal is taken. This account begins with the $284.85 on hand at the settlement of the previous account, and sets forth various items of expenditures, mainly of the character of the expenditures set forth in the second account; and it shows a balance in the hands of the executor of $373.30. To the settlement of this account Dr. Peter A. Kearney, a creditor of the estate, whose claim had been allowed, filed objections, in which he attacked the second account which had been allowed as afore-said, and averred that the second account was settled without proper showing or filing of vouchers; that certain payments which appear by the second account to have been made were in fact not made; that certain expenditures set forth in said second account do not truly represent expenditures actually made by the executor; that vouchers were taken for services rendered and materials furnished for repairs on the property for more than the amounts which the executor actually paid; that, even if said expenditures were made, they had become necessary through the negligence of the executor, etc. Due notice was given according to law of the settlement of this third account, and it came on regularly to be heard on the 14th day of February, 1899. Certain evidence was taken, and the court made the order settling said third account, from which order this appeal is taken. In this order the court recites that the executor had been negligent in not selling the real property of the estate under an order which had been made authorizing him to do so, and that therefore all the disbursements which he had made for interest on the mortgage, repairs, insurance taxes, etc., since October 5, 1895, and which had been allowed in the second account which had been settled as hereinbefore stated, should be disallowed, and that "the former order of November 24, 1897, settling the said executor's annual account, is hereby set aside on that account, and the said second account is hereby now settled and allowed, showing a balance in the hands of the said executor on the 15th day of June, 1897 * * * amounting to $711.42, which said sum of $711.42 is to be added in said executor's third account to the sum of $475, rents with which he charges himself as having been received, making a total credit to the estate in the hands of the said executor on the 30th day of December, 1898, when said third account was rendered, of $1,186.42, instead of $789.85; and the disbursements charged as made in said third account are allowed to the amount of $37.50, and no more, leaving a balance in the hands of said executor on the 30th day of December, 1898, when said third account was rendered, of $1,148.92." At the same time the order was made, without notice, directing the payment of the claim of said Kearney.

An order "settling an account of an executor or administrator" is appealable (subdivision 3, § 963, Code Civ. Proc.); and it is clear that, when proper notice has been given, it is conclusive as to all items contained in it, except as against persons laboring under some legal disability. It is so expressly provided in section 1637, and has been so declared in numerous cases. In re Stott's Estate, 52 Cal. 403; Reynolds v. Brumagim, 54 Cal. 254; In re Coutts' Estate, 87 Cal. 480, 25 Pac. 685; Tobelman v. Hildebrandt, 72 Cal. 313, 14 Pac. 20; In re Coutts' Estate, 100 Cal. 400, 34 Pac. 865; In re Marshall's Estate, 118 Cal. 381, 50 Pac. 540; In re Fernandez's Estate, 119 Cal. 579, 51 Pac. 851. In this respect there is no difference between a final account—that is, one made with a view to the immediate distribution of the estate—and any other account. The Code makes no distinction between them as to their appealability, or as to the conclusiveness of orders settling them, except that section 1634 provides that if the account be for a final settlement, accompanied by a petition for distribution, the notice must state those facts, and must be for at least 10 days. In some of the cases above cited the account dealt with was a final account; but in the two cases, In re Coutts' Estate, 87 Cal., 25 Pac., and 100 Cal., 34 Pac., in Re Marshall's Estate, and in Re Fernandez's Estate, the court was dealing with accounts rendered and settled prior to the final settlement. In the Fernandez Case the court said, "The settlement of the said annual accounts, not having been appealed from, is conclusive." (It is to be noticed that courts have fallen into the habit of calling accounts filed prior to the account on final settlement "annual" accounts, although the Code does not use that word.) Therefore in the case at bar the court erred in disregarding the order settling the second account, in setting the same aside, and in reopening and determining matters against appellant which had been conclusively adjudicated in his favor in the former order. And as the order settling the third account, from which the appeal is taken, is based mainly on matters that had been formerly adjudicated, it must be reversed. In the second appeal from the order directing the payment of Kearney's claim, that order is attacked upon various grounds; but, as it is based on the order settling the third account, which was erroneous for the reason above stated, the two orders must fall together. Both the orders appealed from are reversed.

WHEELER v. BULL. (S. F. 1,261.)

NOTES—PAYMENT—DELIVERY—REQUEST OF MAKER—EVIDENCE.

1. A note in form the individual note of the president of a corporation was in fact the obligation of the corporation, and executed for its benefit. A firm thereafter agreed with the corporation to pay the note at maturity, and, if necessary, to advance the amount "for the purpose of paying the same." On the maturity of the note a member of the firm told the corporation's president that, if he would sign an agreement relating to the reimbursement of the firm, they would "pay off the note as agreed," and he signed it. W. indorsed the firm's note to D. to borrow the money to take up the corporation's note. W. and the above member of the firm went to the bank holding the note for collection, and the former paid the amount to the bank, whereupon the note was stamped "Paid," without objection, and retained by W. The president of the corporation received a note from the member of the firm stating, "The note is paid." W. afterwards sued on the note. Held, that the trial court's finding that the note had never been paid was contrary to the evidence.

2. The fact that a note paid by a third party was not turned over to the maker did not affect the extinguishment of the obligation thereon, since such party had a right to retain it as evidence of a claim for reimbursement.

3. A firm agreed to take up a corporation's note. In reply to questions from W. and a member of the firm, the president of the corporation showed the sources from which returns were expected in a few days, and said the corporation would reimburse whatever would be advanced for taking up the note when such returns came in. W. borrowed money from D. with the firm's note indorsed by him as security, and paid the corporation's note with it. Held, that the evidence did not sustain the finding that W. took up the corporation's note at the special instance of the president, so as to authorize a recovery against him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by Judson Wheeler against Franklin P. Bull. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. W. Crandall, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant executed his promissory note, June 21, 1889, for the sum of $3,750, payable 90 days after date, to the order of Frank C. De Long. De Long placed the note with the First National Bank of San Francisco for collection, and on the day of its maturity the plaintiff paid to the bank the sum of $3,825, the amount then due thereon, with accrued interest, and thereupon the bank marked the note "Paid," and delivered it to him. The present action is brought to recover from the defendant the amount of the note, with interest thereon according to its terms, the plaintiff alleging that he had made the payment and taken the note out of the bank at the request of the defendant, and upon his representation that it was an obligation of the corporation Home & Land Company, of which he was president, and had guaranteed its repayment. The defendant, in his answer, denied these allegations, and alleged that the note had been paid and discharged. The court found that the plaintiff took up the note at its maturity at the special instance and request of the defendant, paying therefor to the bank, who was its holder, its face value, with accrued interest, and at that time received the note from the bank, and had ever since been the holder and owner thereof; that the note had never been paid, and that the whole amount thereof was due from the defendant to the plaintiff. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the note, and the defendant's motion for a new trial was afterwards denied. The present appeal is from the order denying a new trial.

The question upon which the rights of the parties depend is whether the transaction between the plaintiff and the bank constituted a purchase and transfer of the note, whereby its vitality was preserved, or whether it was a payment, by which the obligation of the note was extinguished. No importance is to be attached to the fact that the transaction is in some parts of the record called "taking up" the note, rather than a payment. The effect of the transaction is to be determined by the circumstances under which it took place, and not by the term which the parties may have given it. The maker of a note is frequently said to take it up when he pays it. It sufficiently appears from the evidence that, although the note is in form the individual note of the appellant, it was in fact an obligation of the corporation Home & Farm Company, of which he was the president, and that it was executed for its benefit and account. After its execution, and prior to its maturity, this corporation had entered into an agreement with the firm of D. J. Wheeler & Co., by which that firm was employed to make sales of its lands, and in which it agreed to pay this note at its maturity if a sufficient amount therefor should at that time have been received from the sales of the land; and the firm of D. J. Wheeler & Co. agreed therein that, if the funds received by the corporation were not sufficient therefor, they would advance the amount to the corporation "for the purpose of paying the same," and the corporation agreed that the amount so advanced should be returned as soon as the money received from the sales would permit. When the note matured, the sales of the land had not yielded enough to enable the corporation to pay its amount, and on that day, at the request of Mr. Koscialowski, one of the members of the firm of D. J. Wheeler & Co., the plaintiff accompanied him to the office of the corporation in reference to taking up the note. Upon arriving there a conversation thereon was had with the appellant, in which, in reply to questions from them, he showed the sources from which returns from sales were expected within a few days, and told them that upon their receipt the corporation would reimburse whatever should be advanced for taking up the note according to its agreement with the firm. The plaintiff at first refused to have anything to do with the transaction, and left the office. Very soon after, Koscialowski returned, and presented an agreement in the form of a letter addressed to D. J. Wheeler & Co., and said to Mr. Bull that, if he would sign that agreement, "they would get the money, and pay off this note, as they had agreed." The agreement, in addition to other matters, stated: "As to the amount of $3,825 advanced by you, it will be returned to you out of the amount due from De Voto on the 1st of October, 1889." Bull thereupon signed the agreement in the name of the corporation, and as its president. Thereafter the plaintiff and Koscialowski went together to the bank, where the note had been placed for collection, for the purpose of taking it up, and the plaintiff paid the amount to the bank, upon which the clerk stamped the word "Paid" upon the face of the note, and it was taken away by the plaintiff. The money which the plaintiff paid to the bank had been obtained by him that afternoon from Maurice Dore upon the promissory note of D. J. Wheeler & Co., indorsed by himself. Koscialowski thereupon sent a note to Bull stating, "The note is paid." Upon these facts it must be held that the finding of the court that the note has never been paid by any one is not only not sustained by the evidence, but is contrary thereto. The firm of D. J. Wheeler & Co. had agreed that at the maturity of the note they would advance the money "for the purpose of paying the same," and they sought the aid of the plaintiff in order that they might carry out this agreement. They gave their note to Maurice Dore that they might obtain the money for this purpose, and for the purpose of securing Dore thereon the plaintiff indorsed their note. Koscialowski went with the plaintiff to the bank for the purpose of taking up the note, as his firm had agreed. The bank simply held the note for collection, and had no authority to deal with it, except to receive its amount in payment. Nothing was said at the bank by either party indicating that the transaction was other than a payment, and upon the receipt of the money the bank stamped the note "Paid" without any objection, and handed it to the plaintiff. This was a full performance of the obligation on behalf of D. J. Wheeler & Co., whose duty it was to pay the note, and was accepted by the bank, and the obligation was, therefore, extinguished. Civ. Code, § 1475; Moran v. Abbey, 63 Cal. 56; Lancey v. Clark, 64 N. Y. 209; Burr v. Smith, 21 Barb. 262. This extinguishment of the obligation of the note is not affected by the fact that the note was not surrendered to the maker. It was proper for the plaintiff to retain it until the corporation should comply with its agreement for reimbursement, as evidence in support of a claim therefor.

Neither does the evidence sustain the finding that the plaintiff took up the note at the special instance and request of Bull. It does not appear that Bull ever made any request of the plaintiff to take up the note, or to furnish the money therefor, or made any statement to him other than in accordance with the agreement that had been made with the firm of D. J. Wheeler & Co. His statement that the corporation would soon be in funds with which to reimburse the advance that might be made for taking up the note was only the expression of an opinion, and the facts upon which his opinion was based were exhibited at the time, and it was given in reply to interrogatories put to him. The plaintiff had full knowledge of the contract between the firm and the corporation, and acted at the instance of the firm for the purpose of enabling it to carry out the terms of that agreement. The statements of Bull were with reference to a reimbursement of the advance that might be made on behalf of the firm under that agreement, but, whether the money should be advanced directly by the firm, or by another at its instance, did not change the obligation of the corporation to reimburse the firm in accordance with the terms of its agreement. The order denying a new trial should be reversed.

FENNELL v. DRINKHOUSE (ELLIOTT, Intervener. S. F. 2,441).

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1901.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PROBATE COURT—JURISDICTION—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS—EVIDENCE—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, provides that if a woman dies owning community property, which passes on her death to her surviving husband, any person interested in the title thereto may file in the probate side of the superior court a verified petition, which court shall determine the issue and make a decree, and a verified copy of which may be recorded in the office of the county recorder, and thereafter shall have the same effect as a final decree of distribution so recorded. Held, that this section relates to real estate only, and does not give to the probate department of the superior court, in which the settlement of a wife's estate is pending, exclusive jurisdiction to determine a surviving husband's claim to money deposited by her in a bank during their marriage as community property.

2. Where a wife died leaving money in a bank, which was deposited after her marriage, and the administrator of her estate, who has taken possession of the money, is sued by her surviving husband to recover the money as community property, the presumption is that the money was community property, and the burden is on defendant to show the contrary; hence, there being no question as to the identity of the fund, plaintiff is not required to identify any specific part of it as community funds.

3. Where a wife died leaving money in a bank, which was deposited after her marriage, part of which was the proceeds of the sale of her separate real estate, the presumption that the balance was community property is not rebutted by evidence that the husband did little work and did not earn it, since the deposit was nevertheless community property, though it consisted wholly of the earnings of the wife while living with her husband.

4. The statute of limitations does not commence to run against the claim of a husband that money in the possession of his wife was community property until the death of the wife, as the possession of community property by the wife is the possession of the husband.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. R. Webb, Judge.

Action by William Fennell against John A. Drinkhouse, special administrator of the estate of Winifred Fennell, deceased, and Maria Teresa Elliott, special administratrix appointed to succeed defendant, intervener. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, intervener appeals. Affirmed.

George F. Shelton, for appellant. Emil Pohli and A. Ruef, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Winifred Fennell, deceased, was the wife of the plaintiff, William Fennell. She died in the city and county of San Francisco, November 28, 1899, leaving estate therein, and the defendant Drinkhouse was duly appointed special administrator of her estate. On February 15, 1900, as such special administrator, he took possession of the sum of $4,223.57 then on deposit with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society in the name of Winifred Chapple (by which name the deceased was sometimes known), and this action was brought by the plaintiff against said Drinkhouse to recover said money, claiming that it was acquired by the plaintiff and said Winifred after their marriage, and that it was community property, to which he was entitled. After the appointment of defendant Drinkhouse as special administrator, a will executed by said deceased in her lifetime was found and probated, and Maria Teresa Elliott was duly appointed and qualified as executrix; but, said William Fennell having taken an appeal from the order probating said will, her letters were revoked, and she was appointed special administratrix of said estate, succeeding defendant Drinkhouse, and as such she filed a complaint in intervention in this action, claiming that the whole of said moneys were the separate property of said Winifred in her lifetime, and belonged to her estate, and that she, as special administratrix, was entitled to the possession of the whole thereof. The plaintiff answered said complaint in intervention, the cause was tried by the court, and findings were for the plaintiff, to the effect that he was entitled to $1,815.77 (part of said sum of $4,223.57) and costs, and that the intervener was entitled to the remainder of the fund, less disbursements made by defendant Drinkhouse as special administrator, and judgment was entered accordingly. This appeal is by the intervener from the judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

Appellant formulates three propositions upon which a reversal is claimed, and states that the various assignments of error range themselves under one or the other of them. These grounds will be noticed in their order:

1. "That plaintiff has mistaken his forum and his remedy." It is contended that the department of the superior court in which the settlement of the estate of Winifred Fennell was pending alone had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this litigation, under section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the remedy therein provided is exclusive. Said section has no application. It appears to relate to real estate alone. There would seem to be no reason for recording in the recorder's office a certified copy of a decree determining whether the money here in controversy belonged to the plaintiff or to the estate. Nor, under the facts of this case, is it a proper subject of litigation in the probate department of the superior court. If the money in question was, in fact, community property in the possession of Mrs. Fennell at the time of her death, it is no part of her estate. It is still in the hands of the special administrator; but that fact does not create a debt against the estate in favor of the plaintiff, for which he must present his claim and take chances as to the solvency of the estate. If the community property in question were horses or cattle, there can be no doubt that plaintiff could recover possession of them in an action of claim and delivery, and it is equally clear that he could not in such cases have that remedy in the probate proceedings concerning Mrs. Fennell's estate.

2. Appellant further contends that "plaintiff cannot recover in this action because he failed to identify the specific fund for which he sues." Counsel, I think, shows quite conclusively that "this cannot be treated as a suit on a claim against the deceased," not only because no claim against the estate was presented, but because it is not a suit against the estate, but is an action against John A. Drinkhouse "for money had and received, to and for plaintiff's use and benefit, in the said sum of $4,223.57." There is no question about the identity of the fund received and held by defendant Drinkhouse. The only questions are: Is it community property, or, if part only is community property, how much? Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that any part of the money deposited in the bank by the wife was community property. All the money found in the bank and received by the special administrator was deposited after the marriage of plaintiff and Mrs. Fennell, and the presumption, therefore, was, in the absence of other evidence, that all of it was community property, and the burden of proof was upon appellant. This presumption can be overcome "only by evidence of a clear, certain, and convincing character establishing the contrary, and the burden of this showing rested with the parties claiming the separate character of the property. In the absence of such proof, the presumption as to the community character was absolute and conclusive." In re Boody's Estate, 113 Cal.

682, 686, 45 Pac. 858, and cases there cited. There was evidence tending to show that a portion of the money deposited by Mrs. Fennell in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society was the proceeds of the sale of some real estate which was her separate property, and it also appeared that certain rents thereof entered into the account; but beyond that the evidence was confused and conflicting, and wholly insufficient to overcome the presumption that it was community property. Evidence that the husband did little work, and therefore did not earn the remainder of the money after deducting the proceeds of the real estate, was inconclusive, if not immaterial, since, if the deposit consisted wholly of the earnings of the wife while living with her husband, it was nevertheless community property.

3. It is further insisted that "the right of plaintiff to claim the money as community property is barred by the statute of limitations." The possession of community property by the wife is the possession of the husband. The right of the survivor does not depend upon the custody or possession of the community property prior to the death of the deceased spouse. No other questions are discussed. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; SMITH, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re CAMP'S ESTATE. (Sac. 701.)¹

CAMP v. THOMAS.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1901.)
ADOPTION OF CHILD—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Under Civ. Code, § 227, designating the judge of the superior court as a tribunal to determine application for adoption of a minor child, the determination by such judge that the child sought to be adopted had been abandoned by its parents was a jurisdictional fact to be determined by the judge on the evidence, and the recital in his order of adoption that it had been so abandoned cannot be collaterally attacked in an application for administration on the death of the party seeking to adopt him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kings county; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George W. Camp. From an order appointing W. M. Thomas, public administrator, administrator of the estate, W. H. Camp appeals. Affirmed.

Dixon L. Phillips, for appellant. Rowen Irwin and Hudson & Pryor, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Applications for letters of administration upon the estate of the above-named decedent were presented to the superior court of Kings county by the public administrator of that county, the respondent herein, and also by the appellant, a brother of the deceased. Upon the hearing thereon the court made an order appointing the respondent as such administrator, and directing letters of administration to issue to him. The brother has appealed.

The deceased died intestate, leaving several brothers and sisters and a surviving widow and two adopted children, who at the hearing of the petition were aged, respectively, about 11 and 8 years. The widow died shortly before the petitions were presented. At the hearing the proceedings taken in the lifetime of the decedent for the adoption of the children, including the order of the judge sanctioning their adoption, and declaring that they should thereafter be regarded and treated as the children of the decedent and his wife, were read in evidence. In reply thereto the appellant offered to introduce evidence showing that at the time the proceedings were had the children had not in fact been abandoned by their parents. The court excluded this evidence, and the appellant urges that in this ruling the court erred. While the proceedings for the adoption of a minor child do not constitute judicial proceedings, and the order of the judge therein is not the judgment of a court, yet under section 227, Civ. Code, the judge of the superior court has been designated as a tribunal for that purpose, and in the performance of his duties thereunder exercises judicial functions. It is a well-settled rule that when the jurisdiction of an inferior or special tribunal, or its power to act in any particular case, depends upon the existence of a fact which is to be established before it by extrinsic evidence, the determination of that fact by the tribunal cannot be questioned in a collateral attack upon its order. Wells, Jur. § 61; Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod. & B. 432; Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. City of Evansville, 15 Ind. 421; Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92, 8 N. E. 320; In re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 438; Levey Dist. v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 178, 35 Pac. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388; People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 136, 121 Cal. 522, 50 Pac. 1068, 53 Pac. 1085. Whether the children had been abandoned by their parents was a jurisdictional fact to be determined by the judge, upon the evidence presented to him, before he was authorized to entertain the petition for their adoption; and the recital in his order that it appeared to his satisfaction that they had been abandoned by their parents was a determination of this fact which cannot be questioned in a collateral attack upon the order. Otherwise, the existence of this fact and the status of the children would be always uncertain, since the evidence might not be the same at all investigations, and might be regarded with different effect by different tribunals, and the adoption be held by one court to have been valid, while another court would hold it to have been of no avail. Whether the parents of the child in a direct proceeding against the adopting person for the recovery of the persons of the children would be bound by this determination of the judge is not involved herein. It is very clear that, if an action had been brought against the decedent in his lifetime for necessities supplied for the support of the children, he would not have been permitted to show in his defense that at the time of the proceedings for their adoption the parents had not in fact abandoned them. He would have been estopped by his recital of their abandonment in his petition. Inasmuch as the rights of the appellant herein are derived solely through and under the decedent, he can have no greater right to question the validity of the order than would the decedent. The order is affirmed.

PUBLIC LANDS—MINERALS—ADVERSE CLAIMS —APPEAL—DILIGENCE—JUDGMENTS —ESTOPPEL.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2326, declares that, where an adverse claim is filed during the period of publication of a claim to mineral lands within the public domain, all proceedings shall be stayed until the controversy shall have been settled by some court of competent jurisdiction, and that the adverse claimant shall within a specified time commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the right to possession. Held, that where plaintiffs in an action under the statute served a statement on motion for a new trial August 13, 1887, and then took no further steps, and on April 13, 1898, a motion by defendants to dismiss the proceedings for want of prosecution was denied, and thereafter, on April 20, 1900, a similar motion was made, on appeal from the denial of such motion the judgment of the trial court would not be sustained on the ground that the denial of defendants' first motion was conclusive of their right to a dismissal; it not appearing on what evidence the first motion to dismiss was denied, and it being probable that defendants could not obtain a patent until the motion for a new trial had been disposed of.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by Lee Doon and others against Daniel Tesh and others. From an order denying defendants' motion to dismiss for negligence to prosecute with diligence, they appeal. Reversed.

CHIPMAN, C. Motion by defendants to dismiss for neglect to prosecute with diligence. In 1882 plaintiffs brought the action to determine their right to the possession of certain mining ground, as against defendants' right to possession. The action was brought under section 2326, Rev. St. U. S. Defendants had judgment on demurrer in January, 1882. An appeal was taken to this court, and the judgment was reversed as to one of the plaintiffs, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to his complaint, with leave to defendants to answer thereto, and as to the other plaintiffs the judgment on the demurrer was affirmed. Subsequently, in 1886, the cause was tried by the court without a jury, findings made in favor of defendants, and it was adjudged that the plaintiff, as to whom the action remained, take nothing, and judgment was entered for defendants November 29, 1886. Plaintiffs served a statement on motion for a new trial August 13, 1887, proposed amendments to which were served by defendants September 2, 1887. No further steps were taken on the motion for new trial. The judge who rendered judgment and made the findings went out of office, and on July 3, 1897, a motion was made before his successor by defendants' counsel "to dismiss proceedings now pending in said action." The notice of the motion stated that "said motion will be made upon the records, files, and papers in said cause, and upon the ground of plaintiffs' neglect to prosecute said action with diligence." The motion was to dismiss all proceedings now pending in the action, and the court denied the motion April 13, 1898, and no appeal was taken from the order. Defendants on April 20, 1900, gave notice of a motion "to dismiss said cause and all proceedings now pending therein," stating that "said motion will be made upon the records, files, and papers in said cause, and upon the ground that plaintiffs have neglected and refused to prosecute said action in refusing and neglecting to settle the statement on motion for a new trial, or to take any step for its settlement for the period of ten years." A motion was made in accordance with the notice, and on May 8, 1900, was denied, and the appeal is from this order.

Respondents make no objection to the form of the record, and treat all the matters set out in the transcript as properly here, and we shall also do so.

Respondents concede that the order now here was appealable. McDonald v. McConkey, 57 Cal. 325. But they contend that, defendants having failed to appeal from the order denying the first motion to dismiss, made April 13, 1898, that order became res judicata, and terminated defendants' right to move for a dismissal. We do not think defendants were precluded from again making a motion to dismiss, under the facts shown in this case. Here plaintiffs gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, and served a proposed statement, and defendants served their proposed amendments, and there the plaintiffs halted. Defendants had applied at the United States land office for a patent, and plaintiffs interposed adverse claims and filed a protest in the land office, claiming a portion of the land claimed by defendants. Under section 2326, Rev. St. U. S., this protest stayed proceedings "until the controversy shall have been settled or decided by a court of competent jurisdiction, or the adverse claim waived." The statute makes it the duty of the adverse claimant "within thirty days after filing his claim to commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, to determine the right of possession, and prosecute the same with reasonable diligence to final judgment; and a failure so to do shall be a waiver of his adverse claim." The statute also provides that after final judgment the party entitled to possession of the claim may file a certified copy of the judgment roll with the register of the land office, and, upon complying with certain other provisions, patent may then issue. It is probably true that the filing of the judgment roll would not entitle the claimant to a patent under the United States statute, in the face of evidence that an appeal had been taken or was being taken, or that proceedings for a new trial were pending; and hence defendants could not avail themselves of their judgment until the motion to dismiss was disposed of. Where a motion for new trial is to be made on a statement of the case, the moving party must serve the proposed statement on the adverse party within a certain time, and, if the statement is not agreed to by the adverse party, the latter must within a certain time serve his proposed amendments. If the amendments are adopted, the statement shall be amended accordingly, and then presented to the judge for settlement. If not adopted, the moving party must present the proposed statement and amendments to the judge (Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 3); and thereupon such proceedings for the settlement of the statement shall be taken by the parties as are required for the settlement of bills of exception by section 650. This latter section requires the moving party to present the proposed bill and the amendments to the judge who heard the case, and it becomes the duty of the judge to fix the time to settle the bill and notify the parties, and he must then settle the bill. If he should neglect or refuse to do so, the party desiring the bill settled may then come to this court and have the bill settled. Code Civ. Proc. § 652. Section 660 requires an application for a new trial to be heard, after the statement is filed, "at the earliest practicable period after notice of the motion; * * * and may be brought to a hearing upon motion of either party" after the statement is filed. In the present case the proposed statement was served, and so, also, were proposed amendments, but there the proceedings ended. Whether the proposed amendments were adopted or not, it was the duty of the moving party to present the statement and amendments to the judge. Defendants did all they were required to do when they presented their proposed amendments. They had no opportunity to call up the motion for a hearing, as the statement was not filed with the judge. When the first motion to dismiss the proceedings was heard and denied it was upon evidence of which we are not advised, and it must be presumed it was sufficient. Plaintiffs may have made a counter showing satisfactorily explaining the long delay in the matter of the motion for a new trial. At the hearing of the last motion to dismiss, two years of still further delay appeared, and nothing was shown to have been done by plaintiffs in the meantime or at any time to bring forward their motion for a new trial. There was no counter showing by plaintiffs in any way explaining or excusing their neglect for 10 or 12 years to proceed with their motion for a new trial. Their reliance seems to have been wholly upon the order denying the first motion to dismiss as a bar to the second motion. We think the evidence adduced by defendants in support of their motion showed gross and inexcusable neglect on the part of plaintiffs, and, unless satisfactorily explained, was such as constituted a denial of defendants' motion an abuse of discretion, unless the first order barred the relief. Before we could say that the last order was barred by the first order on the doctrine of res judicata, it would have to appear that the last order was made upon the same facts which existed when the first motion was made, and the burden was on plaintiffs to make this showing. The power of the court to dismiss the proceedings looking to a new trial seems to be conceded, and we do not, therefore, pass upon that question. The court clearly could not dismiss the action on this motion, as it had gone to final judgment. We think, however, that the court should have granted the motion to dismiss the proceedings taken under the motion for a new trial. It is advised that the order be reversed, with directions to dismiss the proceedings relating to the new trial.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed, with directions to dismiss the proceedings relating to the new trial.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. EIKENBERRY.
(L. A. 960.)

COUNTY BOARD—POWERS—STATUTORY PROVISION—INTOXICATING LIQUORS—LICENSE TAX—ORDINANCE—VALIDITY.

1. County Government Act 1893, § 25, subd. 27, authorizing boards of supervisors to license, for the purpose of regulation and revenue, all kinds of business transacted in the county, is not unconstitutional, in that it authorizes supervisors to license all kinds of business for purposes of regulation and revenue in cities where like power is vested in corporate authorities.

2. The payment of a license tax imposed by a city ordinance for carrying on the business of retail liquor dealer does not exempt the licensee from paying a tax imposed by a county ordinance for carrying on the same business.

3. An ordinance requiring payment of a license tax for engaging in the occupation of retail liquor dealer is not void, as imposing a tax on sales, and not on the business.

4. An ordinance is not void because its subdivisions are not all numbered in consecutive order.

5. An ordinance requiring payment of a license tax of $13 per month for carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer is not unreasonable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by the county of Los Angeles, by John A. Gish, tax collector, against S. O. Eikenberry. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Moye G. Norton, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

COOPER, C. This action was brought in a justice court to recover the sum of $26 license tax for carrying on the retail liquor business in the city of Los Angeles during the months of June and July, 1899. Defendant in his answer raised the question of the legality of the ordinance under which it was sought to collect the license, and the case was transferred by the justice to the superior court for trial. Findings were filed and judgment entered for plaintiff. Defendant has appealed from the judgment on the judgment roll. Many minor questions are raised and discussed by appellant's counsel, all of which we have examined, but we will discuss only those deemed material to the case as appears from the record here. On the 11th day of August, 1897, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county duly passed an ordinance entitled "An ordinance imposing licenses, and fixing the rates thereof in the county of Los Angeles, state of California." The portions of said ordinance so far as material here are as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether as principal, clerk, servant, agent or employé, to engage in, conduct or carry on any business, exhibition, or occupation in this ordinance specified, without first having procured a license so to do, as in this ordinance provided; and every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

"Sec. 9. A license must be procured immediately before the continuance hereunder or the commencement of any business or occupation liable to license tax, as herein provided."

* * * No license issued under this ordinance shall authorize any person to carry on any business within the limits of any incorporated city or town having power to impose or levy any city or town license tax, unless in addition thereto the license required by such city or town be also first procured."

"Sec. 13. It shall be the duty of the tax collector, in the name of Los Angeles county as plaintiff, to bring suit for the recovery of any license tax herein imposed, against any person required by this ordinance to first procure a license before engaging in any business, as herein defined, who carries on or attempts to carry on such business without such license."

"Sec. 15. For the purposes of this ordinance a retail liquor establishment is defined to be: (a) Any place where spirituous, vinous, malt or mixed liquors are sold, served, or given away by the drink or glass. (b) Any place where spirituous, vinous, malt or mixed liquors are sold, served or given away in any quantity to be drunk upon the premises.

* * * Any person who, either as owner, agent or otherwise, conducts or carries on, or assists in conducting or carrying on, a retail liquor establishment, as such establishment is herein defined, is for the purposes of this ordinance declared to be carrying on the occupation of a retail liquor dealer."

"Sec. 26. The rate of license for engaging in the occupation of a retail liquor dealer, as defined by section 15 of this ordinance, is hereby fixed at thirteen dollars per month, and such license may be transferred upon the consent of the board of supervisors to said transfer first being obtained."

It appears from the findings that at the time the above ordinance was passed, and while defendant was carrying on the business for which the license tax is sought to be collected, there was in force in the city of Los Angeles (being the place where defendant was carrying on business) a valid ordinance of the city, passed by the city authorities, whereby a license tax of $50 per month was imposed upon defendant, and that such license tax under said city ordinance was paid by defendant for the identical months for which it is sought to charge him in this action. The main contention of defendant is that subdivision 27 of section 25 of the county government act of 1893 is unconstitutional, because it authorizes boards of supervisors to license all kinds of business for the purpose of regulation and revenue in incorporated cities, where like power is vested in the corporate authorities of the city. The portion of the section claimed to be unconstitutional reads: "To license for purposes of regulation and revenue all and every kind of business not prohibited by law and transacted and carried on in such county; * * * to fix the rates of license tax upon the same and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise." St. 1893, p. 358. We do not think the above provision is in conflict with the constitution. It has been held that the payment of a license tax under a valid ordinance of a city does not exempt the party so paying from paying a license tax to the county under an ordinance of the board of supervisors. In re Lawrence, 69 Cal. 610, 11 Pac. 217; Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 400, 39 Pac. 775. If there be a conflict between the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles and the county of Los Angeles in the regulations prescribed for carrying on of the business in the exercise of a police power, the ordinance of the city has superior force within the corporate limits of the city. Ex parte Roach, 104 Cal. 272, 37 Pac. 1044; Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 403, 39 Pac. 775. In Ex parte Roach, supra, this court said: "The constitution recognizes the division of the state into counties, and has authorized the legislature to establish for them a uniform system of government; but it has also authorized the creation of other municipalities within the boundaries of the several counties, and has given to such municipalities the same power of legislation upon these enumerated subjects as is conferred upon the counties themselves; and the power thus conferred by the constitution is to be construed, if possible, in such a way as to give full effect to its exercise by each of the designated bodies. It is no more necessary that there be a conflict between the power thus to be exercised by the county and the city than if the authority of each had been derived through an act of the legislature." In the case from which we have just quoted, the defendant was arrested for a crime, in violating the county ordinance of Kings county prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 5 o'clock a. m. The defendant had paid a city license in the city of Hanford, which contained no such restriction as to time. It was held that there was a conflict between the two ordinances as to the police regulation, and that the county ordinance must give way to the ordinance of the city. In the case at bar the attempt is to collect revenue by a civil action, and there is no conflict as to revenue. Defendant is, under the authorities cited, liable both to the city and to the county for the revenue imposed upon him by the respective authorities of such city and county. It is said by defendant's counsel that the power is given to license "for regulation and revenue," and not for one alone. Conceding this to be true, the power may be exercised, but the regulation or police power must not conflict with a similar regulation of an incorporated town or city. But, aside from the county government act, ample and full power is given to the board of supervisors by section 11, art. 11, of the constitution: "Any county, city or town, may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." It will be observed that the only limitation upon the exercise of the powers so given is that the regulations to be made shall not be in conflict with the general laws. The ordinance in question is not in conflict with any general law. The ordinance passed by the city of Los Angeles is not a general law, within the meaning of this section of the constitution. Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 25, 15 Pac. 318. The power given by the said section of the constitution is ample, regardless of the county government act. Ex parte Roach, 104 Cal. 274, 37 Pac. 1044. It is said by this court in Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 416, 44 Pac. 725, 32 L. R. A. 529, in speaking of the duty of courts in upholding ordinances: "Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the law."

making power, and a contrary conclusion will never be reached upon light consideration. It is the province and right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs, within the law, of course; and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appear that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, and contravenes rights secured to the citizen by the constitution, or laws made in pursuance thereof." In the case at bar, we do not think the ordinance transcends the power of the board of supervisors under the constitution, nor does it conflict with any regulation of any ordinance of the city of Los Angeles.

It is next urged that the ordinance is void for the reason that it attempts to license the sales, and not the business; and we are referred to the case of Merced Co. v. Helm, 102 Cal. 159, 36 Pac. 399. In that case the ordinance imposed a license tax for the sale of enumerated articles, and the right to collect the tax by suit was limited to instances in which the persons commence, carry on, engage in, or conduct some "business" for which a license was required. In this case no such objection appears. It is evident, from reading the sections of the ordinance quoted, that the license is for engaging in the business of retailing liquors. By section 1 it is made unlawful to conduct or carry on certain enumerated businesses without first having procured a license. By section 26 the rate per month for engaging "in the occupation of a retail liquor dealer," as defined in section 15, is fixed. By section 15 any person who carries on or conducts a retail liquor establishment, as defined in other parts of the section, is declared to be carrying on the occupation of a retail liquor dealer. It has been said that the rule in Merced Co. v. Helm went to the extreme verge of strictness, and the court has been disposed to limit rather than extend its application. Ex parte Seube, 115 Cal. 630, 47 Pac. 596; Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 404, 39 Pac. 775. We think the ordinance valid under the authority of the above cases.

It is claimed that the ordinance was never published as required by law. The argument in support of this contention is that section 32 is missing, and that it was therefore published leaving out section 32. Evidently the number of section 32 was by some mistake omitted from the copy of the ordinance; for section 31 embraces two subjects,—pawnbrokers and persons or corporations engaged in the business of loaning money,—and each subject is embraced in separate and distinct sentences. But it is sufficient to say that there is nothing in the record to show that the original ordinance ever had any section numbered 32. It is stipulated that the ordinance as annexed to the defendant's answer and printed in the transcript "was published, as per the copy attached to defendant's answer and cross complaint, on the 14th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st days of August, 1897; that said ordinance went into effect August 27, 1897." We know of no rule that would make an ordinance void because the subdivisions of it were not all numbered in consecutive order. The ordinance did not go into effect until 15 days after its passage. The court found that it was passed August 11, 1897. It went into effect August 27, 1897. The ordinance is not unreasonable. If other business carried on in the city of Los Angeles is taxed too low, or even if no license tax at all is imposed upon such business, it might be well for the defendant to bring the matter to the attention of the city and county authorities; but it is not an argument here sufficient for us to hold that $13 per month is unreasonable for carrying on the business of selling liquors at retail. It has been held here that $50 per month for such license was not unreasonable. Ex parte Hurl, 49 Cal. 557; In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 88, 10 Pac. 261.

The defendant points out and attacks several other different and independent sections of the ordinance which he claims are unconstitutional. It will be sufficient for this court to determine the constitutionality of these sections when some proceeding is here in which they are involved. Defendant is here sought to be charged with a license tax for carrying on the business of retailing spirituous liquors. He has carried on the business, and has not paid the license. Under the views we have expressed, the section of the law under which the license tax is imposed is valid. This is sufficient as to defendant. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

KIERNAN v. SWAN, County Auditor.
(Sac. 784.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1901.)

CONSTABLES — FEES — COUNTY GOVERNMENT ACT—CHANGING COMPENSATION.

County Government Act 1893 (St. 1893, p. 481, § 196, subd. 14) provides that constables in counties of the thirty-fourth class shall have such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law. St. 1895, p. 271, fixes a fee for such constables for making arrests, for mileage, etc., but provides that in criminal cases he shall not receive more than $100 in one month, nor more than $1,000 in any one year. Held, that though the act of 1895 was unconstitutional and invalid, so far as it contravened the act of 1893, in changing the compensation by limiting the amount to a fixed sum for a stated time, it was nevertheless valid so far as it regulated the fees for specific services; hence such constable was entitled only to the fee and mileage for arrests as therein provided.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Action by T. F. Kiernan against C. D. Swan, county auditor, for fees. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. W. Fulkerth and C. A. Stonesifer, for appellant. J. M. Walthall, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an agreed case submitted under section 1138 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff is a constable in Stanislaus county, and performed services, as such, in criminal cases for which he is entitled to compensation; and the question is whether such compensation is fixed by the act of 1895, establishing fees of county, township, and other officers (St. 1895, p. 267), or whether he is entitled to compensation under the county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 481, § 196, subd. 14). The board of supervisors allowed his claim under said county government act, and the defendant, who is county auditor, declined to audit the demand, claiming that plaintiff's fees were fixed by said act of 1895. The court below held that the constable was entitled to the fees in criminal cases provided in said act of 1895, "so far as such act regulates the fees to be collected for specific services, but not so far as such act limits the amount of fees to be collected in any one month," and gave judgment for the defendant. A statement of the services rendered, and the charges made therefor, is made a part of the agreed case, and shows services rendered from May 4th to May 14th, inclusive, amounting to $11.30, all in cases of misdemeanor. The demand for said services was made July 6th, and allowed by the board of supervisors July 11th. The charges made by plaintiff for making arrests was $2, and for mileage in going to place of arrest 30 cents, and for returning with prisoner 30 cents, per mile. The county government act of 1893, in counties of the thirty-fourth class, in fixing the compensation of officers, provides: "Constables, such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law." Section 196, subd. 14. The said act of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 271) fixes the fees of constables "for arresting prisoner and bringing him into court, one dollar," and "for each mile necessarily traveled within his county in executing a warrant of arrest, both in going and returning from place of arrest, fifteen cents." Said act of 1895, however, provided that in criminal cases the constable shall not receive more than $100 in any month, and not more than $1,000 in any one year; and it further provided "that the board of supervisors may reject all bills presented to the county by justices of the peace and constables for fees in criminal cases in all cases of proceedings in which the district attorney has not, in writing, approved the issuance of the warrant of arrest." The county government act of 1893 fixed the compensation of constables in counties of the thirty-fourth class (of which Stanislaus was one) by giving them fees for the services rendered, i. e. all "the fees then or thereafter allowed by law," for all their services; while the act of 1895 gave them the fees therein fixed, provided such fees did not amount to more than a certain sum per month or per annum, thus limiting the fees they might appropriate to their own use, and thereby changing the "compensation" of the officer, which the constitution required should be fixed, and was fixed, by a classification of counties according to population.

It is not questioned that the provisions of the act of 1895 (commonly known as the "Fee Bill") which limit the amount of fees a constable may retain, or which give to the district attorney a supervisory power over the fees he may receive, in effect change the compensation to which he is entitled under the county government act, and are to that extent unconstitutional and void. But it does not follow that those provisions of the act of 1895 which fix the amount that the citizen or the public shall pay for each item of service rendered by the officer are also invalid. The county government act of 1893, in fixing the compensation of constables in counties of the thirty-fourth class, determined that a just compensation to the officer was to give him the fees then or thereafter fixed by law for each item of service rendered; no more, no less. The legislature could not change that provision otherwise than by an amendment of it, since to do so would be to fix the compensation of the officer by some standard other than that fixed by the constitution, viz. the classification of the counties according to population.

But the provisions of the act of 1895 which violate the constitution may be eliminated from the act without affecting its provisions as to the fee which may be charged for each particular item of service. Such fee bill was contemplated by the county government act, and is essential, not only to the ascertainment of the just compensation of the officer, but to the ascertainment of the just charge to be paid by the citizen or by the public from the county treasury. The attempted limitation of the gross amount of fees which the officer might take to his own use is a distinct matter, having no necessary connection with the proper charge for the particular items of service performed. In view of the diversified provisions of the county government act, made for the different classes of counties, what we have said must be understood to apply only to the case before us, or to cases depending upon similar provisions of said act of 1893, which do not fix the fee of the officer for each item of service otherwise than by reference to some other statute. Our conclusion is directly sustained by Dwyer v. Parker, 115 Cal. 544,

47 Pac. 372, where it is said: "With the act under consideration no difficulty is experienced in saying that after eliminating the objectionable provisions fixing compensation, as being in conflict with the constitution and the county government act of 1893, there still remains a full and complete fee bill, establishing the fees which all county and township officers are entitled to charge and collect. It would follow therefrom, in accordance with the harmonious plan indicated by the constitution, that the compensation of the officers in question is regulated by the act of 1893. So far as that compensation is governed by the fees which they may retain, that, also, is embraced within the act of 1893. So far as that compensation is dependent upon the fees which may be charged and collected, those fees are fully provided for and established by the act of 1895."

Both parties in the case at bar cite and rely upon Dwyer v. Parker, supra. The error of counsel for appellant results from want of attention to the facts of that case, which, however, were not stated fully in the abstracts of the briefs printed in the Reports. The plaintiff in that case was a justice of the peace in Santa Clara county. The act of 1893 gave the justice "such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law," but limited the amount he might retain in criminal cases in any one year to $2,000. The act of 1895 allowed the justice for all services in a criminal action or proceeding $3, but not to exceed $75 in any one month. In May, 1895, the justice disposed of 47 criminal cases, for which he presented his bill for $141, being the amount allowed under the fee bill of 1895; but that act limited his compensation to a sum not exceeding $75 per month. He therefore claimed that he was entitled to the fee fixed by the act of 1895 and the compensation which that fee would give him under the limitations of the act of 1893, and this court sustained that contention. I advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

TAYLOR v. FORD. (S. F. 1,602.) 1

PARTNERSHIP—SALE OF FIRM BUSINESS—VALUE OF ACCOUNTS—MUTUAL MISTAKE—FALSE REPRESENTATION—COERCION—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—STRIKING OUT PLEADING—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. The only material difference between the answer to a cross complaint and an answer which was stricken out was that the latter stated that, by reason of defendant's alleged acts, plaintiff was damaged in a specified sum, no part of which was paid, satisfied, or discharged in any way, and the former merely prayed that plaintiff be allowed to recoup against defendant any damages sustained as alleged. Both otherwise contained a full statement of the facts out of which the alleged damages arose, and evidence thereof was allowed as fully as if the rejected answer had remained on file. Held, that plaintiff could not complain of the court's refusal to permit his answer to stand exactly as he desired.

2. In an action on a note made by one partner to his co-partner in buying out the business, a claim that there was a failure of consideration was not sustained, where it is undisputed that the stock was of the value at which it was appraised in the contract of sale, and it was shown that the accounts were valuable, the buyer having collected a majority thereof.

3. Knowledge of the value of book accounts could not amount to more than an opinion, which, in an action on a note given for part of the price thereof, would not support the defense of a mutual mistake or of false representation in relation thereto.

4. Instructions which were unnecessary repetitions or inapplicable to the facts in the case were properly refused.

5. Coercion of a partner in buying out his co-partner cannot be based on threats of the seller to sell out to a stranger in violation of the partnership articles.

Department 1, Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Henry W. Taylor against C. D. Ford. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles F. Hanlon, for appellant. Martin Stephens and Bishop & Wheeler, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This action was brought to compel defendant to set forth the nature and extent of his claim on a certain promissory note purporting to have been executed by plaintiff to defendant, and to have the same determined by the court to be of no force and validity. Plaintiff and defendant were partners in the lumber business in West Berkeley, and defendant sold his interest in the business and property of the partnership to the plaintiff, and received the promissory note in suit as part payment on the sale. The note originally was for the sum of $8,509.87, and was given in accordance with a contract previously entered into between the parties, which contract reads as follows:

"This agreement, made this 25th day of August, 1885, between C. D. Ford, party of the first part, and H. W. Taylor, party of the second part, witnesseth, that whereas, the said parties have been heretofore associated as equal partners under the firm name of Ford and Taylor, sometimes known as the West Berkeley Lumber Company; and, whereas, the said parties are desirous of dissolving the said partnership and of transferring the interest of the said party of the first part in the property of said partnership to the said party of the second part: Now, therefore, these presents witnesseth: That the said partnership be, and the same is here-

—Doors, sash, lime, and hardware at cost price, freight added. Horses, wagons, trucks, office furniture, and other personal property at cost price. That an account of the business of said partnership shall at once be taken up to the said 1st of August, and the profits or losses equally divided between the parties hereto. That all the book accounts due said firm shall be inventoried at their face value, and that, upon the payment of the promissory note hereinafter mentioned, said party of the first part shall execute and deliver to the said party of the second part a bill of sale of his interest, to wit, an undivided one-half interest, in all the property therein described. The consideration for this indenture, and for the agreement of the said party of the first part of transfer said property to the said party of the second part, is as follows, to wit: $5,000 cash paid on the execution of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged by the said party of the first part, said payment to be on account of the sum found to be due from such inventory; and a promissory note executed by the said party of the second part, payable to the order of the said party of the first part, for such sum as may be found to be the difference between one-half of the inventoried valuation of said property and the said sum of $5,000 paid on account upon the execution of these presents. Said note shall be payable three months after date, and bear interest at the rate of seven (7) per cent. per annum. In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals this 25th day of July, 1885. Charles D. Ford. H. W. Taylor."

The $5,000 mentioned in the above contract was paid as therein agreed, and also the sum of $6,000 was paid on said note in November, 1885, leaving a balance unpaid on the note at that time of $2,660.44. In addition to the answer by defendant to the plaintiff's complaint, he filed a cross complaint counting upon the promissory note in question, and praying for judgment for the balance alleged to be due and unpaid thereon. In his answer to the cross complaint the plaintiff pleaded want of and failure of consideration for the note, alleging that he was induced to sign it on the strength of a warranty by defendant, Ford, that certain book accounts and claims forming the consideration of the note were good and collectible, dollar for dollar; also, that plaintiff was coerced into signing the note by threats of the defendant to sell his interest in the partnership in the lumber business "to an entire stranger." He also set up a mutual mistake as to the value of said book accounts, and that they were treated as of their face value, when in fact they were worthless. The cause was tried with a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the defendant on his cross complaint for the sum of $4,382.52. Special issues were also submitted to the jury and answered as follows: "Did the defendant assure the plaintiff at or prior to the execution of the note in question that all of the book accounts outstanding, except the three items stricken out, were good and collectible? A. No. Did the defendant at or prior to the time of the execution of the note in question assure the plaintiff that all the book accounts, except the three items stricken out, were good and collectible, so far as he knew? A. Yes. Did the defendant ever agree with the plaintiff that, if any of said book accounts were not collected, that he (defendant) would allow plaintiff to deduct one-half the amount thereof from the note? A. No." The appeal is taken from the judgment entered on the verdict in favor of the defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

1. The plaintiff filed an amended answer to the defendant's cross complaint without leave of court, which upon motion was stricken out by the court, and the court also refused leave to file the same amended answer after notice given. The appellant contends that this is error on the part of the court. The court, however, did permit appellant to file an amended answer to the cross complaint, setting up the defenses to the note, substantially as already stated, and praying that the defendant take nothing on said promissory note, and that plaintiff be allowed to recoup against the defendant any damage sustained as alleged. The only material difference which appears between the amended answer on which the case was tried and the one stricken out by the court was that the latter contained the statement that "by reason of which said acts the plaintiff, Henry W. Taylor, has been damaged in the sum of $3,500, and that no part of said damages have been paid or satisfied or discharged in any way whatever." Both of the answers contain a full statement of the facts out of which the alleged damages to the plaintiff arose, and at the trial the plaintiff was allowed to give evidence of these facts as fully as he could have done if the rejected answer had remained on file. Appellant suffered no injury, therefore, by the refusal of the court to permit his answer to the cross complaint to stand in the exact form that he desired. If the evidence presented at the trial would not support the defenses to the note which were pleaded, it necessarily follows that it could not support a counterclaim or recoupment for damages arising out of the facts so alleged.

2. The appellant contends that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. The main question in dispute between the parties was whether the defendant positively and falsely represented the accounts which formed part of the consideration to be good, and warranted or guaranteed their collectibility. Upon this question there was a substantial conflict of evidence. The note given was only a part of the entire consideration for the purchase by the plaintiff of defendant's interest in the partnership. There is no contention that the lumber is not of the value at which it was appraised in the contract. It is also shown that the accounts mentioned in the contract were valuable, as plaintiff has succeeded in collecting a majority of them. The contract being entire, there was a good and valuable consideration for the note. From the evidence the jury were warranted in finding adversely to the appellant on his contention as to the failure of consideration.

3. The case does not support the alleged defense of mutual mistake. Knowledge on the subject of the value of these book accounts could not amount to more than opinion, and this will not support the defense of a mistake or false representation. Rendell v. Scott, 70 Cal. 514, 11 Pac. 779; Nounan v. Land Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219; Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 148, 52 Pac. 300. In Hecht v. Batcheller, 147 Mass. 335, 17 N. E. 651, the holder of a promissory note sold it through a broker shortly after the maker had made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, but neither the seller nor buyer nor broker knew that fact, but all supposed that the maker was still doing business; and it was held that there was no such mistake as to the subject-matter of the sale as to avoid the contract, and there was no implied warranty that the note was that of a solvent firm. In the opinion the court says: "The mistake must be one which affects the existence or identity of the thing sold. Any mistake as to its value or quality, or other collateral attributes, is not sufficient, if the thing delivered is existent, and is the identical thing in kind which was sold." Benj. Sales, § 54. In Dortie v. Dugas, 55 Ga. 484, it was held that an erroneous opinion, common to both parties, as to the value of a partnership interest, is not such a mistake of fact as will warrant a rescission in equity of the sale of such interest. In this case a distinction is drawn between a mistake of fact and a mere mistaken opinion, the court saying: "One theory of the complainant's bill is that an erroneous opinion, common to both parties, as to the real value of the interest sold, especially if that interest was absolutely worthless, would be such mistake of fact as would warrant a rescission of the contract and a return of the purchase money. We think, on the contrary, that the very nature of the enterprise touching which the partnership existed would be full notice that the value of a partner's share was contingent, and that an estimate of it made in a general way would partake of the loose nature of conjecture, rather than of the definite characteristics of fixed fact." The verdict was against the appellant on the contention that there was a warranty or guaranty on the part of the defendant, and this verdict is supported by the evidence. In fact, the written contract out of which the making of the promissory note grew contains no guaranty of the book accounts, and no agreement that anything was to be deducted from the value of said accounts, as fixed in said contract, for a failure to collect any of them.

4. The instructions given by the court, read together, fairly cover the law of the case, and those which were refused were either unnecessary repetitions or inapplicable to the facts in the case. The jury was not misdirected as to the defense of want of consideration, but the law on that subject was properly given to them; and the same may be said in reference to the defense of breach of warranty, which was specially submitted to the jury, as already shown. At the conclusion of the instructions to the jury, one of the jurors asked: "I would like to ask the court if ignorance on the part of plaintiff or defendant constitutes any point of law. Ignorance of what plaintiff or defendant might be doing when a certain thing is done; can it be brought up as a matter of law?" The court answered this, and a colloquy took place, as follows: "The Court: The presumption is, where the transaction is between grown-up people, that they do know what they are doing. Mr. Hanlon: I ask an instruction that although that is the presumption, that they knew, that we can show to the contrary that either party was not in such condition. The Court: If they show that one of the parties was imbecile or not of sound mind, or that there was fraud or duress. Mr. Hanlon: Or coercion. The Court: It is not claimed that he was coerced. Mr. Hanlon: It is claimed that he was taken advantage of. The Court: All right; or that he was taken advantage of. Mr. Hanlon: We except." We can see no error on the part of the court in the foregoing. The only coercion claimed by the plaintiff is that he was forced to enter into the contract and give the note in question by reason of defendant's threats to sell out to a stranger in violation of his contract for a five-years partnership. That would not amount to coercion in law.

There are no other points presented on the part of the appellant requiring special notice. The judgment and order are affirmed.

VAN LOBEN SELS v. BUNNELL et al.

(Sac. 759.)¹

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE SALE—VACATION—IRREGULAR NOTICE—CONFLICTING ORDERS OF SALE—PRIOR LIEN—CROSS COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—JURISDICTION OF COURT—ATTORNEY FOR DIFFERENT DEFENDANTS—PROPER PARTIES.

1. Where, after a foreclosure sale, one of the defendants had redeemed the property, an order vacating such sale was within the power of the court, since its jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties did not cease until the foreclosure was completed by a failure of the parties to redeem.

2. A purchase-money mortgage on realty was foreclosed, and the judgment directed the proceeds of the sale to be applied in satisfying a lien prior to the purchase-money lien. On the issuing of the order of sale an injunction was obtained by the wife of the mortgagor restraining the sheriff from selling the property on the claim that it was a homestead. The judgment rendered in this proceeding, in which the parties to the foreclosure suit were not joined, dismissed the injunction, and ordered the proceeds of the sale to be applied to the payment of the purchase-money lien, and the balance paid into court. A new order of sale was issued, and the sheriff's notice of sale was advertised, whereby the money was to be applied according to the order made in the injunction proceeding. Held, that the sale was invalid, since it was not authorized by the original decree, nor was the judgment as modified valid as against the parties to the foreclosure suit, since they were not parties thereto.

3. Where, in a foreclosure proceeding, one of the defendants filed a cross complaint setting up a prior lien for assessments, though not containing a sufficient cause of action, and not served on all the parties, the court acquired jurisdiction to adjudicate as to this lien, since the parties were already in court, and the allegation of the cross complaint of the existence of the lien for assessment and the prayer for general relief was sufficient to identify the subject of the action.

4. Where, in a foreclosure proceeding, one of the defendants filed a cross complaint, it was proper for the same attorney to appear for the cross complainant and another defendant, since the latter admitted the prior lien of the former.

5. Where, in a foreclosure proceeding on realty, a prior incumbrancer is joined, his rights may be adjudicated, and he is entitled to file a cross complaint to foreclose his lien, he being a proper, though not a necessary, party.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Joseph W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by P. J. Van Loben Sels against C. Bunnell and others. From an order vacating a foreclosure sale, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin and Henry C. Ross, for appellant. A. L. Shinn and H. W. Johnson, for respondents.

SMITH, C. The appellants are the defendants C. Bunnell and the Germania Building & Loan Association, and Elizabeth Bunnell, who is not a party to the suit. The defendant Bunnell derived his title from the plaintiff under a deed reserving a lien for certain moneys, part of the consideration which is the lien foreclosed. The building and loan association is a junior mortgagee. It answered, setting up its mortgage, but not praying for foreclosure. The reclamation district No. 551—a defendant—had a lien for an assessment upon the land prior to that of the plaintiff, which it set up by answer and cross complaint. Judgment of foreclosure was rendered directing the sheriff to sell the premises, and out of the proceeds, after retaining his fees, etc., to pay first to the defendant the reclamation district the amount due to it ($1,707.41), and afterwards to the plaintiff the amount due to him ($755.78), with attorney's fee ($150), and costs. This judgment, on the appeal of the building and loan association, was affirmed by this court May 20, 1898. 120 Cal. 680, 53 Pac. 266. An order of sale on the judgment was issued July 8, 1895, and thereupon the appellant Elizabeth Bunnell, wife of the defendant Bunnell, claiming the land as a homestead, commenced an action in the same court against the sheriff, Johnson, the plaintiff, Van Loben Sels, and the reclamation district to enjoin the sheriff from selling; and a temporary injunction was issued. The suit was afterwards dismissed by the plaintiff as to the defendants Van Loben Sels and the reclamation district, and judgment was rendered November 26, 1898, dismissing the injunction and directing the sheriff to proceed with the sale under the judgment in Van Loben Sels against Bunnell and others, but further directing him, after retaining his costs, to pay the proceeds first to the plaintiff Van Loben Sels, and the overplus, if any, into court, thus ignoring the judgment in favor of the reclamation district. Accordingly, a new order of sale was issued December 20, 1898, referring to the judgment, of which a copy was attached; and the sheriff advertised the property for sale, the notice, so far as material, being as follows: "Notice is hereby given by F. T. Johnson, sheriff of the county of Sacramento, state of California, that under and by virtue of a judgment rendered by the superior court of the said county July 8, 1895, in an action therein pending, wherein P. J. Van Loben Sels is plaintiff and C. Bunnell, Germania Building & Loan Association (a corporation), Edward Bunnell, and reclamation district No. 551 (a corporation) are defendants, which said judgment was rendered in favor of said plaintiff and against said defendants Bunnell and Germania Building & Loan Association for $757.80 and $150 attorney's fees, together with expenses and costs in said action, and interest upon said amount of said judgment from the date thereof to the date of sale at 7 per cent. per annum, and by virtue of an order of sale issued out of said court upon said judgment on the 20th day of December, 1898, and to satisfy said judgment, I will, on Monday, the 16th day of January, 1899, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., at the front door of the court house at the corner of Seventh and I streets, in the city of Sacramento, California, sell at public auction, to the highest and best bidder for cash in gold coin of the United States, the following described real property, to wit [describing the property]." At the sale—which was made on the day and at the place named in the notice—the plaintiff became the purchaser for the amount of his debt, and the proceeds were applied in satisfaction thereof. From the return of the sheriff—to which a copy of the notice with affidavit of service was attached as part—it appears that the sale was made under and in pursuance of this notice. The defendant the building and loan association redeemed from the sale January 23, 1899. Thereafter, May 12, 1899, on the motion of the reclamation district, an order was made by the court, May 12, 1899, vacating the sale, which is the order appealed from.

There can be no doubt, I think, of the power of the court to make the order complained of, or of the propriety of its exercise. With regard to the power, the jurisdiction of the court in cases of this kind over the parties and the subject-matter continues until the foreclosure is completed by failure to redeem, and its jurisdiction extends to the purchaser, who, by his bid, submits himself to it. Requa v. Rea, 2 Paige, 339; Cazet v. Hubbell, 36 N. Y. 677; Andrews v. O'Mahoney, 112 N. Y. 567, 20 N. E. 374; Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559. The sale involved here was not authorized by the foreclosure decree as rendered, but the sheriff proceeded as though the decree had been modified by the subsequent judgment in the suit of Mrs. Bunnell against him, which, as to the parties to the foreclosure suit, was of no validity. It was, therefore, if not absolutely void,—a point we need not determine,—at least grossly irregular. Nor can we say that the parties here were not injured thereby. On the contrary, the inadequacy of the price for which the land was sold was in all probability the direct result of the error, for under the decree as rendered it would have been to the interest of the plaintiff to bid more than that amount, as the property appears to have been worth more than the amount due to the reclamation district. So, also, the sheriff seems to have been innocent in this matter; and in reporting the sale not absolutely, but for confirmation, he did all that he could do to relieve himself from the contradictory mandates of the court. It would be unjust to impose upon him a liability to the reclamation district for damages, or at least for the statutory penalty of making the sale without giving the proper notice. Moreover, if the proceedings be regarded as being under the original judgment, its mandates were not obeyed. It does not appear that any money was paid by the purchaser except for the expenses of the sale, and, as the sheriff, under the directions in the judgment of Mrs. Bunnell against him, had applied the balance of the bid upon the judgment in favor of the purchaser, instead of paying it to the reclamation district, it might with reason be contended that there had been no sale. The payment of the purchase money is an essential part of a judicial sale.

It is claimed, however, by the appellants that the judgment in favor of the reclamation district was void for want of jurisdiction in the court, from which it would follow—assuming the proposition to be correct—that the judgment was, in effect, merely a judgment in favor of the plaintiff (as it was afterwards construed in the injunction suit and by the sheriff), and hence that in fact no mistake was made by the sheriff in the sale. The grounds of this contention are that the prior lien of the reclamation district could not be litigated in the suit, and that the cross complaint was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to foreclose the lien of the district. On the latter point the objection is that no defendants are named in the cross complaint, that none were served except the plaintiff, and that the averments of the cross complaint were insufficient to constitute a cause of action. But none of these defects—if they exist—could affect the jurisdiction of the court. Who the defendants are sufficiently appears from the title of the case and the allegations of the cross complaint. It does not appear that the co-defendants of the cross complainant were not served, but only that the plaintiff was served; and the presence of the attorneys of the parties is recited in the decree. Nor could the failure to serve one of the parties affect the question of jurisdiction, for they were already in court, and subject to its jurisdiction. Nor could the jurisdiction of the court be affected by the insufficiency of the cross complaint to state a cause of action. The cross complaint alleged the existence of a lien for assessment, and prayed for general relief. This was sufficient to identify the subject of the action, and to give the court jurisdiction. Blondeau v. Snyder, 95 Cal. 523, 31 Pac. 591; In re James' Estate, 99 Cal. 376, 33 Pac. 1122; Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 206, 207, 37 Pac. 218. The only irregularity that clearly appears is that the same attorney, according to the recitals in the judgment, appeared for the cross complainant and the defendant Bunnell. This, if the latter admitted the lien of the former, was not improper. As far as can be judged from the record, this was in fact the case; and, indeed, the claim of the reclamation district seems to have been admitted by all the parties, for no objection was made to the judgment or appeal taken by one of the defendants, and, by the other, who did appeal, no attack was made on this part of the judgment. With regard to the other objection, there is no doubt of the jurisdiction of the court to adjudicate the claims of a prior incumbrancer if made a party. Such incumbrancers are not necessary parties, but they are always proper parties, and it is good practice to join them for the purpose of liquidating their claims. Heimstreet v. Winnie, 10 Iowa, 430; Story, Eq. Pl. § 193; Jones, Mortg. § 1439; McComb v. Spangler, 71 Cal. 424, 12 Pac. 347; Johnston v. Savings Union, 75 Cal. 140, 141, 16 Pac. 753. Whenever the prior incumbrancer is made a party, it is his right to file a cross complaint to foreclose his lien. First Nat. Bank v. Salem Flour-Mills Co., 12 Sawy. 490, Fed. Cas. No. 580. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

In re BENTON'S ESTATE. (Sac. 854.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1901.)

WILLS — CONTEST — FRAUD — UNDUE INFLUENCE — WIDOW'S RIGHT TO CONTEST — FINDINGS — SUBMISSION — ULTIMATE FACTS — EVIDENTIARY FACTS — PRESUMPTIONS — INTENT TO DECEIVE — KNOWLEDGE — DISJUNCTIVE FINDING — BELIEF BY TESTATOR — PROBATE — DENIAL — MATERIAL ISSUE — FAILURE TO FIND — REVERSAL — EVIDENCE — FORMER TRIAL — REPORTER'S TRANSCRIPT.

1. Where a petition for the probate of a will is contested by testator's widow, and contestant's petition shows her to be an heir at law of decedent, it sufficiently shows her right to attack the will, though she would receive a larger share of the estate under the will than she would take as an heir.

2. Where an application for the probate of a will is contested and tried before a jury, ultimate facts only for the jury's finding, as to whether decedent was competent to make a will, and whether his mind was free from fraud, should be submitted, and not mere evidentiary facts, from which the court is required to reach a conclusion as a matter of law.

3. Where, in a will contest, special findings of evidentiary facts were submitted to the jury and answered, the court, in passing judgment, is not entitled to indulge in any inferences of fact in support of the facts so found, but, as a matter of law, must say that, from the facts found, the judgment must be one rejecting or allowing probate.

4. Under Civ. Code, § 1572, declaring that fraud shall consist in acts committed by a party, or with his connivance, "with intent to deceive another," a finding in a will contest that testator at the time of making the will was actuated and controlled solely by representations of proponent, and that such representations were false and fraudulent, was not sufficient to show that the will was induced by proponent's fraud; there being no finding that the representations were made "with intent to deceive" the testator, or "with intent to induce him to execute the will."

5. Where a will was contested on the ground that it was induced by false representations, findings that it was so induced, but without a finding that proponent knew the representations were false, or that he did not believe them to be true, were insufficient to establish that the will was induced by fraud.

6. Where a will is contested for fraud in inducing its execution, a finding that proponent's representations to testator, inducing the will, were "false or fraudulent," in the disjunctive, is insufficient.

7. Where the probate of a will is contested on the ground that proponent induced its execution by fraud, findings of fact that proponent did make such representations were insufficient to show fraud, in the absence of a finding that the representations were false, made with intent to deceive or induce testator to make the will, or made before its execution.

8. Where a will was contested by a widow on the ground that proponent had induced its execution by fraud, a finding that proponent by false or fraudulent statements caused testator to accuse contestant of theft was immaterial, since, standing alone, such a finding did not indicate the practice of actual fraud.

9. Where a will was contested by a widow on the ground of proponent's fraud in inducing its execution, a finding that testator knew contestant was a dutiful wife, etc., not only failed to show fraud, but tended to show that, whatever representations proponent might have made, they had no effect on testator's mind.

10. In a will contest, a finding that proponent made statements to his father against contestant, testator's wife, which proponent knew to be false, was insufficient to show fraud inducing the execution of the will, in the absence of a finding that proponent made the statements with intent to deceive his father or induce him to make the will, and that the father believed the statements and acted on them.

11. Where a will is contested for fraud, a finding that no fraud or misrepresentation was practiced on testator "at the very time" he signed the will and codicil was immaterial, since, on an issue of fraud, the particular time at which the fraudulent representations were made is immaterial.

12. Where, in a will contest, contestant's petition charges fraud inducing its execution, but the precise question was not directly presented to the jury in the issues on which they were required to return findings, and there was no finding of fact on such issues, though there were various findings on evidentiary facts not sufficient in themselves to show fraud, a judgment denying probate will be reversed for want of a finding on a material issue.

13. Code Civ. Proc. § 273, providing that the report of the official reporter of any court, when written out and certified as a correct transcript of the testimony and proceedings in a case, shall be prima facie correct, does not authorize the introduction of a stenographer's report of the evidence of testator in a divorce suit tried some years before his death, in a subsequent will contest by his widow; the transcript amounting to no more than testator's declarations, which, if admissible at all, might have been proved by the reporter's oral testimony as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Edward I. Jones, Judge.

Application by Herbert A. Benton for probate of the will of T. N. Benton, deceased, to which Elizabeth N. Benton, testator's widow, filed objections. From an order denying probate, proponent appeals. Reversed.

J. G. Swinnerton and J. J. Fitzgerald, for appellant. Nicol, Orr & Nutter and Budd & Thompson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The widow is contesting the probate of the will of her deceased husband, Tolman N. Benton. The proponent of the will is Herbert A. Benton, a son by a previous wife. At the trial before a jury the issues were limited to incompetency, and also fraud practiced upon the deceased by the proponent of the will in the making thereof. Fifty questions purporting to bear upon the issues raised were submitted to the jury, and answers returned thereto. Upon the strength of these answers the will was denied probate, and this appeal is taken from that judgment, upon a bill of exceptions.

It is first asserted that the petition of contestant is substantially insufficient, in not showing that she is beneficially interested in defeating the probate of the will. It is only necessary to say that she shows herself to be an heir at law of decedent, and that fact gives her the right of contest. As bearing upon this right, it is immaterial that the will attacked possibly gives her a larger share of the estate than she would take as an heir at law.

There appears to be some doubt in the minds of counsel in this case, and also in the mind of the trial court, as to the character of the issues which may or should be presented to the jury in a case of the present character. Yet, in view of the provisions of sections 1312 and 1314 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we see no reason for doubt as to the proper procedure to be followed; as, for example, in this case, counsel and court may have submitted to the jury the questions: (1) Was the decedent competent to make a last will and testament? (2) Was the mind of the decedent, at the time of the execution of the will, free from fraud practiced upon him by Herbert A. Benton? These were the ultimate facts in the case. A negative finding by the jury upon either of them would have required a denial of the will to probate. While counsel could, in addition to the ultimate facts, submit issues bearing specifically upon certain branches of the evidence, yet that course is not at all necessary; and in many instances the submission of the ultimate fact to the jury for a finding, when accompanied by clear and explicit instructions as to the law which should govern the jurors in applying the evidence and arriving at a verdict, is the better practice to pursue. If the verdict of the jury condemns the will, a judgment rejecting its probate necessarily follows. If the verdict supports the will, then the court should take evidence upon the matters not involved in the contest, and thereupon, by virtue of the facts declared by the verdict, conjointly with those found by the court, adjudge that the document be admitted to probate.

We here have the question presented, do the issues determined by the jury justify the judgment made by the court, rejecting the probate of the will? The issue as to the competency of the decedent was found in favor of proponent, and the issue of fraud is the single one remaining. The findings of the jury upon the issues submitted to them stand the same as the findings of fact made by the court in a civil action; that is, when we are brought to the consideration of their sufficiency to support the judgment rendered. In the one case the jury makes the findings, and in the other the court makes them; and as said in Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. 873, 13 L. R. A. 576, quoting from the syllabus: "Where probative facts only are found, yet, if the ultimate fact flows as a necessary conclusion therefrom, the findings are sufficient; but, in order to warrant the appellate court in inferring an ultimate fact from probative facts, it must inevitably follow from the facts found." So, in a case where the probate of a will is contested, if the issues presented to the jury involve simply probative facts, then, to justify the court in rejecting the probate of the will, the ultimate fact of fraud, undue influence, or mental incompetency must appear conclusively from the probative facts found. In other words, the trial court may not indulge in inferences of fact in order to support the judgment it makes. It must weigh and test the facts alone that are presented to it by the jury. Presumptions of law may be indulged in, but the indulgence in inferences of fact as to matters bearing upon the issues presented to the jury are denied to it. The trial court must be able to say, "As matter of law, from the facts found by the jury, the judgment in this case must be one rejecting the probate of this will." If an ultimate fact of fraud or mental incompetency or undue influence be found by the jury, then the court is bound to declare that a certain particular judgment follows as matter of law. So must the court be able to declare from the probative facts found. It is said in the case of In re Sander-son, 74 Cal. 208, 15 Pac. 757, "In cases of contest of a will the issues must be such as that the determination of them will leave to the court no office except to enter a judgment admitting the will to probate or rejecting it." The court is here speaking alone of the issues involving the ultimate facts alleged and denied by the pleadings.

We pass to a consideration of the issues found upon by the jury, and discussed by counsel in their briefs: "Was Tolman N. Benton, at the time of and in the making of the two papers in contest, actuated and controlled solely by representations to him at any time made by Herbert A. Benton, and were such representations false or fraudulent? A. Yes."

Then follow many questions and answers, of which the following are a fair illustration: "(1) Did Herbert A. Benton at any time represent to Tolman N. Benton that the contestant, Elizabeth Benton, was stealing from him, said Tolman N. Benton? A. Yes. (2) Did Herbert A. Benton at any time represent to Tolman N. Benton that contestant, Elizabeth N. Benton, was making use of the property of Tolman N. Benton for the benefit of others? A. Yes." We then have questions and answers of which the following are fair illustrations: "(1) Did Herbert A. Benton, by any false or fraudulent statement, ever cause Tolman N. Benton to accuse contestant of theft? A. Yes. (2) Did Herbert A. Benton, by any fraudulent or false statements, induce or persuade Tolman N. Benton to apply to contestant any vile names or opprobrious epithets? A. Yes." We then have the following questions and answers: "(1) Did Tolman N. Benton at all times know that contestant had been at all times to him, said Tolman N. Benton, a dutiful wife? A. Yes. (2) Did Tolman N. Benton at all times know that contestant had never at any time given him, said Tolman N. Benton, any cause to act towards her or treat her in any manner other than in kindness? A. Yes." We also have these questions and answers: "(1) Did Herbert A. Benton ever make any statements or representations to Tolman N. Benton about contestant which he, said Herbert A. Benton, knew to be false? A. Yes. (2) Did Tolman N. Benton ever make any will solely by reason of any false representations made to him, Tolman N. Benton, by Herbert A. Benton? A. Yes. (3) Was any fraud or misrepresentation practiced by any person on Tolman N. Benton at the very time he signed the paper purporting to be a will, and dated October 9, 1896? A. No."

That which will vitiate a contract will vitiate a will. In re Kohler, 79 Cal. 313, 21 Pac. 758. And section 1572 of the Civil Code provides: "Actual fraud within the meaning of this chapter consists in any of the following acts, committed by a party to a contract, or with his connivance, with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract: (1) The suggestion as to a fact of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true." Tried in the crucible furnished by this section, do the facts found by the jury establish that the proponent of this will was guilty of fraud practiced upon decedent in the making thereof? Upon a careful consideration of those facts, we have become entirely convinced that they do not constitute a fraud which vitiates the will of decedent. The most important finding of the jury is the one first quoted. Yet it falls far short of showing a case of actual fraud, within the meaning of the aforesaid section of the Civil Code. It is, in substance, a finding that the deceased executed the will and codicil, actuated and controlled solely by representations made to him by Herbert A. Benton, and that these representations were false or fraudulent. In this statement of facts the all-important element is lacking, to wit, that Herbert A. Benton made these representations with intent to deceive the decedent, or with intent to induce decedent to execute his will. An intent to do one of these things is always an element, and a necessary element, in any given state of facts, in order that those facts may constitute actual fraud. This particular intent is the leaven which permeates the whole, and gives it the name of fraud. Again, there is no finding that these representations were known by Herbert A. Benton to be false, or that he did not believe them to be true. These, also, are elements necessary to a showing of actual fraud. Again, the finding is that the representations were false or fraudulent. As a finding of fact, that is neither one thing nor the other. Perchance these representations were all fraudulent only. The word "fraudulent," as here used, has no well-defined legal meaning, and this part of the finding as to the representations being false or fraudulent amounts to nothing. This answer by the jury is consistent with a finding by it that although the testator, in making the will, was actuated and controlled by the representations of Herbert A. Benton, and that these representations were false, yet that Herbert A. Benton believed them to be true, and made them with the best of motives. It would not be fraudulent for him to seek to control the testator in making his will, so long as his purpose and the effect thereof was proper; and, if he believed that the representations he made were true, his conduct would not be fraudulent, nor would the will, in this respect, be executed by reason of any fraudulent representation. We next have findings as to the representations made by Herbert A. Benton to decedent. These representations do not appear to have any connection with or relation to the representations referred to in the previous finding; and even if, by inference or conjecture, it might be held that they were the same representations, still there is no finding that they were false, or that they were made with intent to deceive the deceased or induce him to execute his will. Neither is there any finding that these representations were made prior to the execution of the will. As to the finding that Herbert A. Benton by false or fraudulent statements caused Tolman N. Benton to accuse contestant of theft, and others of like character, we see no importance whatever in them as casting light upon the question of fraud. Standing alone, they wholly fail to indicate the practice of an actual fraud, and when joined to the other findings they fail to add any strength to them. The next findings, to the effect that Tolman N. Benton at all times knew that contestant was a dutiful wife, and lived up strictly to her marital relations, etc., only serve the purpose of showing that Herbert A. Benton's reprerepresentations to deceased, tending to the contrary, had no effect upon decedent's mind. As to the finding that Herbert A. Benton made statements to his father about contestant which he (Herbert), knew to be false, there is no finding that he made these statements with intent to deceive his father or to induce him to make his will; neither is there a finding that the father believed these statements or acted upon them. It does not even appear that they were made prior to the execution of the will. While the next finding declares that Tolman N. Benton made a will by reason of false representations made to him by Herbert A. Benton, there is no finding that these representations were known by Herbert to be false when made. Again, it is left as a pure matter of conjecture that the language "a will" refers to the will and codicil here under consideration. We do not attach any special importance to the findings declaring that no fraud or misrepresentation was practiced by any person on Tolman N. Benton "at the very time" he signed the will and codicil. Any particular moment of time is a matter wholly immaterial to the issue of fraud.

We are led to the conclusion that the findings of fact returned by the jury do not establish a case of fraud in the execution of the will and codicil here involved. While the petition of contestant charges fraud, for various reasons, not apparent to the court, the question was not directly presented to the jury, in the issues upon which they were required to return a verdict. But, upon the other hand, we find no declaration of the jury that the proponent was not guilty of the practice of fraud upon the decedent in the execution of the will. While we have findings indicating that at the "very time" Tolman N. Benton signed the will and codicil the proponent practiced no fraud upon him, still this finding falls far short of a finding that the making of the will was not had under the influence of proponent's fraud. The case then presents itself exactly as a case where there is no finding of fact upon a material issue, and the judgment must be reversed for that reason.

The official reporter identified a certain document as a certified copy of the testimony of Tolman N. Benton, given by him in an action for divorce tried some years prior thereto. We know of no section of the Code that justifies the admission of this evidence. Section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure is relied upon to effect that purpose, but it does not go to that extent. The evidence here sought to be introduced stood simply as the declaration of Tolman N. Benton; and, if his declarations were competent and admissible evidence, they could have been placed before the jury by oral testimony of the reporter who heard them, and his recollection as to the testimony may have been refreshed from his notes taken at the time. Section 2047, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 132, 32 Pac. 880. The said section 273 refers to reports of the official reporter required to be filed in the court. This question is discussed in Reid v. Reid, 73 Cal. 208, 14 Pac. 781, and it was there declared: "The unfiled transcript is certainly not a public record, but must be put upon the footing of a private memorandum. * * * We think, therefore, that section 273 does not make the transcript itself admissible in evidence."

The court is convinced that all the testimony tending to the point that contestant was kind to proponent's family, waited upon them, etc., is foreign to any question involved in the issues upon trial. The court is also satisfied that the deed of trust given by Tolman N. Benton was likewise immaterial as evidence. The lease given by the father to proponent also stands upon the same footing. The court is well satisfied that the questions here discussed may be considered upon a bill of exceptions taken upon appeal from the judgment. The court is also convinced that the demurrer to the petition of contestant was properly overruled. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

CARPY v. DOWDELL et al. (S. F. 1,670.)¹

CONTRACTS—NOVATION—APPEAL—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS—IMMATERIAL QUESTION—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—DECREE—CORRECTNESS—PRESUMPTION ON APPEAL.

1. Defendants gave notes to a bank, secured by chattel mortgages on certain wine and their manufacturing plant. Afterwards a part of the wine was sold, with the consent of the bank, on the agreement that all payments thereon should be made to the bank and credited on the mortgagor's account. The notes and mortgages were assigned by the bank. Held, on foreclosure of the mortgages, that the contract of sale was not a novation, under Civ. Code, § 1531, providing that novation only takes place by substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation, or by substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter, since the purchaser was not substituted as a debtor with intent to release defendants.

2. Where there was neither an estoppel against plaintiff's maintaining an action to foreclose a mortgage on part of mortgaged property, nor a novation as to the obligation secured by the mortgages, and the decree of foreclosure did not include certain mortgaged wine sold with the mortgagee's consent, a finding that, under the contract of sale, none of the mortgaged property was released from the mortgages, though inconsistent, does not constitute reversible error, since it is immaterial.

3. Where, on appeal from a judgment of foreclosure of chattel mortgages, there was no bill of exceptions, and the description of the property included in the decree coincided with the description in the mortgages, in the absence of a showing to the contrary the decree will be presumed to be correct.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; F. D. Hamm, Judge.

Foreclosure of chattel mortgages by Charles Carpy against James Dowdell and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rodgers & Paterson and F. E. Johnston, for appellants. Bigelow & Titus, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This case has been before the court in the past. Carpv v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695. The facts involved in the litigation are set out in detail in the decision rendered at that time, and we will now only state those which are necessary to a consideration of the questions presented upon this appeal. Defendants are appealing from a judgment of foreclosure rendered against them upon two certain notes and chattel mortgages. Plaintiff, as assignee of the notes and mortgages from the Bank of St. Helena, brings this action of foreclosure.

It is first contended that the findings are substantially the same as those upon the previous appeal, and that by the decision rendered upon that appeal it was held that plaintiff was estopped from bringing the action. By that decision it was held, first, that the acts of the cashier of the bank were the acts of the bank; and, second, that this plaintiff, the assignee of the bank, stood in its shoes. But it was not held that an estoppel existed which barred the prosecution of this action for every part of the mortgaged property.

The salient facts important here are these: Defendants sold 368,000 gallons of wine to Chevalier & Co., to be delivered in 50,000-gallon installments, the purchase price to be paid as the wine was delivered. The Bank of St. Helena held chattel mortgages upon defendants' personal property, which included this wine, other wine, manufacturing plant, etc. The sale by defendants to Chevalier & Co. was evidenced by an instrument in writing which the bank prepared; and at the bank's suggestion and request, and with the consent of both parties to the contract, the following clause was inserted in that writing: "All payments on said wines to be made to the Bank of St. Helena for our account, the cashier of said bank to receipt for the same." As suggested, the substance of the decision upon first appeal as to the question of estoppel is a contested matter here. And, while isolated excerpts may be taken from that decision tending to show that a complete estoppel upon the entire cause of action stood against plaintiff, yet, if the decision as a whole is considered, it is plain that such a holding was never contemplated or intended by the court. In the absence of language in the opinion pointing directly to a declaration of that character, we will not so hold now, for the reasoning by the court at that time does not demand it, and neither the facts of the case nor general principles of law justify a conclusion that such is the law. The reasonable and fair construction of the decision is therefore that the estoppel only involved the 368,000 gallons of wine. When the cause went back for a second trial, plaintiff was free to litigate his rights as to the balance of the property covered by the mortgages.

It is contended that "the contract between the defendants and Chevalier & Co., consented to by the bank, was a complete novation, by which the new obligation of Chevalier & Co. to pay these moneys to the bank, to be credited by the bank to the account of the defendants, was substituted for the original obligation of the defendants to the bank." Under section 1531 of the Civil Code, a novation in this case could only take place "(1) by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation; (2) by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter." There is no question here of the substitution of a new obligation between the bank and these defendants. Hence the principle found in subdivision 1 of the aforesaid section cannot be invoked. We deem it equally clear that Chevalier & Co. was not substituted as a new debtor in place of these defendants with intent to release them. The findings in this case neither justify the conclusion that the parties intended to substitute a new debtor nor to extinguish the old obligation. The agreement of Chevalier & Co. to pay these moneys, the various installments of the purchase price of the wine, to the bank for the account of defendants, has none of the essentials of a novation, as demanded by the aforesaid section of the Civil Code. Even conceding this covenant of the contract to be so broad that under it the bank was authorized to credit the payments thus made by Chevalier & Co. upon defendants' notes, still that fact alone does not fill the measure furnished by the statute. We cannot find an intimation in the contract that the bank intended to release defendants from the notes and mortgages, and look to Chevalier & Co. alone for the money due upon them, and the contract has no such legal effect. An intent upon the part of the bank to release these defendants from their original obligations is a vital element going to make up a novation in this case. That intent is lacking, and for this reason alone the claim of novation must fail.

Even conceding the finding of fact made by the trial court to the effect that the bank, under the Chevalier transaction, did not release any of the mortgaged property from the effect of the mortgages, may be inconsistent with some other finding, still the mere presence of an inconsistency in findings does not constitute reversible error.

The Chevalier wine was not included in the decree of foreclosure. Hence appellants have no cause to complain, looking at the case from that standpoint. There being neither an estoppel against plaintiff's prosecution of this action as to the remainder of the mortgaged property, nor a novation as to the original obligations held by the bank, this finding of which complaint is made cuts no figure in the case.

The description of the property included in the decree of foreclosure coincides with the description found in the instruments of mortgage, and, in the absence of some showing to the contrary, this being an appeal from the judgment without a bill of exceptions, the decree will be presumed to be correct. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR—REJECTION OF EVIDENCE—SUBSEQUENT ADMISSION—MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE SALE PENDING APPEAL—EFFECT—EVIDENCE—IMMATERIAL—REJECTION.

1. Where evidence was received proving substantially the same facts that rejected evidence was offered to prove, no error amounting to prejudice was committed.

2. Where, pending appeal from a judgment foreclosing chattel mortgages, no stay bond was given, and part of the mortgaged property was sold under the foreclosure, the proceeds being paid to the plaintiff therein, and the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded, such sale and payment of the proceeds did not amount to a payment of the notes, so as to bar a subsequent foreclosure, since by the reversal of the judgment the litigation took the form it had prior to its entry, and the notes stood unpaid.

3. Where certain wine was not included in a judgment foreclosing a chattel mortgage thereon, and also on other property, it was not error to reject evidence, relative to such wine, which was immaterial on the question of estoppel, except as to that wine, and did not tend to establish a novation.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; E. D. Hamm, Judge.

Foreclosure of chattel mortgages by Charles Carpy against James Dowdell and others. From an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rodgers & Paterson and F. E. Johnston, for appellants. Bigelow & Titus, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial in cause No. 1,670, this day decided upon appeal from the judgment. 63 Pac. 778.

While the original appeal (115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695) was pending in this court, defendants having given no stay bond, a portion of the personal property mortgaged was sold under foreclosure proceedings. The judgment upon that appeal was subsequently reversed, and the cause remanded for a second trial. Thereupon, defendants filed a supplemental answer, setting out that the notes and mortgages forming the subject-matter of the litigation had been fully paid, satisfied, and discharged. At the present trial in the superior court, for the purpose of establishing this allegation of payment, defendants offered in evidence the execution and proceedings had thereunder pending the first appeal. This evidence was rejected, but evidence was received which proved substantially the same facts; and for that reason no error amounting to prejudice was committed by the trial court, even conceding the ruling erroneous, which proposition we do not decide. It is not disputed but that the sale took place pending the appeal, and that the proceeds of the sale, to the amount of the judgment, were paid over to the plaintiff. But the contention of respondent is that those acts did not, in law, amount to payment of the notes. With that contention we agree, and the court so found the fact and the law. The sale under foreclosure, subsequently followed by a payment of the proceeds thereof over to the plaintiff, may indicate that he has a large amount of money belonging to defendants, but it falls short of proving payment of the notes involved in this litigation. There is no pretense that defendants in any way consented to this sale, but, on the contrary, one of them testified that they did not consent. The judgment upon which the sale was based was reversed and set aside by this court. The foundation upon which the order of sale and all the proceedings had thereunder rested was taken away. By the reversal of the judgment the litigation took the form it had prior to its entry, and the notes stood unpaid. Thereafter the parties stood in the same position as if no judgment had ever been rendered. Counsel for appellants cite no authority which holds that the acts here considered amount to a payment of the notes. Upon the other hand, there is both authority and principle looking to the contrary. 2 Freem. Judgm. § 482.

The property which may be designated as the Chevalier wine was not included in the judgment of foreclosure. Hence, in view of the law as declared in this cause upon appeal from the judgment, no error was committed by the trial court in rejecting the evidence bearing upon that transaction; for this evidence of Chevalier and others was not material upon the question of estoppel, other than as to the Chevalier wine. Neither did it tend to establish a novation. For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is affirmed.

Action by Thomas L. Tally against H. Parsons and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. C. Brown, for appellants. Clarence A. Miller, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This action was tried before the court, findings filed, and judgment entered for plaintiff. Appellant Ganahl has appealed from the judgment on the judgment roll. The only question necessary to be determined is as to whether the findings entitled the plaintiff to judgment against appellant. It appears from the findings that plaintiff's assignor entered into a written contract with defendant Parsons, under the terms of which Parsons agreed to build a dwelling house for said assignor upon the premises described in the complaint for the sum of $2,344, to be paid in certain installments. The contract provided that, in case the said Parsons should fail to prosecute the work with diligence, or in the performance of his agreement in any respect, the owner (plaintiff's assignor) shall be at liberty to terminate the employment, enter upon the premises, and complete the building. It further provided that, in case of the failure of Parsons to complete the building according to the contract, the owner should have the right to employ any other person or persons to finish the work and provide the materials therefor, and contained the following clause: "The expense incurred by the owner as hereinbefore provided, either for furnishing materials or finishing the work, and any damage incurred through such default, shall be audited and certified by the architects, whose certificate thereof shall be conclusive between the parties." At the time of the execution of the contract the contractor executed and delivered to the owner his bond in the sum of $800, with appellant as one of the sureties thereon, conditioned that the contractor should faithfully perform all the terms and conditions of the contract, and complete the building according to the plans and specifications, and, when completed, deliver the same up to the owner free from all liens. After the commencement of said building and the payment of various amounts, the contractor, without any just cause, refused to complete the building, and abandoned the contract. The owner thereupon took possession, employed men, purchased materials, completed the building, and necessarily expended in its completion according to the plans and specifications the sum of $513.33 over and above the contract price, for which sum plaintiff recovered judgment. The court found that the architects "never did audit and certify to the costs and expenses for materials and labor for the completion of said building by said Mary A. Tally, and that said architects never did audit or certify to any or all of the expenses for the completion of said building; * * * that said architects were never called upon or asked by said Mary A. Tally, or by any other

BUILDING CONTRACT — DEFAULT OF CONTRACTOR — COMPLETION BY OWNER — EXPENSE — RECOVERY — CERTIFICATE OF ARCHITECTS — NECESSITY — LIABILITY OF SURETY.

A contract for the erection of a house provided that on default of the contractor the owner could terminate the contract, and complete the building, the expense thereof to be audited and certified by the architects, whose certificate should be conclusive between the parties, and the contractor gave a bond conditioned for his faithful performance of the contract. The contractor abandoned the contract, and the owner completed the building, but did not have the expense thereof audited and certified by the architects, who had been discharged as incompetent. Held, that the expenses incurred by the owner could not be recovered from the sureties on the bond without the architect's certificate, they not having been shown to have been incompetent or dishonest, as charged, or to have refused to certify the expenses.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

person, to audit and certify, or audit or certify, to the expenses for material and labor for the completion of said building." The court further found that, immediately after the abandonment of the contract by Parsons, the owner discharged the architects on the ground that they were careless, dishonest, and incompetent, and never afterwards employed them.

Appellant was surety for the faithful performance of the contract by Parsons. He was bound only by the express terms of his contract, and to the extent, and in the manner, and under the circumstances pointed out in his bond and the building contract, to which it referred, and no further. He was entitled to stand on its precise terms. Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 543; Carter v. Mulrein, 82 Cal. 169, 22 Pac. 1086, 16 Am. St. Rep. 99. It was a part of the terms and conditions of his contract that if the owner, by default of the contractor, should be compelled to furnish labor and materials and finish the building, any damage incurred through such default should be audited and certified by the architects. This was a condition precedent, and was inserted for the protection of the contractor and the sureties. The architects were named in the contract, and were the agents of both parties. The sureties agreed to the contract and as to the selection of the architects therein named. It was competent for the parties to agree that, in case of loss, expense, or damage to the owner, such loss should be audited by a tribunal of their own selection. They did make such agreement, and selected such tribunal, and, unless some valid reason is shown, the auditing by such tribunal is a condition precedent to plaintiff's recovery. In Smith v. Briggs, 3 Denio, 73, the defendant had covenanted with the plaintiff for doing the carpenter work of certain houses, and to pay him when he should receive from the architect his certificate that the work was fully and completely finished according to the specification annexed to the contract. It was held that giving the certificate by the architect was a condition precedent, the performance of which must be averred in an action brought to recover payment for such work. In Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 174, the contractor was to be paid the balance "when all the work should be completed and certified by the architects to that effect." It was held that the certificate was a condition precedent, and in the opinion it is said: "The parties have seen fit to make the production of such a certificate a condition precedent to the payment. The plaintiff is as much bound by this part of his contract as any other. It is not enough for him to bring his action, and say that he has completed the work which he undertook to do. He has agreed that the architects named should decide whether the work is completed or not." See, also, President, etc., of Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 263; U. S. v. Robeson, 9 Pet.

328, 9 L. Ed. 142; Wolf v. Michaelis, 27 Ill. App. 337; De Mattos v. Jordan (Wash.) 46 Pac. 403. In the latter case the action was upon the bond of a contractor, and is in many respects similar to the case at bar. The clause in the contract was: "The expense incurred by the owner as herein provided either for furnishing materials or finishing the work shall be audited and certified by the architect, and his certificate thereof shall be conclusive upon the parties." In the opinion it is said: "We deem it proper to observe that appellant can, under the terms of the contract, only recover such of the expenses incurred by him for furnishing materials or finishing the work as shall have been audited and certified by the architect. * * * The purpose of this provision was to protect the sureties against excessive and unjust charges for work and material, and it was agreed that the certificate of the architect should be conclusive as to the amount of expenses incurred by the owner." This court has held that, where a contract provides for the payment of such sum as may be determined by arbitrators, the submission to arbitrators and procuring an award is a condition precedent to recovery. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, 38 Am. Rep. 54; Scammon v. Denio, 72 Cal. 395, 14 Pac. 98. It is said by respondent that the rule does not apply to the present case, for the reason that the contractor repudiated the contract by abandoning it, and giving notice to the owner, and for the reason that the owner of the premises discharged the architects. The abandonment of the contract by the builder and contractor would not impair the clause as to procuring a certificate from the architects. If the contractor had not failed to perform his duty, and abandoned the contract, there would never have been any expense incurred by the owner, and no necessity for procuring the certificate. The sureties never repudiated the contract, nor waived any condition therein. The condition was inserted in order to provide a method of arriving at the damage to the owner in case the contractor abandoned or failed to perform his contract. When the contractor abandoned the contract, and the owner completed the building, the very contingency arose for which provision was made as to procuring the certificate. The contractor could not repudiate this provision of the contract as to the sureties, no matter what effect his repudiation might have upon himself. Neither does the finding of the court that the owner discharged the architects relieve plaintiff of the condition in the contract. The finding states that the owner discharged the architects on the ground that they were careless, incompetent, and dishonest; but there is no finding that such grounds were true. Even if they were true, there would have to be some allegation or finding showing a good and sufficient excuse for not having the amount audited and certified by the architects. If the architects had refused to act in the matter, or if they had acted, but acted fraudulently, or corruptly, or through mistake, the plaintiff could have alleged and proven such excuse, and thus relieved himself of the condition. It follows that the judgment should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SMITH, C.

STREET RAILROADS—COLLISION WITH VEHICLE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Defendant's electric car collided with the rear end of a heavy truck drawn by a four-horse team, causing the leaders of the team to run away against the plaintiff. The conductor, who was called as plaintiff's witness, testified that the track was dry, and that a reversed current could have stopped the car in 30 feet. The result of the collision, which occurred while the car was coming down grade at a speed of more than six miles per hour, demonstrated that the motorman, who was inexperienced, did not slacken the speed, and that the cars were pushed more than 60 feet, half of that distance being on level ground. The driver of the wagon testified that no signal was given of the approach of the car, as stated by the conductor and motorman. Held sufficient to sustain a verdict that the motorman's negligence contributed directly to plaintiff's injury.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by John Horgan against Hugh P. Jones and another, as partners, and the Market Street Railway Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant company appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. L. Barnes, for appellant. Peri E. Allen and M. B. Kellogg, for defendants Jones and others. Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. On the 11th of January, A. D. 1897, the corporate defendant the railway company owned and was operating a street railway on Page street, in San Francisco, between Broderick and Devisadero streets. On this block the street is 68 feet 9 inches wide, and the sidewalks 12 feet each. From the curb on the southerly side to the nearest rail is 11 feet and 4 inches. The grade from Broderick street to Devisadero street is 12.12 per cent. descending. At about 3 o'clock p. m. of that day an electric car was descending from Broderick on the southerly track easterly towards Devisadero street. A four-horse team, hauling a heavy, but unloaded, truck, was descending on the southerly side of the street, having its northerly wheels very near, but not on, the track. It was in advance of the car, but how far when the car left Broderick street the evidence does not show. When the car was about half way to Devisadero, the conductor of the car thought the truck was about 50 feet ahead. From street to street the block is 412½ feet. The truck was so situated that it must have been obvious to the motorman that the car could not pass without a collision. A collision did occur, which resulted in a serious injury to plaintiff. The suit is against the owner of the street railway; Lidstrom, the motorman; and against Jones and King, owners of the truck, and Norman, the driver of the truck. The action is so brought upon the theory that the negligence of all contributed to the injury. The leaders of the team ran down the street and against plaintiff. At the trial the appellants admitted all the facts necessary to establish the case for the plaintiff, except negligence on the part of such defendants. Of course, it does not matter how negligent the driver of the truck may have been, if there was proof to sustain the verdict to the effect that the motorman was also guilty of negligence which contributed directly to the injury. In other words, there is no purpose in the inquiry as to whether the driver of the truck was guilty of mere contributory negligence, such as would have prevented him from recovering damages for personal injuries against the railway company. The real contention of the appellants is that the injury resulted solely from the negligence of the driver of the truck, and that the motorman was not negligent.

The plaintiff, to make out his case, called the defendant Norman, who drove the truck, and the conductor, McCormick. Each of these, in some important respects, made confused or contradictory statements. Mr. McCormick, the conductor, stated that about one-half way down the block he went forward to turn the switch into Devisadero street, and discovered the truck on the right-hand side, so close that the car could not pass. The motorman rang his bell, and put on the brakes, and when within about 25 feet reversed the current. Still the collision occurred, and the leaders on the team broke loose, and ran down Page street. "After the car struck the wheel, it went forward about twenty feet before coming to an actual standstill,—right down to the level there. * * * A car traveling at the usual rate of speed on the grade could be brought to a standstill by applying the brakes and reversing the current in about fifty feet or so, I should judge. * * * When I first observed the wagon, I should judge it was probably twenty or thirty feet from the car,—about twenty feet ahead of the car when I first observed it. The car was then about the middle of the block. When I first observed the lumber wagon, it was about twenty feet ahead of the car. I cannot say at what rate of speed the car was coming down the grade, but it was a slow rate of speed. It was coming down at the usual rate for that grade. * * * I noticed the motorman apply the brake and reverse the current when the car was about twenty-five or thirty feet from the lumber wagon. After the car struck the wheel, the car went about twenty feet down to the level there. He stopped the car at Devisadero street. The collision occurred on Page street, about twenty-five feet from the corner. The car stopped on Devisadero street. After striking the wheel, the front of the car went about twenty feet before it came to a full stop. It came to a standstill about the middle of Devisadero street. My best recollection is we stopped right on Devisadero street, and the front of the car was about in the middle of Devisadero street." On cross-examination the witness testified that the car went slowly down the hill, under the brakes, all the way, and he knew the bell was rung. He said: "I judge the rear end of the truck was about fifty feet or more from the front of the car when he rang the bell for the wagon. He rang quite a while. I cannot say how many times he rang the bell. And he applied the brakes and the current also, and he had to stop ringing the bell first. I was looking at the man driving the team, and at no time, as near as I could judge, did the driver pay any attention to him whatever. I did not see him turn. He kept on going on the right-hand side of the car. He did not seem to pay any attention to the bell, if he heard it. That I don't know. I know the bell was rung. * * * I should judge the car was going down the grade about two miles an hour, probably more. * * * There are no other means provided for checking the speed of the car except the brake and reversing the current. I saw him use both of these." Here the witness repeats three times over that the wagon was about 50 feet ahead of the car when he first saw it, about half way down the grade, and the bell was then ringing. Also that he saw the motorman reverse the current, and release the brakes, when about 25 feet from the wagon. The track was dry on that day, and a reversed current might have stopped the car in 30 feet. Again, he said the driver did not seem to hear the bell; acted as though he did not hear it. The witness did not hear the noise of the wagon. The car made no particular noise. The motorman did all he could to stop the car. The motorman had never been on a car with him before. Did not know he was a green hand. Knew that he had been longer than a week in the employ of the company. Upon being recalled he stated, among other matters: "When I first went to the front the car was, maybe, one hundred feet from the wagon, and he was ringing the bell then. I should judge he rang it all of the way down to within thirty feet of the wagon. He rang the bell a distance probably of seventy feet." The witness was preparing to step out to turn the switch when the collision occurred. The switch is about 20 feet from Devisadero street, and the grade is as heavy there as upon any part of the hill. The car generally stops without reversing the current, so that, had there been no danger of a collision, the motorman should have been prepared for a stop. The result demonstrated that there was no unusual slackening of the car, but the contrary. Instead of making the usual stop, it carried the heavy truck, overcoming the resistance of the horses as well, more than 30 feet over the level ground on Devisadero street. Instead of carrying the wagon 20 feet, as stated by McCormick, it must have gone more than 60 feet, and was only stopped after leaving the grade. The jury were justified in believing—as I certainly do—from the evidence that the car was not slackened at all by the attempt to reverse the current, but, to the contrary, that the motorman lost control of the car, and it was precipitated, unchecked by any brakes, upon the truck. In other words, there was gross negligence, or utter incapacity,—probably the latter,—on the part of the motorman. Norman, the truck driver, testified that his horses were walking at the rate of from three to four miles per hour. The conductor saw the wagon when the car was about one-half way down the hill, at which time he says the wagon was about fifty feet ahead, and the collision occurred about 25 feet above Devisadero. The speed must have been sufficient to overtake the wagon while the latter was going 130 feet, more than 6 miles per hour. Norman and Zoberbier, the only other witness, agree that the collision occurred when the wagon was about two-thirds of the way down the hill. If this be true, the wagon must have been pushed more than 100 feet, and the speed must have been much greater than 6 miles per hour. Norman also testified most positively that the bell was not rung at all; that he would surely have heard it if it had been rung, and could easily have avoided the collision had he been notified of the approach of the car in the usual mode. The preponderance of evidence is decidedly in favor of the proposition that the bell was rung, but surely there was evidence before the jury which they were at liberty to adopt to the effect that it was not. On the whole, it seems clear that the verdict and judgment against the appellants are fully sustained by the evidence.

The owners of the truck and the driver have not appealed, and, if it be admitted that Norman was also guilty of negligence, such admission would not affect the case of the appellants. We need not discuss, therefore, the question as to how the failure of the truck driver to look back or to listen would affect his rights as against the railway company. That the position of the truck and the conduct of the driver could affect the liability of the appellants is urged upon the proposition that the motorman had a right to assume that the driver would get out of the way, and not obstruct the track. It is evident from the testimony of the conductor that before the motorman attempted to reverse the current the driver was not heeding the signals, if made, and, as already stated, the jury were warranted in finding that when the motorman attempted to reverse the current, through his incompetence he failed to do so, but merely loosened the brakes, and let the unchecked car loose upon the wagon.

Appellants complain of the modification of an instruction asked by them. The modification did not, in a respect material in this case, change the meaning of the instruction. The instruction as given was fully as favorable to appellants as they were entitled to have given. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. YOUNG. (Cr. 631.)

HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARACTER OF DECEASED.

A charge on a murder trial that evidence of the character of deceased, tending to show that he was a violent, quarrelsome, and dangerous man, was not admitted as tending "in any way" to justify his slaying by accused, was not improper when qualified by the rest of the instruction, to the effect that the evidence of bad character was to be considered only as a circumstance illustrating the facts of the homicide, and indicating the aggressor and the nature of the aggression.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; J. M. Mannon, Judge.

G. G. Young was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur J. Thatcher and L. J. Maddux, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged with murder, and appeals from a judgment convicting him of manslaughter and from an order denying him a new trial.

It appears that on the 20th day of July, 1899, at 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the defendant and Caleb Greenwood, with several other persons, were in the saloon of Charles Lockhart, near Monroe post office, in Mendocino county. Greenwood and defendant being both under the influence of liquor, they were soon engaged in a war of words, which concluded with Greenwood committing a violent, brutal, and unjustifiable assault on Young, in which Young was thrown down on the floor at least twice. He was kicked and badly wounded in the face, the clothes were torn from his body, and he was otherwise maltreated by Greenwood. This brutality finally ended, without any interference on the part of the bystanders, and Young retired to a rear room, reclothed himself, returned, treated all hands, including Greenwood, and left the saloon. About two hours later Young reappeared at the saloon with a Winchester rifle in his hands, and inquired for Greenwood. He remained on and about the premises for about half an hour, and during that time he took a drink with a friend, and asserted that he was a bad man, and would not be walked on, talked about shooting the bottles off the bar, wanted to find Greenwood, and said, "I'll fix him; I'll allow no man to stamp me in the floor." Soon after all this, and about 2½ hours after the assault on him by Greenwood, the defendant went out at the front door of the saloon, with his gun still in his hands, intending, as he testified, to go to the pump at the rear of the saloon to wash the blood off his face. When the defendant was near the rear end of the saloon, he saw Greenwood at the rear door thereof, and shot him twice, from the effects of which Greenwood died on the following day. The defendant testified that immediately before the shooting Greenwood straightened up, and slapped his left hand on his hip pocket, and said, "I am heeled, you son of a bitch." Defendant also testified that before the trouble with Greenwood, and on that same day, he saw the handle of a pistol in Greenwood's pocket. An apparently disinterested eyewitness testified that at the time of the shooting Greenwood was standing with one foot on the step, with his hand on the door, and the right hand by his side, and made no hostile movement, and, when Young came around, Greenwood said, "Don't shoot me, Gib." Another witness, who heard the shooting, and went to Greenwood where he fell, and stayed with him till he was removed, testified that he searched Greenwood, and found no weapon on him. There was no evidence except defendant's testimony tending to show that Greenwood was armed at the time of the shooting. It was shown without conflict in the evidence that Greenwood's reputation in the neighborhood for peace and quietude was bad, and that defendant was well acquainted with that fact.

The only reasons urged for a reversal on this appeal are that the court erred in refusing defendant's offered instruction No. 7, and in giving the instruction No. 12 requested by the prosecution. Said refused instruction reads as follows: "Evidence has been offered as to the character of deceased, Greenwood, for peace and quiet. I charge you that, in case of doubt as to who was the aggressor, the previous character of the deceased for peace and quiet is an important element to be considered by the jury. If you believe from the evidence that the deceased was a quarrelsome and dangerous man, and had the reputation of being a dangerous and quarrelsome man in the community in which he lived, you have the right to take these things into consideration in determining as to the danger the defendant, Young, was in when he fired the fatal shot." The instruction given is as follows: "Evidence has been introduced before you of the character of the deceased, and tending to show that he was a violent, quarrelsome, and dangerous man. This was not admitted as tending in any way to justify his slaying by the defendant. A party has no more right to slay a bad man than a good one. Both are equally protected under the law. The unwarranted slaying of either is equally a crime. The evidence of bad character is to be considered by the jury only as a circumstance illustrating the facts of the homicide, and indicating the aggressor and the nature of the aggression; it being more probable that a man of violent and dangerous character would make an unprovoked and deadly assault than that a quiet and peaceable man would do so." There is no valid objection to the instruction given. The words, "This was not admitted as tending in any way to justify his slaying by the defendant," when read with and qualified by the rest of the instruction, are not improper; and the instruction, thus read, correctly enunciates a principle of the law of evidence applicable to the case in hand. The instruction given substantially covers every proposition contained in the refused instruction, and is as favorable to the defendant as he could reasonably ask. In addition to this, the court also instructed the jury fully as to the law of self-defense as it applied to the case. For the reasons given, there was not any error in refusing the one or in giving the other of the instructions quoted. The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re ADAMS' ESTATE. (Sac. 715.)

EXECUTORS—ACCOUNTING—ANNUAL SETTLEMENTS—FINAL ACCOUNT—CREDITS—INDIVIDUAL TRANSACTIONS—FINDINGS—APPEAL.

1. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1622, 1636, require an executor to render accounts showing amounts received and expended and the amount of claims presented, and that notice be given of final accounting, and that all claims not passed in former accounts may be contested by heirs for cause shown. Held, that an executrix who filed and had settled annual accounts from 1890 to 1897 on final accounting might present, and have allowed, a claim for machinery rented to the estate for the years 1890 to 1893; such claim not having been passed on, and an opportunity being given to contest its allowance.

2. A finding by the court that a claim by an executrix for attorney's fees was reasonable will not be interfered with on appeal except for a plain abuse of discretion.

3. Where an executrix sold property of the estate and also property of her own, taking the purchaser's notes and afterwards crediting a partial payment on her own note, on the purchaser becoming insolvent and returning the property the executrix was not entitled to transfer all the property to the estate, crediting her note with what she deemed the value of her property, and to charge the estate with the balance due her, though the purchaser was the lessee of the realty of the estate, and used the property thereon, and after its return it was sold, and the estate received the proceeds.

4. Findings filed in contesting an accounting by an executrix may be considered on appeal, though it is not necessary to have findings made in such case.

5. A decree allowing an account by an executrix, erroneous as to some of the items, may be corrected on appeal, and so affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; E. E. Gadis, Judge.

Accounting by Elizabeth Adams, as executrix of D. Q. Adams, deceased. From a decree allowing the account, the Bank of Woodland, a creditor, appeals. Corrected and affirmed.

Mr. Craig, Mr. Hawkins, and Thos. B. Bond, for appellant. R. L. Simpson and Hurst & Hurst, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Elizabeth Adams, the executrix of the will of deceased, filed her final account, asking for its settlement and allowance. The Bank of Woodland, a creditor of said estate, filed a written contest as to certain items of the account. Findings were filed, and a decree entered allowing the account and the contested items. This appeal is from the decree and an order denying a new trial.

It is claimed that the court erred in allowing the executrix the item of $4,295 for the use of her steam engine and harvester for the years 1890 to 1893. The main argument urged in support of this contention is that the executrix filed and had settled her annual accounts from 1890 to 1897, and during this time rendered four such accounts; and, for the reason that in those accounts no charge is made for the use of the steam engine and harvester, she should now be estopped and precluded by the decrees settling said accounts. The accounts, as so settled, made no mention of the items in dispute, and the question is as to whether in such case the executrix can charge such item in her final account. We think the settlement of the annual accounts were conclusive only as to such matters as were actually included therein, and directly passed upon by the court. It is provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1622 et seq., that six months after his appointment, and at any time when required by the court of its own motion, or upon the application of any person interested in the estate, the executor or administrator must render, for the information of the court, an exhibit, under oath, showing the amount of money received and expended by him, the amount of all claims presented against the estate, and the names of the claimants, and all other matters necessary to show the condition of its affairs. Any person interested may appear, and by objections in writing contest any account or statement therein. Within 30 days after the expiration of the time mentioned in the notice to creditors the executor or administrator must render a "full account and report of his administration." This account must exhibit all debts which have been presented and allowed during the period embraced in the account. If the account be for a final settlement, the notice of settlement must state such fact. On the day appointed for settlement any person interested in the estate may appear and file his exceptions, in writing, to the account, and contest the same. It is then provided by section 1636: "All matters, including allowed claims not passed upon on the settlement of any former account, or on rendering an exhibit, or on making a decree of sale, may be contested by the heirs for cause shown." This item was a matter not passed upon on the settlement of any former account, and the contestant had its day in court, and was allowed to and did contest the charge. It could not have contested the item in any former account, because no former account contained it. No matter what was contained in former accounts, the item in dispute here has been only once in any account, and, when so in, the contestant filed his objection in writing, produced its witnesses, and was given a hearing. Section 235 of the probate act of 1861 contained the same language herein quoted from Code Civ. Proc. § 1636. In Walls v. Walker, 37 Cal. 424, it was held that an annual account of an executor or administrator is not conclusive, except as to such items as are included in it, and actually passed upon by the probate court. In the opinion it is said: "The fact that the heirs, legatees, and creditors are thus expressly permitted to contest matters not included and passed upon in any former account necessarily implies that the administrator is not precluded from going behind a former account, and bringing forward charges which, through inadvertence or oversight, may have been omitted." Mr. Woerner, in the second edition of his work on the American Law of Administration (page 1126, § 504), says: "But, even where the accounting or settlement is conclusive as to the matters adjudicated, it cannot be conclusive as to matters omitted from the account, which may, therefore, be surcharged in subsequent settlements." The text refers to and is supported by McLellan's Appeal, 76 Pa. St. 235; Saxton v. Chamberlain, 6 Pick. 422, 425; Blake v. Pegram, 109 Mass. 541, 551.

It is further claimed that the item should not be allowed for the reason that the executrix agreed at the time of the settlement of her third annual account that, if contestant would consent to the allowance of said account as rendered, she would make no charge for the engine and harvester. It is sufficient to say that there was a conflict of evidence as to whether or not any such agreement was made, and the finding of the court is in favor of the executrix upon the proposition. The executrix testified that she made no such agreement. As to the suggestion that the executrix incurred loss to the estate by the farming operations for which the charge is made, there appears to be no evidence or finding upon the point. If it had been alleged, and found upon evidence, that the item was incurred in carrying on farming operations by the executrix of her own volition, and that such farming resulted in loss to the estate equal to the amount of the charge, the court no doubt would not have allowed it.

The account contained a charge of $800 paid as attorney's fees to one Hopkins for services in behalf of the estate as assistant counsel. The court found "that the services for which the sum of $800 were paid were properly rendered for and on behalf of said estate, and said sum is the reasonable value of said services, and that the same is a proper charge against said estate." There is evidence sufficient to support this finding. The court below had the right to determine what services were rendered, and the reasonable value thereof. The order of the lower court as to attorney's fees will not be interfered with, except in case of a plain abuse of discretion. Freese v. Pennie, 110 Cal. 470, 42 Pac. 978.

The account charged the estate with the following: "Balance on note of $7,111.11 due Elizabeth Adams from J. R. Williams, Sept. 1st, 1892, for which she received from Williams property of the value of $5,000 (steam engine and harvester), and estate received from Williams property of the value of $2,111.11, the same being still due from the estate and unpaid, $2,111.11." The court erred in allowing this item. The evidence shows that in the year 1890 the executrix leased the lands of the estate to one Williams for the term of five years. Williams bought of the executrix a large amount of personal property of the estate, for which he gave two notes, one for $9,700, and another for $1,826. He also bought the steam engine and harvester, giving the executrix his note for the purchase price, $6,500. On September 1, 1892, Williams owed the estate on the two notes, with interest, $13,434.73, and the executrix on the note and interest for the engine and harvester $7,111.11. Williams had paid the executrix $690.20 prior to September 1st, which she had applied on her own $6,500 note. Williams, at the last-named date, was insolvent, and transferred all the property he had bought of the estate, with some other property, to the executrix for the estate. He also transferred the engine and harvester to the executrix in her own right. In other words, the estate took back from Williams its property, and the executrix, in her own right, took back the engine and harvester. The executrix received on her note of $6,500 the $690.20, credited the note with $5,000, the amount she deemed to be the value of the engine and harvester when returned to her, and seeks to charge the estate with the balance due on the note, $2,111.11. There is nothing in this record to justify any theory upon which the estate could be held for the balance of Williams' debt to the executrix. The estate claimed no interest in the transaction. It was not the guarantor of the debt of Williams to the executrix. The property returned to the estate was for the benefit of the estate. If the entire amount of property returned was sold for sufficient to pay the notes in full due by Williams to the estate, and the note due the executrix in her own right, and the account clearly showed this, a different question would be presented. But what right had the executrix to take back her own property, fix her own appraisal upon it, credit her note with the amount so fixed, and charge the estate with the balance? She has charged the estate with $4,295 for the use of this property so returned to her, she received the $690.20 from Williams, and she now seeks to charge the amount of the face of the note, less her own value placed upon the engine and harvester. In selling the property of the estate to Williams and in taking it back the executrix acted without any order of court. Williams, it is claimed, was insolvent as to the estate, but it is sought to have the estate make him solvent as to the executrix. There was not any separate account kept of the property so returned to the estate, and it cannot be said that the estate ever received even the face value of its notes given by Williams. The executrix testified: "The property received from Williams on this settlement has all been received by the estate. Most of it has been sold, the funds derived from the sales paid into the estate, and the accounts show it. Of course, a large amount of this property was used for the estate, and some of it worn out on the lands of the estate." When findings are filed in a contest of this kind, they may be considered for the purpose of determining the issues upon which such findings are made. Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 613, 35 Pac. 345, 639. But it is not necessary to have findings in such case. In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. 455, 41 Pac. 483, 42 Pac. 479. When the decree allowing a final account is found to be erroneous as to an item or items, this court may direct the decree to be corrected, and, as corrected, affirm it. In re Parsons' Estate, 65 Cal. 240, 3 Pac. 817. The court below is directed to correct the decree as to the item of $2,111.11 in accordance with this opinion, and, as so modified and corrected, it is affirmed, with costs to appellant.

JOOST v. CRAIG et al. (S. F. 1,592.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1901.)

NOTARIES PUBLIC—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—NEG-LIGENCE—IDENTITY OF AFFIANT—CON-
TRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. Under Pol. Code, § 801, providing that a notary public and the sureties on his bond are liable to a party injured for all damages sustained by the misconduct or neglect of the notary, a notary does not act judicially in taking an acknowledgment, and is liable for negligence.

2. In an action against a notary for negligence in taking an acknowledgment, in certifying that the person appearing before him was the person described in the deed, a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, implied that plaintiff's case as to the negligence of the notary was made out.

3. Where a notary, in acknowledging a deed, certified that the person appearing before him was known to him to be the person described in the deed, there was no negligence in the grantee in relying on such certificate.

4. Under Civ. Code, §§ 1185, 1189, providing that an acknowledgment of an instrument should not be taken unless the officer taking it knows, or has the oath of a credible witness, whose name must be stated, that the person making the acknowledgment is the person described in the instrument, a notary public not obeying the statute is liable for damages to any one injured by relying on the certificate of acknowledgment.

5. Where a notary, in acknowledging a deed, certified that he knew the person to be A., "and the person described in the deed," and in an action against the notary by the grantee it was shown that the person described in the deed did not execute it, the notary was not entitled to have a motion for nonsuit granted on the ground that it did not appear that some person known to the notary by the name of A. did not appear and make the acknowledgment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Edward A. Belcher, Judge.

Action by Behrend Joost against Lee D. Craig and others. From a judgment in defendants' favor, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for appellant. Denson, Oatman & Denson and W. T. Baggett, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action against a notary public and his sureties for damages charged to have resulted from the negligence of the notary. As appears from the record, in April, 1891, one Fisher, who was a real-estate broker in San Francisco, as such broker offered to sell to plaintiff 10 lots of land situate in San Mateo county, then standing in the name of Charles A. Anderson. The lots were part of the Abbey Homestead Association's lands. Plaintiff was familiar with these lands, and had bought a portion of them. He contracted with Fisher at once for the property, agreeing to pay $1,000 for it, conditioned, as usual, upon the title. He had an abstract made, and, finding that the title of Anderson was good, informed the broker that he would pay whenever he received a deed from Anderson properly executed. A deed was produced, apparently executed by Charles A. Anderson, and acknowledged before the defendant notary, and certified by him as follows: "On this 27th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, before me, Lee D. Craig, a notary public in and for said city and county, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared Charles A. Anderson, known to me to be the person described in, whose name is subscribed to, who executed, the within and annexed instrument, and he duly acknowledged to me that he executed the same," etc. In the body of the deed the grantor is described as "Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City, county of San Mateo, state of California." It turned out that the deed was a forgery, and was not executed or acknowledged by Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City, or by any person known by that name, but the name of Charles A. Anderson was written by one Frank C. Koen. Plaintiff accepted the deed and paid his money, relying solely upon the certificate of the notary. The lots were of the market value of $1,000. The plaintiff, through his reliance upon the certificate, paid the said sum of $1,000, which was thereby lost.

It is provided in section 801 of the Political Code that, "for the official misconduct or neglect of a notary public, he and the sureties on his official bond are liable to the parties injured thereby for all the damages sustained." This statute sets at rest one of the contentions of respondent that in making an acknowledgment a notary acts judicially, and is therefore not liable in damages for mere negligence.

At the trial the court, on motion of defendants, granted a nonsuit, on the ground "that it appears from the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of such negligence as to put it beyond his power to recover anything from defendants." This ground implies that in other respects the case for plaintiff was made out. There could not be contributory negligence unless there was first negligence to which it contributed. There was no evidence which tended to show negligence on the part of the plaintiff, except that when the deed, apparently executed by Anderson, acknowledged before the defendant notary, and certified as above set out, was delivered to him by Fisher, he paid over the money to Fisher without further inquiry as to the identity of the grantor. This was not negligence on the part of plaintiff. He had a right to rely upon the certificate of the notary, and to presume without question that such officer had done his duty. No circumstance was brought to his attention which could raise a suspicion to the contrary. There was nothing which could have put the most prudent man upon inquiry. And the notary cannot excuse his negligence, under such circumstances, by the claim that the party who has been injured has trusted to his faithful performance of duty. The whole theory that the record of such instruments gives constructive notice of the contents of recorded instruments is founded upon the proposition that upon proper investigation the genuineness of such instruments has been determined. The certificate is also received as evidence in a trial in a court of law that the deed is genuine. If the deed is not genuine, but is forged, the notary and his sureties ought to be held for all damages, unless they have taken the precautions expressly required by the statute. The legislature has taken great care, though, considering the importance of the matter, not too great, to make this certificate reliable. Section 1185 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "The acknowledgment of an instrument must not be taken unless the officer taking it knows, or has satisfactory evidence, on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness, that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual who is described in and who executed the instrument; or, if executed by a corporation, that the person making such acknowledgment is the president or secretary of such corporation." The notary is expressly forbidden to take the acknowledgment unless he knows that the person making the acknowledgment is the person described in the instrument. Here such person was described as Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City. If he did not know this, it should have been proven by the oath of a credible witness, whose name must be stated. Section 1189, Id. It is not enough that the person be introduced to the notary by a responsible person. If that were enough, there would be no purpose in requiring the oath; for such person could always furnish the introduction. This point has been often decided, although sufficiently obvious from the statute. To take an acknowledgment upon such introduction, without the oath, is negligence sufficient to render the notary liable in case the certificate turns out to be untrue.

The matter was considered in Jones v. Bach, 48 Barb. 568. It is there said: "The object of all these well-considered provisions, relative to the proof and recording of conveyances of real estate, was to protect owners of property and their creditors against forgery, as well as to secure the rights of grantees and mortgagees against spurious and fraudulent conveyances. Would this object be effected by the manner in which the acknowledgment in this case was made? Any one could be falsely personated without check or liability to punishment for crime, if a mere introduction at the moment shall authorize the officer to take the acknowledgment. The person who introduces, if the statement be false, only commits a falsehood; but, if he is sworn as to the truth of his statement, should it be knowingly false, he is guilty of perjury, and liable to a prosecution for a felony." The statute of New York there considered was not as clear on this proposition as ours. It did not expressly require the oath, but only "satisfactory evidence." But, even under that language, it was held that a mere introduction is not enough. The certificate here gave assurance that the notary knew of his own knowledge, and not upon mere hearsay, that the grantor was Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City. If this certificate was not true, the notary should be held. The same matter was discussed in State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413. The court makes some suggestions as to what degree of acquaintance will authorize the notary to certify that he has personal knowledge, and also upon the proposition that an introduction, even by a responsible person, could not be relied upon, and says: "It is obvious that, when an officer taking an acknowledgment and making a certificate assumes any such fact, he does it at his own risk. The law warns him, when he has not 'personal knowledge' of his own, to resort to certain observances which the law supposes to be sufficient in practice to prevent imposition. * * * But such a certificate is infinitely less liable to deceive or mislead than a declaration that the party making the acknowledgment is well known to the officer making the certificate. It puts all persons upon inquiry, and furnishes a clue for conducting it, and it complies with the law." This makes the certificate upon personal knowledge a guaranty of the genuineness of the instrument, and the court adds: "It is perfectly idle for him to protest that he did not know or suspect that his certificate was false. That may be taken for granted, but it is nothing to the purpose. His business was to know that it was true." A notary may take all due precautions, and fully comply with the statute, and still be deceived. In such case he would not be held liable, but, if he has not fully complied with the statute, the rule announced above is not a whit too stringent. This case was followed and commented upon in State v. Balmer, 77 Mo. App. 463.

It may be here remarked that the witness by whose oath the execution of an instrument is proven, when the person executing the instrument was not previously known to the officer, must himself be known to the notary. This is implied by the requirement that the officer shall certify that such person is a credible witness. When these necessary facts do not exist, the notary is expressly prohibited from taking the acknowledgment at all. When the notary does not obey this statute, he should expect to be held liable; and, I wish to repeat, these requirements are of great importance to the business world, and not at all too exacting. Bank v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 455, 9 Pac. 843, is not in conflict with these views. Murfey took the acknowledgment to a deed of one who personated the true owner, and signed his name to the instrument. The deed did not run to the impostor by his true name, but was taken by him to the president of the bank, and an application was made for a loan. The impostor then assumed the name of the fictitious grantee named in the forged deed. The president of the bank, after getting an abstract of the title, caused a note and mortgage to be prepared, and they were signed by the impostor in the bank, and were there acknowledged before a bank clerk, who was a notary. This acknowledgment was taken and certified by the employé of the bank, by the express direction of the bank president, who made the loan for the bank. The present case would have resembled that had Joost taken the impostor to the notary, and requested him to acknowledge and certify to the execution of the deed, upon the mere introduction to him by Joost. Such introduction would not have justified the officer, or have constituted a defense to a suit by a grantee of Joost; but, by the rule announced in that case, Joost would, under the circumstances supposed, have been guilty of contributory negligence. There is no ground for such a contention here. Fisher, a real-estate broker, knowing that Joost was desirous of purchasing land in the "Homestead Tract," informed him of the opportunity, and upon being furnished the deed certified by Craig, as notary, he paid his money. Even had Fisher been the agent of Joost, there is nothing to show that he had any reason to doubt the truthfulness of the certificate. It does not appear, as it did in the Oakland Case, that Fisher knew that the certificate falsely stated that the officer knew that the person making the acknowledgment was the person described in the instrument. Had this statement in the certificate been true, there could have been no imposition.

It is argued that the judgment of nonsuit should be affirmed, because it was not proven that some person known to the notary as Charles A. Anderson did not appear before the notary and make the acknowledgment. Had such been the fact, it would not have been enough. The person might be known to him as Charles A. Anderson, though introduced to him. The certificate states, in effect, that the notary knew him to be Charles A. Anderson, and the person described in the instrument, to wit, Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City.

The nonsuit was expressly granted because of supposed negligence on the part of Joost. As already stated, this implies that the court was satisfied that the certificate was false, and there was some evidence tending to establish such fact. It was shown that Charles A. Anderson, of Redwood City, did not execute the deed, and did not appear before the notary, and the signature was forged by Keon, who had and exhibited the deed before the acknowledgment was made. Keon furnished the deed to Fisher, and received the money. This was a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant notary, and which, in the nature of things, it would be difficult for plaintiff to prove. Under such circumstances, slight evidence is sufficient to shift the burden of proof. People v. Lundin, 120 Cal. 308, 52 Pac. 807. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PEOPLE v. JOHNSON. (Cr. 626.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1901.)
CRIMINAL LAW—INTENT TO COMMIT RAPE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—WIT-NESSES—IMPEACHMENT.

1. Defendant enticed a girl aged 12 years into his room, unbuttoned her clothes, put her on the bed, unbuttoned his own clothes, exposing his private parts, and touched and fondled the private parts of the girl. He tried to have intercourse with her, but did not, because of her refusal. Held, that a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to commit rape was justified, since, she being under 16 years of age and incapable of consenting, if he had in fact had sexual intercourse with her it would have been rape, and the intent with which he committed the assault must be supposed to be such as would ordinarily accompany such acts.

2. The court refused defendant's request to charge that, in order to find him guilty of an assault with intent to commit rape, the assault must have been made with the intent to perpetrate the crime of rape at all events, and if he voluntarily abandoned the attempt, if any there was, they must find him not guilty. Held, that the request was correctly refused, as the crime was complete when the assault was made with the intent to rape, and defendant could not purge himself of the crime he had committed by ceasing to continue the attempt.

3. On trial of defendant for assault with intent to commit rape, the fact that the district attorney was permitted to read certain questions and answers to two little girls, while on the witness stand, from their testimony given on the preliminary examination of the defendant before the magistrate, over defendant's objection that the prosecution was trying to impeach their own witnesses, was not prejudicial error, since the girls were the only material witnesses against him, and he would have been benefited by any weakening of their testimony.

Temple, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Charles Nells Johnson was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

John S. Partridge, for appellant. Tiley L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, C. The defendant was charged in the information of the crime of an assault with intent to commit rape, and upon trial was convicted. He appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is contended that the evidence fails to show that defendant made the assault with the intent to commit rape, but that his intention was to gratify an unnatural desire, which is not a crime under the statute. The evidence shows that the defendant enticed two little girls (one aged 12 years, the age of the other not appearing in the record) into his room, unbuttoned the clothes of the 12 year old girl, put her on the bed, unbuttoned his own clothes, and exposed his private parts, and touched and fondled the private parts of the little girl in a manner too shocking and disgusting to be repeated in an opinion of this court. The child upon whom the defendant performed in the unnatural and disgusting manner before stated testified that defendant did not try to enter or touch her person with his private parts, but could have done so; that he wanted to have intercourse with her, but did not. The other little girl testified to substantially the same thing, and in addition stated that defendant wanted to and tried to have sexual intercourse with the 12 year old girl who had submitted to his unnatural and disgusting desires, but that she would not let him. This is the substance of the testimony, and we think the jury were justified in finding the intention of the defendant to be as alleged in the information. The defendant assaulted the child. Being under 16 years of age, she was incapable of consenting, and therefore the assault was in law without her consent. If he had in fact had sexual intercourse with her, he would have been guilty of rape. As he did not have sexual intercourse with her, but did assault her, the question as to his intent was to be determined by all the circumstances and by the acts of defendant. The facts that defendant unbuttoned his trousers, that he took out his private parts, that he wanted to have sexual intercourse, but the child refused, were sufficient to justify the jury in drawing the logical, rational conclusion that defendant's object was to have sexual intercourse with the child. Whether he desisted because he had satisfied his morbid, depraved passions in the manner described in the evidence, or because he was afraid of an outcry from the child, or because of his impotence, are all matters of conjecture. We do not think the crime charged against this defendant, and of which he was convicted, is of such a nature that we should attempt to shield him upon imaginary reasons, or upon a theory that might possibly account for his acts as being done with the intent only to gratify an unnatural desire. We must suppose that his acts were done with the purpose and desire that would ordinarily characterize the acts of an individual of the male sex when such acts were done with one of the female sex. That a man would entice a little girl into his room, lock the door, put her on the bed, undress her, and fondle her for the purpose of gratifying an unnatural desire, and not for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, is possible, but not at all probable. The intent of a person cannot be proven by direct and positive evidence. It is a question of fact, to be proven, like any other fact, by acts, conduct, and circumstances. People v. Landman, 103 Cal. 581, 37 Pac. 518. It was the peculiar province of the jury to find the intent. People v. Swalm, 80 Cal. 49, 22 Pac. 67. If the facts proven were such that the jury might reasonably infer the intent to be as found by them, we would not be justified in disturbing the finding. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that the jury was not justified in finding the intent as alleged from the acts of defendant, and the circumstances under which they were committed.

2. It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction requested by defendant: "In order to find a defendant guilty of an assault with intent to commit rape, the assault must have been made with intent to perpetrate the crime of rape at all events. If you find that defendant voluntarily abandoned the attempt, if any there was, you must find him not guilty." We are not given the benefit of counsel's views as to why the refusal was error, and we think the court correctly refused the instruction. The instruction, with the exception of the latter sentence, is substantially given in other parts of the charge. We do not think the latter sentence states a correct proposition of law. If the defendant made an assault as charged in the information, with the intent to commit rape, the offense was complete. He could not afterwards purge himself of the crime he had committed by ceasing to continue the attempt. If he had not ceased from some cause or other, the crime of rape would have been committed. The statute has made the attempt a crime. If defendant made the attempt he is guilty of the crime as charged. We agree with the following portion of the opinion of the supreme court of Michigan, in People v. Courier, 70 Mich. 368, 44 N. W. 572: "In cases of this kind it is not necessary that it should be shown, as in rape, that the accused intended to gratify his passion at all events. If he intended to have sexual intercourse with the child, and took steps looking towards such intercourse, and laid hands upon her for that purpose, although he did not mean to use any force, or to complete his intent if it caused the child pain, and desisted from his attempt as soon as it hurt, he yet would be guilty of an assault with intent to commit the crime charged in the information." The contention of counsel for appellant is that, although defendant made the assault and attempted to commit rape upon the child, he is not guilty of assault with attempt because he of his own volition ceased the attempt. If the father of the child had approached defendant while engaged in the attempt, and defendant of his own volition ceased the attempt, he would not be guilty, if the requested instruction is law.

3. The district attorney was permitted, under defendant's objection, to read certain questions and answers to the little girls while on the witness stand, from their written testimony given on the preliminary examination of defendant before the magistrate. Defendant objected upon the sole ground that the prosecution was trying to impeach their own witnesses. The mere fact that the prosecution tried to impeach these witnesses could not have injured appellant, for they were the only material witnesses against him, and he would have been benefited by any weakening of their testimony. And it is not true that, as an absolute proposition of law, parties may not impeach their own witnesses. They may sometimes do so, and especially when they are honestly surprised at adverse testimony given by witnesses whom they themselves have called. The usual objection to a party asking his own witness if he had not made statements contrary to his testimony is that thereby hearsay evidence is presented to the jury. No such objection was made in the case at bar; but, if it had been, it would not have presented prejudicial error, even if error be conceded, for the former statements about which the girls were asked were substantially the same as their testimony at the trial. This disposes of all assignments of error argued by counsel. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

CADY v. PURSER et al. (Sac. 735.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1901.)

MORTGAGES—REGISTRATION—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—FORECLOSURE—ADVERSE TITLE—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

1. Subsequent purchasers are not chargeable with constructive notice of the contents of a recorded mortgage, under Civ. Code, § 1213, where it has not been transcribed into the proper book, though the mortgagor's title exists only by virtue of prescription.

2. The adverse title referred to in the principle that paramount and adverse titles are not proper subjects for adjudication in a suit to foreclose a mortgage is not limited to one which is adverse to the mortgagor's title, but includes a title that is adverse to that which the mortgagee brings before the court.

3. A purchaser at execution sale after the date of a mortgage which is void as to subsequent purchasers because improperly recorded acquires a title which is adverse to that of the mortgagee, and is not a necessary party to a foreclosure suit, but, if made a party, the judgment against him is not a bar to his assertion of superior title, where the court made no finding on the issue whether his or the mortgagee's title is superior, and merely decreed that "said foreclosure sale shall be without prejudice to any and all prior and paramount rights of defendants except the defendant mortgagor."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; C. E. McLaughlin, Judge.

Action by Frank P. Cady against Edward T. Purser and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellant. A. L. Shinn, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Suit to quiet title. Each party to the action claims title to the land in controversy under the Eagle Lake Land & Irrigation Company, a corporation; the plaintiff by virtue of a sheriff's deed under two judgments rendered against the corporation, and the defendant by virtue of a sheriff's sale under a judgment foreclosing a mortgage executed by the corporation. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff obtained a judgment against the corporation upon a money demand June 13, 1893, and at the sheriff's sale under an execution issued thereon purchased the lands described in the complaint herein on February 23, 1894, and the sheriff's certificate therefor was delivered to him and recorded March 5, 1894, and the deed thereon August 24, 1894. Charles Hartson obtained a judgment against the corporation July 14, 1893, and at the sheriff's sale under an execution issued thereon purchased the same lands, and received the sheriff's certificate therefor, which was recorded February 19, 1894. The sheriff's deed upon this certificate was executed to the plaintiff December 21, 1894, by virtue of an assignment of the certificate to him made by Hartson, March 29th. May 24, 1892, the corporation executed a mortgage upon the lands to the defendant Purser. This mortgage was filed for record in the office of the county recorder on November 22, 1892, and was recorded in Book A of Bills of Sale and Agreements. March 26, 1894, Purser commenced an action to foreclose this mortgage, making Cady and Hartson defendants therein. Judgment was thereafter rendered in this action for a sale of the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of Purser's claim, but declaring that "said foreclosure sale shall be without prejudice to any and all prior and paramount rights of the said defendants, except the defendant Eagle Lake Land & Irrigation Company." At the sale under this judgment Purser purchased the lands, and afterwards received a sheriff's deed therefor.

1. Under the foregoing facts it must be held that at the time the plaintiff and Hartson purchased the lands at the sheriff's sale they did not either of them have any notice of the mortgage from the corporation to Purser. Whether subsequent purchasers or mortgagees are charged with constructive notice of the contents of an instrument that has been filed for record in the recorder's office, notwithstanding such instrument is afterwards incorrectly or improperly copied into the books kept therefor, has been decided differently in different states; but it was held at an early day in this state, and must be regarded as a settled rule, that they have constructive notice of only such matters as appear from the instruments as copied into the proper books. In Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 292, it was held that an instrument which was incorrectly transcribed by the recorder did not give constructive notice of its contents to a subsequent purchaser, but that such purchaser had the right to rely upon the instrument as it appeared upon the face of the record. In Donald v. Beals, 57 Cal. 399, the court said that, where there is a conflict between the actual record as it appears in the record book and the constructive record by the indorsement made upon the instrument at the time it was deposited for record, the latter must give way to the former. In Watkins v. Wilhoit, 104 Cal. 395, 38 Pac. 53, it was held that an assignment for the benefit of creditors was sufficiently recorded, so far as creditors are concerned, by a compliance with section 1170, Civ. Code; but to be effective against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, and so as to give them constructive notice, it must be recorded in accordance with the provisions of section 1213, Id. Meherin v. Oaks, 67 Cal. 57, 7 Pac. 47, cited by the respondent, was an action against the sheriff for an unlawful seizure and sale of mortgaged property, contrary to section 2969, Civ. Code, and did not involve any question of the rights of a subsequent purchaser. It appeared that before the sale by the sheriff the mortgagee gave him actual notice of the existence of the mortgage, and the decision went upon the ground that he was thereby put upon inquiry. Having received actual notice of the mortgage, there was no place for the doctrine of constructive notice, and what the court said with reference to section 1170 was irrelevant. The principle upon which the rule rests is that as, under the provisions of the recording act, if the grantee of an interest in lands would protect himself against subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers, he must give notice of his interest, and as the statute provides for constructive notice in the place of actual notice, it is incumbent upon him to comply with all the requirements prescribed for such constructive notice, one of which is the correct transcription of the instrument into the appropriate book. Neslin v. Wells, 104 U. S. 428, 26 L. Ed. 802; Terrell v. Andrew Co., 44 Mo. 309. For this purpose the recorder is the agent of such grantee, and the errors or omissions of the recorder in making such transcription are his errors or omissions in the same manner as are the errors of a sheriff in executing a writ, or of a clerk in recording an order or a judgment.

The provision in section 1170, Civ. Code, that "an instrument is deemed to be recorded when, being duly acknowledged or proved and certified, it is deposited in the recorder's office, with the proper officer, for record," must be read in connection with the provisions of section 1213, that "every conveyance of real property acknowledged or proved and certified and recorded as prescribed by law, from the time it is filed with the recorder for record, is constructive notice of the contents thereof to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees," and each must be construed with reference to the purposes for which it was enacted. Section 1170 is a part of article 2 of the chapter on recording transfers, which treats of the mode of recording, and designates the time at which the instrument shall be deemed to be recorded; while section 1213 is in article 4, which treats of the effect of recording, or the want thereof, and specifies the conditions under which such effect will be given to the instrument. For the purpose of complying with a statutory requirement, as in the case of official bonds or certificates of marriage, where the evident purpose of the statute is to make the instrument a matter of public record, or when the recording of an instrument is an essential step in perfecting some right or completing some act of the party, as in the case of a declaration of homestead, or an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the depositing of the instrument in the recorder's office is sufficient; but, when merely making a record of the instrument is not the ultimate purpose of the party, but the recording of the instrument is the means by which his ultimate purpose is to be carried into effect,—as when his purpose is to give notice of his interest in real estate,—section 1213 requires not only that the instrument shall be filed with the recorder for record, but that it shall also be “recorded as prescribed by law.” By this requirement, in order that constructive notice of the contents shall be given to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, the legislature must have intended something in addition to depositing the instrument in the recorder's office for record, since that had already been provided for in section 1170. The word “recorded,” in ordinary usage, signifies copied or transcribed into some permanent book. In Anderson's Law Dictionary the term “recording” is defined “copying an instrument into the public records in a book kept for that purpose by or under the superintendence of the officer appointed therefor.” By section 124 of the county government act as it stood at the time of these transactions (St. 1891, p. 324), the recorder was required to “record separately in large and well-bound separate books” the several instruments there named; and section 130 provided that, when any instrument was deposited in his office for record, he “must record the same without delay.” By section 125 the recorder is required to keep indexes to the several instruments, among which are two indexes labeled respectively “Mortgagors of Real Property” and “Mortgagees of Real Property,” with the pages divided and so headed as to show the parties and date and place of record of each mortgage. In addition to this, section 1171, Civ. Code, provides: “Grants absolute in terms are to be recorded in one set of books, and mortgages in another.” These provisions of the statute fully indicate that an instrument is not “recorded as prescribed by law” until it has been transcribed into the proper book. The policy of the law in this respect is to afford facilities for intending purchasers or mortgagees of land in examining the records for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are any claims against it, and for this purpose it has prescribed the mode in which the recorder shall keep the records of the several instruments; and an instrument must be recorded as herein directed in order that it may be recorded as prescribed by law. If recorded in a different book from the one directed, it is to be regarded the same as if not recorded at all. In Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 172, where an instrument was copied into a book that had not been in use for recording purposes for many years, it was held that the book was improper for that purpose, and that the instrument was not “duly recorded”; the court saying: “The act of the town clerk was as wholly inoperative as if he had written this deed on a slate, or copied it into his family record.” The same principle was declared in Insurance Co. v. White, 17 N. Y. 469. In Gillig v. Maass, 28 N. Y. 214, a mortgage recorded in a book of deeds was held not to be duly recorded, and therefore not to give constructive notice of its existence. There is no provision in the statutes of this state authorizing the recorder to transcribe any instrument in a book entitled “Bills of Sale and Agreements,” and the above provisions requiring him to record mortgages in separate books, and to keep indexes of such records, lead to the conclusion that the record of the mortgage to Purser was ineffective for giving constructive notice of its contents. It is immaterial that the title of the corporation did not appear of record in the recorder's office. The provisions of the recording act are not limited to titles which appear of record, but are applicable as well to those which exist by virtue of prescription. The possession of the land by the corporation at the time of the sheriff's sale was prima facie evidence of its title.

2. The rights acquired by the plaintiff under the sheriff's sale were not affected by the judgment in the action of Purser for the foreclosure of his mortgage, or by the sale under this judgment. By virtue of the provisions of section 1214, Civ. Code, the omission of Purser to have his mortgage properly recorded rendered it void as against the plaintiff. The plaintiff, purchasing at a sale under his own judgment, was a bona fide purchaser for value, and the certificate of sale was a conveyance by which an interest in the property was created, and, as it was immediately recorded, it had priority over the mortgage to Purser. Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680. There was no record of the Purser mortgage prior to the action for its foreclosure. It has been stated in several cases that the effect of a sale under a judgment in foreclosure is to transfer to the purchaser the title of the mortgagor as it existed at the date of the mortgage, and that in an action for its foreclosure the rights of defendants which were acquired subsequent to its date are extinguished by such sale; and it is contended by the respondents that, as the rights of the plaintiff herein were acquired subsequent to the execution of the Purser mortgage, and as he was a defendant in the suit for its foreclosure, his rights so acquired were extinguished by the sale under the judgment in that action. These expressions in reference to the effect of a sale under foreclosure were, however, but the general statement of a principle in which only the ordinary facts and the usual conduct of parties were to be considered, but are inapplicable in the consideration of an unusual state of facts, or conduct, as where the mortgagee fails to record his mortgage until after a third person has acquired an interest in the land. It would be a harsh rule of procedure to hold that the foreclosure of a mortgage which the statute had declared to be void would extinguish the interest of such third person. The principle is well settled that paramount and adverse titles are not proper subjects for adjudication in actions for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The adverse title here referred to is not limited to one which is adverse to the title which was in the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage, but includes a title that is adverse to that which the mortgagee brings before the court. A title may be paramount and superior to the title of the mortgagee, although acquired after the date of the mortgage, and if, after the execution of the mortgage, a purchaser from the mortgagor acquires a title which is superior to that of the mortgagee, that title is adverse to the mortgagee's title. The provision in section 1214, Civ. Code, by which the failure of the mortgagee to record his mortgage renders it "void" as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, deprives it of all consideration in reference to its date, and requires it to be treated as if it had been executed subsequent to the record of the subsequent purchaser. Being void as against him, neither its date nor its contents can be available to defeat his title. As against the plaintiff herein, the mortgage of Purser had no existence until the commencement of his action for its foreclosure. Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680; Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 468, 27 Pac. 356; Duff v. Randall, 116 Cal. 231, 48 Pac. 66. The title of the plaintiff being, therefore, adverse and superior to that held by Purser, the plaintiff was not a necessary party to the foreclosure, and, although he was made a party, the facts presented upon the record were insufficient to render the judgment against him a bar to his assertion herein of his superior title. The complaint simply alleged that he had, or claimed to have, some interest in the lands, but that such claim was "subsequent, subject, and subordinate to the lien of the plaintiff." In his answer thereto the plaintiff herein denied this allegation, and affirmatively alleged that his claim was not subsequent, subject, or subordinate to the plaintiff's lien. The court made no finding upon this issue, but merely found that the defendants claimed some interest in the premises, and in its judgment expressly decreed "that said foreclosure sale shall be without prejudice to any and all prior and paramount rights of the defendants, except the defendant Eagle Land & Irrigation Company." There was, therefore, no adjudication upon the issue whether the title of the plaintiff herein was subordinate to the claim of the mortgagee, and the plaintiff is, therefore, not estopped thereby from asserting in this action his claim of title to the lands purchased by him at the sheriff's sale. Beronio v. Lumber Co. (Cal.) 61 Pac. 958. As we have seen that his title thereby acquired is superior to that derived under the mortgage, the provision in the decree foreclosing all persons having liens subsequent to the lien of the plaintiff therein is inapplicable to the plaintiff herein, and the superior court erred in holding that the plaintiff herein has no title to the lands, and in rendering judgment in favor of the defendants. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

O'DONNELL v. MERGUIRE et al.
(S. F. 1,346.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1901.)
EXECUTION—SIGNATURE BY FORMER CLERK—VALIDITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 682, provides that a writ of execution must be subscribed by the clerk of the court. Held, that an execution signed in print with the name of a former clerk of the court, and in writing by a deputy of the present clerk, was void, and sale thereunder conveyed no title.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. On rehearing. Opinion in department (60 Pac. 981) affirmed, and judgment of lower court reversed.

Reed & Nusbaumer, for appellant. Charles Wesley Reed, Roger Johnson, and King & Hornblower, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from an order granting the defendant a new trial. The suit was brought to quiet title to lands described in the complaint. The defendant Reid claimed title in himself. Both parties deraigned title from one Thomas O'Donnell, the husband of plaintiff,—the plaintiff, by deed of conveyance of date July 14, 1891; the defendant Reid, by a sheriff's sale under an execution against Thomas O'Donnell. The defendants' case is based on the claim that the former conveyance was in fraud of creditors, and hence void as against the subsequent execution sale to him. The findings negatived the allegations of fraud, and found in favor of the plaintiff on the issue of title. The new trial was granted presumably upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that the conveyance of O'Donnell to the plaintiff was not fraudulent as to creditors. But, as the conveyance is specifically found, the finding as to fraud can be material only upon the assumption of the validity of the subsequent sheriff's sale to the defendant. Otherwise, the plaintiff's ownership follows as a conclusion of law, from the conveyance to the plaintiff from O'Donnell, the common source of title, and the alleged fraud is immaterial.

The alleged writ of execution, under which defendants' title was deraigned, was regular in all respects, except that it was signed, "M. C. Haley, Clerk, by B. D. Dougherty, Deputy Clerk," and not by C. F. Curry, who was the clerk at the date of the alleged execution. Haley was a former clerk, and his signature, "M. C. Haley, Clerk," was in print, and it was admitted that Dougherty was the deputy of Curry, as he had been also of Haley. The question is thus presented whether the document in question was a valid execution, sufficient to confer power on the sheriff to sell and to convey the land. The power of courts to amend writs issuing from them, when defective or irregular, has long been exercised, and in modern times with increasing frequency; nor is it easy to prescribe definite limits to the power (1 Freem. Ex'ns, § 63); and it is also settled that, if the writ be amendable, it will be accorded the same effect, with reference to acts done in execution of it, as if it had been amended (Id. § 71b; Hunt v. Loucks, 38 Cal. 374). The question, therefore, is whether the omission of the subscription of the clerk to the writ of execution, as required by section 682, Code Civ. Proc., can be amended. If so, it cannot be regarded as void; otherwise, it must be so regarded.

The question, we think, admits of an obvious answer. The power of amendment, however extensive it may be, is limited to the amendment of the writs of the court, which can be authenticated only, under provisions of the law similar to ours, by the subscription of the clerk. Without this there is nothing "which the judge can affirm" is an execution "issued upon the judgment produced." Hunt v. Loucks, 38 Cal. 375. Under the ancient practice, where the seal of the court was in the custody of a particular officer and sedulously guarded, and when seals were habitually used for the purpose of authenticating instruments, a seal alone may have been sufficient to authenticate an execution, as in fact was the case in the king's bench, though in the more modern court of common pleas the signature of the prothonotary was required. Tidd, Prac. 999, 1027. But in modern times the seal has lost its significance, and cannot be regarded as a sufficient authentication without the signature of the officer affixing it. Whether both seal and subscription of the clerk, as required by the Code, be essential, is a question about which the authorities differ (1 Freem. Ex'ns, § 70), and which it is unnecessary in this case to determine. But we are of the opinion that the seal by itself is insufficient, and that the subscription of the clerk is an essential part of the writ, without which there is no execution to be amended. On this point also there is some conflict in the authorities, which are discussed by the author in the work cited (1 Freem. Ex'ns, § 45); but the preponderance seems to be in favor of the conclusion we have reached (Huggins v. Ketchum, 4 Dev. & B. 414; Short v. State, 79 Ga. 550, 4 S. E. 852; Hernandez v. Drake, 81 Ill. 34; Wooters v. Joseph, 137 Ill. 113, 27 N. E. 80, 31 Am. St. Rep. 355; Dearborn Laundry Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 55 Ill. App. 438; Dwight v. Merritt, 18 Blatchf. 305, 4 Fed. 614). The order granting a new trial must therefore be reversed; and it is so ordered.

GRAY v. LA SOCIETE FRANCAISE DE BIENFAISANCE MUTUELLE.

(S. F. 1,755.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1901.)

BUILDING CONTRACT—CHANGE IN SPECIFICATION—EXTRA WORK—LIABILITY—WRITTEN AGREEMENT—NECESSITY—AUTHORITY OF ARCHITECT—ARBITRATION—ISSUES.

1. Specifications for a building contract provided that no extra work should be allowed except on a written order from the architect, approved by the building committee, and that, on any alterations or changes, the character and valuation of the extra work should be agreed on in a writing signed by the owner or architect and the contractor. The contractor, on verbal instructions from the architect, and without the knowledge of defendants or their building committee, continued the foundation wall 18 inches higher than specified. Held, that defendants were not liable therefor as extra work.

2. Where specifications for a building provided that in case of dispute as to the value of extra work the matter should be submitted to arbitration before suit therefor, arbitration was a condition precedent to such action.

3. Where plaintiff claimed that the work sued on was included in the original contract, and defendant alleged it was extra work, the valuation of which had not been submitted to arbitration, as required by the specifications, the contention that there was no issue as to the value of the work cannot be sustained.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by H. N. Gray against La Societe Francaise de Bienfaisance Mutuelle. From an order denying a new trial, and from a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. A. Comte and Boyd & Fifield, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This action was brought to foreclose a contractor's lien for work and labor done and materials furnished in supplying all of the concrete and artificial stone work for the building of the defendant known as the "French Hospital" in the city and county of San Francisco. The case was tried before the court, and findings filed upon which judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the order denying the motion.

It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings in two important particulars, which we will discuss in the order as set forth in the briefs. On the 7th day of October, 1893, the plaintiff's assignor, a corporation, entered into a contract in writing with defendant corporation, by the terms of which the said assignor of plaintiff agreed to furnish labor, tools, materials, and appliances, and perform and complete all the excavating, concrete artificial stone work, cementing, and other work as shown and described in the plans and specifications made by the architects and signed by the parties at the time of making the said contract; all for the sum of $25,885. The work was performed, and the contract price paid as agreed upon. The contention here is not as to the amount to be paid under the contract, and which was paid thereunder, but is as to an item of $1,684.50, which is particularly stated in finding 4 as follows, to wit: "That immediately after the execution of said written contract the said Gray Brothers' Artificial Stone Paving Company entered upon the performance thereof under said articles of agreement and specifications, and while they were so engaged in the early part of December, 1893, Wm. Mooser, one of the said architects, requested said corporation orally to carry up the concrete walls eighteen inches higher than called for by the original plans and specifications, and that said corporation subsequently complied with said request, and did carry up said concrete walls eighteen inches higher than called for by said plans and specifications, and in so doing put in 6,738 cubic feet of concrete wall, of the value of $1,684.50." The court found, in effect, that this item was for extra work, and was not agreed to in writing, nor requested by defendant nor its building committee, and that for this reason plaintiff could not recover therefor. The main contention of appellant is that the item was for services performed under the original contract, and was not for extras, and that the work was done at the request of the architect of defendant, and that for this reason the defendant is responsible. The contention is mainly based upon the following clause in the specifications, which were a part of the contract, to wit: "If, in the opinion of architects, any particular place should require more cement or more thickness of floor or concrete than is called for, the contractor will have to do the same, and the cost of said work to be determined by the architects." We think, without regard to the question as to whether or not the contested item is for extras or was incurred under the authority of the contract and said quoted clause in the specifications, the defendant is not liable. Immediately following the clause quoted from the specifications, and as a part of the same sentence, is the following: "But no extra work shall be allowed except where a written order from architects is procured, approved by the building committee." The court found "that the request of the architect therefor was never approved by the building committee, nor was the cost or value thereof ever fixed, or agreed upon, or prearranged." This finding is supported by the evidence. It follows that, even if the original contract and the specification quoted authorized the carrying up of the concrete walls 18 inches higher, it could only be a charge against defendant when done under a written order from the architect, approved by the building committee. The defendant cannot be bound outside the terms of its contract. The plaintiff agreed that no extra work should be allowed except upon a written order from the architect approved by the building committee. It did not procure such order, and therefore must be held to the terms of its contract. The above is the correct interpretation of the specification, and was the true intent of the parties as shown by the other parts of the contract. It is provided in the eighth clause that, "should the owner or the architect at any time during the progress of the work request any alterations to or omissions from this contract or the plans or specifications, either of them shall be at liberty to do so only by written agreement." It is provided in the ninth clause: "The rule of practice to be observed in the fulfillment of the last foregoing paragraph [eight] shall be that, upon the demand of either the contractor, owner, or architect, the character and valuation of any or all changes, omissions, or extra work shall be agreed upon and fixed in writing, signed by the owner or architect and the contractor prior to execution." And in the specifications after the clause hereinbefore quoted in specification 5 it is provided: "And in all cases where any alterations or additions (if any) shall involve any increase of expenditure not included or provided for in the drawings, specifications, or contract, then authority in writing shall be necessary, and cost prearranged, before such work shall be undertaken. Neither will the same be paid for, nor any allowance be made in any respect thereof, unless the work in question shall have been executed under the authority of such written order, and said order be produced at the first settlement of extra account subsequent to the date thereof. Said written order to be given by architects, and approved by building committee." It thus appears that the parties over and over again bound themselves that no extras or extra work should be charged for unless agreed to in writing, as provided in the contract and specifications. There is no evidence of any agreement in writing as to the item in contest. There is no evidence that it was for work done by virtue of any change of plans approved by the building committee. Not only this, but the court finds "that neither the defendant, nor any of its officers, nor its board of trustees, nor its building committee, nor any member thereof, ever knew of said oral request of the architect, or that said extra work was being done, or had been done, until a considerable time subsequent to the doing of said extra work." This finding is supported by the evidence, and is entirely inconsistent with the contention of appellant's counsel that the defendant waived the provisions of the contract requiring all increases in expenditure to be in writing.

In J. M. Griffith Co. v. City of Los Angeles (Cal.) 54 Pac. 383, the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant for a fixed price to construct a certain sewer leading from the city of Los Angeles to the Pacific Ocean. After completing the contract, the plaintiff claimed an amount for extras in furnishing, at the request of the city engineer, who had charge of the work, a large number of steel bands for the pipe, in addition to those required in the specifications. The amount claimed for such extras was $4,012. The contract provided, "No extras are to be allowed except upon change of route or plan," and in regard to changes in the plans it provided, "But the changes so made, with the price to be added to or deducted from the contract price, shall be agreed upon between the parties hereto and indorsed upon the contract," and, if not so indorsed, "then the original price shall be neither increased nor diminished." This court held that the amount so claimed could not be recovered, and in the opinion said: "The contract, however, was plain that no extras should be allowed except on change of route or plans, and, in case the engineer should change the plans, still no extra payment was provided for unless the changes so made, with the price to be added to or deducted from the contract price, 'shall be agreed upon between the parties hereto,' viz. the city and the contractors. If they could not agree on the price, then the engineer should fix the same. These provisions evidently mean that no changes of plan should become a part of the contract to be paid for by the city, unless it should agree thereto." We have no doubt of the correctness of the above rule. The defendant had the right to the protection given it by its contract, and the right to determine, through its building committee, in a regular manner, as to whether or not it desired to change its plans or increase the cost of the work for which it had contracted. The architect possessed only the power given him by the contract. He is nowhere given the right to change the contract or plans. If the architect could change the plans and specifications in material respects, of his own volition, then the contract would afford the defendant no protection. If he could raise the foundation 18 inches, and increase the cost $1,700, he could indefinitely expand, increase, and change the building, until the cost would be doubled or trebled, and when completed the defendant would have a different building from that called for in its contract, and probably be bankrupt by the expense. We do not think such is the law. The agreement provided that, in case a dispute should arise between the parties respecting the valuation of any extra work, the disputed matter should be submitted to two competent persons who are experts in the business of building, and, in case these two cannot agree, they shall select a third person, an umpire, and the decision of the two shall be binding on all parties. The plaintiff alleged that, being unable to agree with defendant on the value of the alleged extra work, the plaintiff's assignor proposed to defendant to arbitrate the same in the manner provided in the contract, and to that end offered to select upon its part an arbitrator, and requested the defendant to likewise select an arbitrator; but that defendant refused, and still refuses, to arbitrate. This was denied by the answer, and upon the issue so raised the court found: "That the said Gray Brothers' Artificial Stone Paving Company never at any time proposed to the defendant to arbitrate the value of said extra work and materials in the manner provided in said articles, and never offered to select, upon its part, an arbitrator, and never requested defendant to select an arbitrator to represent it for the purpose of making such arbitration. And the defendant never did in any way refuse to enter into any arbitration as to the value of said extra work. And no arbitration was in fact ever made or attempted as to the value of said extra work and materials." The evidence sustains this finding. This finding precludes any recovery by plaintiff. Where parties have agreed to an arbitration as a condition precedent in a contract of this character, they must arbitrate, or in good faith endeavor to do so, or show some good and sufficient excuse for not having done so, before they will be allowed to maintain an action. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307; Scammon v. Denio, 72 Cal. 393, 14 Pac. 98. We do not think it can be said, in view of the pleadings, that there was no issue as to the value of the extras. Conceding that the question as to whether or not the disputed work was included in the contract is a matter for the court, and not subject to arbitration under the contract, it does not follow that the value of the work is not the subject of arbitration. If the court had found the work to be in addition to that originally called for and extras, it would still have to find the value in order for plaintiff to recover. The court could not find the value unless the plaintiff endeavored to ascertain it in the method provided by the contract, or showed some valid reason for not having done so. We advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the above opinion, the order is affirmed.

OWEN v. POMONA LAND & WATER CO.
(L. A. 637.)¹

APPEAL — ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS — SUFFICIENCY — VENDOR AND PURCHASER — RESCISSION OF CONTRACT — WAIVER — DEFECTIVE TITLE — WATER RATE — IMPROVEMENTS.

1. Under a statute which requires that the specification of errors on appeal shall contain a statement of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, a statement that there is no evidence to justify a certain finding, or to prove or tending to prove a certain fact, is sufficient.

2. In an action to rescind a contract to purchase land, and recover the purchase money paid, and increased value of the land by reason of improvements thereto, a finding of the amount of such increased value is sustained by proof that the value of the improvements amounts to such sum, since, though it does not necessarily follow that land is enhanced in value to the same amount as the value of the improvements, the inference is one the court may fairly draw, in the absence of other evidence.

3. The finding that a vendee of land, going into possession and making valuable improvements under a contract to purchase, may recover the value of such improvements on a rescission of the contract, cannot be reviewed by the supreme court on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, since on such appeal the court can review only specification of insufficiency of evidence to support the findings and of errors of law occurring at the trial, while such finding is simply a conclusion of law.

4. Defendant contracted to convey to plaintiff certain land which it had purchased from a railway company which held a patent therefor from the United States. Plaintiff paid part of the price, went into possession, and improved the land. When balance of purchase price was due, plaintiff tendered the same, and demanded a conveyance. After the contract was made, the United States supreme court held patents similar to the one for this land invalid, and defendant promised that it would make the necessary proofs as soon as the land office was ready to receive them, and would procure a patent direct from the United States, under Act March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 557, § 4), which provides that where lands erroneously patented to a railway company have been sold to citizens of the United States, purchasing in good faith, patents should issue direct to such purchasers on proof of such facts. Plaintiff relied on this promise, and continued in possession two years longer, when he renewed his tender, and commenced suit for rescission, and to recover purchase price paid and value of improvements. The land office had not been ready to receive proofs under section 4, and hence defendant had not been able to obtain title. Held, that while plaintiff was entitled to rescind on defendant's inability to procure and convey title at the time fixed by the contract, he having then accepted defendant's promise to acquire title and continued in possession, he could not thereafter rescind on that ground until defendant had had reasonable time and opportunity to comply with its promise.

5. Defendant contracted to convey to plaintiff certain land and shares in an irrigation company, which entitled him to a certain amount of water. Plaintiff paid part of the price, took possession, and improved the land. The irrigation ditches were fed by artesian wells, which at the time the contract was made, and for five years thereafter, furnished as much water as represented, but partially failed the following season. Held, that such failure of the wells did not authorize a rescission of the contract, since, if there was a failure of this part of the consideration, the failure was through no fault of the defendant.

6. Plaintiff contracted to purchase certain land and shares of stock in an irrigation company. The stock was sold with the land, under a rule apportioning 10 shares to each acre. By the terms of the contract, plaintiff, in consideration of the right to occupy the land pending the fulfillment of the contract, agreed to pay and discharge all water rates that might be levied on the premises. The artesian wells which supplied the water for the irrigating company failed, and an assessment was levied on the stock for means to increase the supply of water. Held, that the assessment was a water rate assessed on the premises, within the meaning of the contract, for which plaintiff was liable.

In bank. Judgment in department (61 Pac. 472), affirming judgment of lower court, reversed.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action by the vendee of certain land, and of certain shares of stock in an irrigation company, to cancel the contract, and to recover various sums paid to the vendor, and also the value of improvements placed upon the land. The suit is based upon an alleged rescission of the contract of sale, for failure of title, and failure of the irrigation company to furnish the quantity of water required for irrigation. The defendant by answer contested the right and the fact of rescission, and by cross bill sought a specific enforcement of the contract. The cause was tried by the court, and findings made, upon which judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial, but, the appeal from the judgment having been dismissed for failure to file the transcript in time, there is nothing left to be considered except such matters as can be reviewed upon an appeal from the order, i. e. specifications of insufficiency of evidence to support the findings and of errors of law occurring at the trial.

A preliminary statement of the principal facts of the case will be of assistance in the discussion of these questions: The land which the defendant covenanted to convey is part of a certain section, No. 15, in San Bernardino county, for which the officers of the land department of the United States had issued a patent to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in 1879. That company sold it to Wicks, who assigned his contract to defendant, who, upon compliance with its terms, received a conveyance in due form from the railroad company. These conveyances and contracts, being duly recorded in San Bernardino county, showed an apparently perfect title in the defendant, but in fact its title was not perfect for the following reasons: This section 15 was a part of the lands included in the provisions of the act of congress of July 27, 1866, purporting to grant them to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company in aid of the construction of its road. It was also within the description of lands granted to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for similar purposes by the act of congress of March 3, 1871. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company completed its road according to the conditions of its grant, but the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company never built that part of its road west of the Colorado river, where the two lines intersected, and the officers of the land department, acting upon their construction of the law, issued patents to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for lands within the common limits of the two grants. Subsequently, in 1886, congress passed an act forfeiting the lands granted to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company for breach of the conditions of the grant, and thereafter proceedings were instituted on the part of the United States to vacate the patents so issued, upon the ground that their issuance was unauthorized. Proceedings of this character were pending in January, 1891, when the contract between these parties was entered into. It does not clearly appear that the patent covering this particular section 15 had been assailed at that time, but actions had been commenced to cancel similar patents for lands similarly situated, and to one of those actions the defendant here was a party. In other words, it had actual knowledge that its title to one parcel of land was assailed upon grounds which equally affected the title to the land which is here involved. But the litigation, so far as it had progressed, had resulted in favor of the defendant's title; that is to say, the decision of the United States circuit court, where the suits were commenced, had sustained the action of the officers of the land department in the issuance of the patents, holding that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had earned and become entitled to all the lands within the common limits of the two grants. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (C. C.) 45 Fed. 596; Id., 46 Fed. 683. Besides, congress had in 1887 passed a curative act saving the rights of citizens who had bona fide purchased from the patentees lands erroneously patented, as these were, and providing that, upon proof of their citizenship and bona fides, patents should be issued to them without further payment. The plaintiff had no actual knowledge of these matters affecting the title in January, 1891, when he contracted for this land. In an application to purchase, which preceded the contract, plaintiff had stipulated for a certificate of title, and the defendant furnished a certificate made by a reputable title and abstract company, showing that its title was perfect, as in fact it was, so far as appeared by the records of San Bernardino county, which contained no reference to any action by the United States to cancel the patent issued to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. It is one of the grievances of the plaintiff that the pendency of that litigation, known to the defendant, but unknown to him, and undisclosed by the county records, was not brought to his attention prior to the making of the contract.

The terms of the contract were, in brief, that plaintiff was to pay \$1,000 cash, \$1,000 January 14, 1893, and \$1,000 January 14, 1894, with interest on the deferred payments, and to have immediate possession. Defendant was to convey by deed of grant, bargain, and sale certain described lots in said section 15, containing 20.32 acres of land, "together with two hundred and three and $\frac{2}{10}$ (203.2) shares of the stock of the Del Monte Irrigation Company, representing two and $\frac{32}{1000}$ (2.032) inches of water under four (4) inch pressure, said stock to be delivered by the party of the first part and accepted by the party of the second part subject to the by-laws of the said Del Monte Irrigation Company." In pursuance of this contract the plaintiff made the cash payment of \$1,000, and entered into possession of the land, which he proceeded to improve by the erection of buildings and the planting of fruit trees. He made no further payments of purchase money under the contract, but paid a portion of the accruing interest, and paid all the taxes.

In December, 1892, the supreme court of the United States decided the cases entitled U. S. v. Colton Marble & Lime Co. and U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 146 U. S. 615, 13 Sup. Ct. 163, 36 L. Ed. 1104, and also two other cases, entitled U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 146 U. S. 570, 13 Sup. Ct. 152, 36 L. Ed. 1091. These were appeals from the circuit court in several cases involving different phases of the litigation concerning the patents which had been issued to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for lands within the limits of the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, and by the judgment of the supreme court the decrees of the circuit court were reversed, and the causes remanded, with directions to enter decrees in favor of the United States vacating and canceling the patents. These decisions were brought to the attention of the plaintiff in the early part of the year 1893, and he then learned for the first time that the title to the lands contracted for was not in the defendant. From that time forward, however, he had actual and full knowledge of all the facts and of the law affecting defendant's rights in said lands, and his own rights under the contract of purchase. He did not, during the year 1893, take any steps looking to a rescission of his contract. In fact, it appears that he was at that time satisfied, as a lawyer, that, although the title was not then in the defendant, it was, nevertheless, practically certain that under the provisions of the act of 1887, above referred to, a new patent for the land would be issued direct to the defendant upon proof of its purchase from the railroad company upon the faith of the invalid patent of 1879. There is uncontradicted evidence that he so advised a client who consulted him professionally as to the title of defendant to another subdivision of the same section of land prior to the month of April, 1893. In January, 1894, when the final payment under his contract fell due, plaintiff made a formal offer to complete the payment upon conveyance of a good title to the land and water stock. But he knew at the time he made this offer that its condition could not be complied with, and his only object seems to have been to demonstrate his readiness to perform when defendant was able to perform on its part. The result of this offer and the ensuing discussion of the defect in the title to the land was a promise and assurance on the part of the defendant that it would make the necessary proofs as soon as the land office was ready to receive them, and would procure a patent direct from the United States under the act of 1887. Resting upon this promise, plaintiff remained in possession of the land, cultivating and caring for the fruit trees he had planted, until the summer of 1896.

During the whole period of his occupancy of the land, down to and including the irrigation season of 1895, the plaintiff received from the Del Monte Irrigation Company the full quantity of water mentioned in his contract; but in the year 1896, owing to the failure of the artesian wells which constituted its source of supply, the irrigation company was not able to furnish to its stockholders quite one-fourth of the quantity of water represented by its stock; that is to say, there were 21,000 shares of stock issued, and in order to supply 1 inch of water of every 100 shares it required a flow of 210 inches from its wells, which in August, 1896, were yielding only about 40 inches, to which something seems to have been added by pumping. In order to secure a better supply of water, the irrigation company levied an assessment of 8 cents a share on its stock, and the defendant notified the plaintiff that he must pay the assessment on the 203.2 shares which it had contracted to him or be deprived of water for irrigation. He refused to pay the assessment, and at this juncture, on August 5, and again on August 19, 1896, renewed his demand for a deed of conveyance of the land and his offer to perform on his part. This, however, like his first offer, was merely formal; for he knew that the defendant had not yet received a patent, and he had no intention of accepting its deed or parting with the money which he tendered. The defendant being unable to comply with the conditions of his offer, he gave notice that he rescinded the contract, and offered to reconvey everything he had received, and to restore the possession of the land, upon condition that the defendant would refund the moneys paid in pursuance of the contract, and compensate him for the value of his improvements, with interest. His offer being declined, plaintiff commenced this action in August, 1896, which resulted in a judgment in his favor for the amount of his payments under the contract, and the value of his improvements, fixed at the sum of $6,250, together with interest and costs. The whole amount of the judgment was declared to be a lien upon the land and water stock, which were ordered sold, and the proceeds applied upon the judgment, with judgment over for any deficiency, etc.

On this appeal of the defendant from the order overruling its motion for a new trial, we have to consider only the assignments of error in the rulings of the superior court at the trial, and the specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings.

With regard to these specifications the respondent makes the objection that they are not sufficient in substance or proper in form, and to this point cites the case of De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 545, 52 Pac. 825. But the decision in that case has no application to the specifications here, which are as exact and detailed as they could be made in pointing out the particular findings and parts of findings which it is claimed the evidence does not justify. The language of many of these specifications is: "There is no evidence to justify;" "there is no evidence to prove or tending to prove," etc.; and it seems to be claimed that this is not a compliance with the statute, which requires a statement of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient. This objection is too refined. If there is no evidence to support a finding, it is certainly proper to say so, and even where there is slight, but insufficient, evidence to support a particular finding, every purpose of the law is answered by a specification that there is no evidence.

It is first objected that there is no evidence to justify the finding to the effect that the defendant corporation, before the execution of the application and contract, as an inducement to plaintiff to purchase the land and water stock, represented that it had a perfect title to the land, and that the right to a perpetual flow of one inch of water to each ten acres of land was sold therewith. We think the evidence fully sustains this finding. The representations were made, but they were honestly made. The officers and agents of the corporation had every reason to believe at the date of the contract that its title to the land was perfect. It had been sustained by the decision of the circuit court, and even if that decision was erroneous, as was afterwards decided by the supreme court, the equitable claim of the defendant to the land was protected by the act of congress of 1887. As to the water, all that was represented was true, as the defendant could see for himself. There was then an ample supply of water, and continued to be for five years after the date of the contract, when for the first time the artesian wells which were the source of supply began to fail. If there was any assertion or prediction by the defendant's agents that the wells would always yield as abundantly as they were then yielding, this was but an expression of opinion upon a matter as to which plaintiff was as fully informed as they were. What effect this finding is to have will be further considered, but the finding itself cannot be set aside for lack of evidence to support it.

There is also evidence sufficient to justify that portion of the fifth finding wherein it is found that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the title to said lands or the amount of water represented by said stock, except as he was informed of the same by the defendant, and that the purchase was induced by the representations. The plaintiff testifies to these facts, and his evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings. Indeed, the argument of appellant in support of his specification against this finding is not that the plaintiff had actual knowledge as to the title and water when he entered into the contract, but that his ignorance was inexcusable. It is true, as contended by appellant, that all the information it had as to its title was contained in acts of congress and public records of the courts and land department, and that the plaintiff, by exploring these sources of information, might have learned all that it knew; but this is quite consistent with the fact found that he was actually ignorant of the state of the title, and relied upon the representations of the defendant. As to the water, his ignorance of the facts is of no consequence, since, as has been seen, no representations were made that were not true.

The seventh finding, as to the fact that plaintiff made all his improvements on the land before he had any actual knowledge of the defect in the title, is also supported by the evidence, and there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding that the land was enhanced in value by plaintiff's improvements to the extent of $6,250. The evidence was that the improvements, consisting of dwelling, outhouses, flume, and fruit trees, all suitable to the character of the premises, had been appraised at that sum by appraisers agreed upon by the parties, and, while it is true that it does not necessarily follow that the value of the land was enhanced in the same amount as the value of the improvements, the inference was one which, in the absence of other evidence, the court might fairly draw. The evidence, in other words, was sufficient prima facie to sustain the conclusion. A further objection made by appellant to this finding is that the evidence which supports it was absolutely inadmissible, not only because it was irrelevant, but because the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the value of the improvements. It has been said by this court in one or two cases that the vendee of land going into possession under his contract of purchase, and upon representations of the vendor that he has the title, may, upon failure of the title, recover the value of improvements made bona fide while in possession. Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 50, 11 Pac. 489; Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 517, 27 Pac. 767. It is contended that the expressions upon this point in those cases were mere dicta, and it may be doubted whether the doctrine is authoritatively settled in this state; but in this case we cannot decide the question, and it would be a waste of time to consider it. It was purely and simply a conclusion of law that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of his improvements, and upon this appeal the conclusions of law are not reviewable.

The ninth finding is to the effect that the plaintiff has regularly paid all taxes, assessments, and water rates that have been levied or assessed upon said land and improvements for the period of five years from the execution of the contract, etc. This finding, according to its literal terms, is fully supported by the evidence; but more than five years elapsed after the execution of the contract before the levying of the assessment on the water stock sold to plaintiff along with the land, and defendant claims that the refusal of plaintiff to pay that assessment was a breach of his contract. This contention the superior court disposed of in its conclusions of law, where it was held that plaintiff was not liable under his contract for that assessment. Whether this conclusion was correct may call for further consideration, but the finding here in question has no reference to that assessment, and as to other taxes, etc., it is correct.

The tenth and eleventh findings of fact set forth the chain of defendant's title to the land, and the latter concludes as follows: "That defendant's (Pomona Land and Water Company's) only right or title to said lands is that derived under the chain of title above set forth, considered in connection with such remedial legislation as may be found in any act of congress applicable to the said chain of title; that by reason of the facts last hereinbefore set forth, as to the defective character of the title attempted to be conveyed to plaintiff, plaintiff has been greatly damaged." No part of these findings is called in question, except the last sentence above quoted, which embodies the conclusion that, by reason of the facts recited, the plaintiff has been greatly damaged. As to this the respondent contends that it is a misplaced conclusion of law, and cannot be reviewed on this appeal; but we agree with the appellant that it embraces a finding upon a vital issue of fact, viz. whether there was such a defect in the title as justified the plaintiff in rescinding the contract of sale at the time and under the circumstances of the alleged rescission. The finding was material in no other aspect, and in that aspect it was material; for it could not be established either as a conclusion of fact or of law that the contract had been rescinded for failure of title to the land without a finding that the title was so defective that the plaintiff could not be required to accept it. As to this matter, it may be conceded that the title which the defendant had on the 14th of January, 1894,—the date at which its conveyance was due,—was not such a title as the plaintiff was bound to accept. The defect, it is true, was curable under the act of 1887; but it had not been cured, and the defendant never, down to the trial of the action, had been able to cure it under that act, for the reason, apparently, that the land office would not receive its proofs of citizenship and bona fide purchase until the patent to the railroad company had been vacated, and the suit to vacate the patent was still undecided. If, therefore, the plaintiff had elected to rescind at that time, his right so to do would probably have been clear. But he did not elect to rescind at that time. Instead of rescinding, he accepted the promise of the defendant to cure the defect in its title, and rested upon it for two years and a half before taking any further action. For this, of course, he was in no wise to blame. He had a right to accept and rely upon the promise of defendant to perfect its title, and in the meantime to hold his right of rescission in reserve, to be exercised when, after a reasonable opportunity so to do, the defendant had failed or refused to redeem its promise; for while it is true that the right to rescind must be exercised promptly and is lost by delay, it is equally true that it does not lie in the mouth of a delinquent party to object to a delay which has been granted at his instance in order to enable him to perform an agreement which he is unable to perform at the time stipulated. On the other hand, it seems to follow that when, in consequence of some promise of the delinquent party, rescission has been delayed beyond the proper time, the right to rescind will not be revived until a reasonable opportunity has been afforded for compliance with such promise, unless it is by its terms to be performed within a certain time. And so the real question to be decided in this connection, and the main question in the case, is whether the defendant did unreasonably delay the proceedings to perfect its title.

The actual delay was no doubt unusual in the matter of perfecting a title, but whether it was unreasonable or injurious to the plaintiff depends upon the ability of the defendant to proceed, and the situation in which the plaintiff was left pending the delay. As to this it seems to be conceded that the defendant was prevented from making its proofs under the act of 1887 by a regulation of the land department that such proofs would not be received in any case until the patent to the railroad company had been canceled, and the patent embracing this particular land had not been canceled at the date of the alleged rescission. As to the terms of the regulation respecting the time of making these proofs, there is no direct evidence in the record, but, since the act of congress authorized the department to make rules on the subject, we must take judicial notice of such rules as were made, and, since the statement of counsel for appellant as to the substance of the regulation is not controverted by the respondent, we assume the fact to be as above stated. The defendant, therefore, not being a party to the suit involving the patent to this section, and having no power to expedite a decision,—if, indeed, any person could have brought the litigation to an earlier conclusion,—cannot be blamed for failing to procure a patent under the act of 1887, prior to the attempted rescission. But another and a more liberal act of congress was passed in March, 1896, under which, as plaintiff contends, the defendant might have proceeded without delay to get its patent, and he justifies his determination to rescind in August, 1896, upon the ground that the defendant had taken no steps under the later act. It does not appear, however, that either of the parties was advised at that time that the obtaining of a patent in this case could be hastened by a proceeding under the new law, and there is no evidence of any request or suggestion from the plaintiff that the defendant should take any different course from that previously agreed upon, viz. that it should keep track of the proceeding in court, and make its proofs, under the act of 1887, as soon as notice should be given that the land office was ready to receive them. We think that, if plaintiff desired a different or more expeditious procedure, he should have notified defendant, and given it a reasonable opportunity to conform to his wishes, before declaring a rescission of the contract on this ground. As to any injury to plaintiff occasioned by the delay, the record is silent. There is no evidence that he was damaged in any way. He was living upon the land. He was practically certain of securing the title in due course of proceedings under the law, and secure against any disturbance of his possession meanwhile. It is true, as suggested, that he might not have been able to sell the property so readily as he would have been if the title had been perfected; but there is no evidence that he desired to sell, and in a case of this complexion, in which the incidents of rescission have been complicated by the taking of possession and the making of improvements, we think something more is required to justify the course taken by plaintiff than the mere speculative injury involved in the surmise that the state of the title might have prevented a sale if he had desired to sell. Our conclusion upon this point is that the defect in the title to the land was not such a damage to plaintiff as to justify a rescission at the time plaintiff undertook to exercise the right, and that the finding of such damage is not sustained by the evidence.

As this finding is the principal basis of the conclusions and decree of the superior court, it is perhaps not strictly necessary that we should notice other points discussed by counsel, but we will briefly state our conclusions upon one or two propositions affecting the rights of the parties.

We think there is no foundation for any charge of fraudulent representations inducing the execution of this contract. The representations as to the water were true, and that respecting the title was based upon a state of facts which at the time fully justified the claim of a perfect title. Besides, if the plaintiff intended to rely upon misrepresentation as to the title, he should have rescinded as soon as he discovered the fact, and, since he did not then rescind, he waived the right to do so to the same extent at least that he waived his right to rescind for the actual defect of title of which he complains. Whether or not, in the final adjustment of this controversy, it may be held that the plaintiff can claim or recoup damages for any actual failure of the supply of water which his stock purported to represent,—a point as to which we express no opinion,—it is certain that the failure which occurred was not a cause for rescission. If this part of the consideration for plaintiff's obligation failed in any degree, the failure was due to no fault of the defendant, and so was not a ground of rescission. Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2.

As to the assessment levied upon the stock of the Del Monte Irrigation Company in August, 1896, we think, by a fair construction of the contract, it was payable by the plaintiff. He agreed, in consideration of the right to occupy the land pending the fulfillment of the contract, to "pay and discharge all taxes, assessments, and water rates" that might be levied or assessed "on the premises." The stock was sold with the land under a rule apportioning 10 shares of stock to each acre of land, and they were so inseparably related under the contract that an assessment upon the stock to carry out the purposes of the irrigation company was, within the meaning of the contract, a water rate assessed upon the premises. The order denying a new trial is reversed.

EATON v. NORRIS et al. (Sac. 699.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1901.)
PUBLIC MINERAL LAND—LOCATION—MARKING BOUNDARY ON GROUND.

Two adjoining mining claims were each marked at the corners by four stakes about a foot and a half long, flattened on two sides, and driven into the ground about four inches; two stakes being at the ends of the dividing line common to both claims; some stakes being in the brush, and others in the open ground. In the middle of the dividing line was a tree blazed on both sides, on one of which the notices of location were posted, describing the claims by courses and distances, running from the tree to a stake, and from stake to stake to point of beginning. The ledge on each claim had been sufficiently developed to show its existence and direction. Held, that the location sufficiently complied with Rev. St. U. S. tit. 32, c. 6, § 2324, requiring that a location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by J. R. Eaton against T. R. Norris and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Warren & Taylor, for appellants. Gillis & Tapscott, for respondent.

SMITH, C. An appeal from a judgment against the defendants and from an order denying a new trial. The suit was to quiet title to two mining claims particularly described, and known as the Luella quartz-mining claim and the Extension of the same. The former claim was located January 1, 1896, by the plaintiff; the latter by his wife, who conveyed to him prior to the beginning of the suit, he conveying to her an undivided half of his original claim. The defendants claim under a later location, of date January 15, 1898; and their location, being subsequent to the act of March 27, 1897, "prescribing the manner of locating mining claims" (St. 1897, p. 214), must depend for its validity on compliance with the provisions of that act, with which the court found they failed to comply. As conclusions of law the court found that the defendants' location was void, and that the plaintiff, being in possession, was entitled to judgment against them as mere trespassers. It is now urged by the appellants that their location was valid, and the findings to the contrary unsupported by the evidence. But the first question to be determined is as to the validity of the plaintiff's location; for, if this was valid, the claims were not open to location by the defendants. The plaintiff's locations, being anterior to the act of March 27, 1897, and there being in this case no local usage or customs, must be governed, with regard to their validity, exclusively by the provisions of chapter 6 of title 32 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and especially by those of section 2324 (Rev. St. p. 426); the sole requirement of which is that "the location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced." The court finds specifically how the locations were in fact marked on the ground, but does not find in words that the marks found were such that the boundaries could "be readily traced"; and it is objected that, in the absence of such a finding, the judgment cannot be sustained. It is, no doubt, true that the ultimate fact in determining the validity of a location is the placing of such marks on the ground as to identify the claim, or—to use the language of the statute—of such a character that the boundaries can be readily traced; and that it is for the jury, or court sitting as a jury, to determine whether this has been effected. 1 Lindl. Mines, p. 483, § 373; Taylor v. Middleton, 67 Cal. 656, 8 Pac. 594; Anderson v. Black, 70 Cal. 230, 11 Pac. 700. But where specific facts are found, "from which the existence of the ultimate fact must be conclusively inferred, the finding is sufficient as the finding of the ultimate fact." Hence, if the marks of location as found by the court are of such a character that it is evident that the boundaries can be readily traced, the finding will be sufficient; and in such a case, if there be, in addition to the special findings, a general finding to the contrary, the findings will be set aside as conflicting,—as was in fact done in a case involving the validity of mining locations, where it was found that "said locations were not distinctly marked on the ground, so that their boundaries could be readily traced." Howeth v. Sullenger, 113 Cal. 549, 45 Pac. 841. The question to be considered, therefore, is whether in this case the marking of the location as found was sufficient. And in considering this question it will be observed we are not confined to the monuments placed at the corners of the claim at the inception of the location for the purpose of marking it, but may consider also all other objects placed on the ground, either then or subsequently, prior to the defendants' location, either for the purpose of serving as monuments or otherwise; for all that the statute requires is that the claims be marked distinctly on the ground, without regard to the mode.

The two claims of the plaintiff, it appears from the findings, adjoin each other; the Extension being north of the Luella claim. They were each marked at the corners by four oak stakes, about a foot and a half in length, flattened on two sides, and driven into the ground four or five inches; two of the stakes being at the ends of the dividing line, and common to both claims. Some of the stakes were in the brush, others in the open ground. In the middle of the dividing line was an oak tree, blazed by the plaintiff on two sides, on which the notices of location were posted. In these the two claims were described respectively by courses and distances, running from the tree to a stake, and from stake to stake to the point of beginning. The quartz ledge had been previously discovered, and work had been done in developing it on both claims. The plaintiff also opened up and uncovered the ledge a considerable distance from the tree each way. Subsequently the ledge was further developed by three different cuts sunk deep in the rock, aggregating together over 80 feet in length. A house was built on the Luella claim, near the common boundary of the two claims, in which the plaintiff's men were living. This, I think, was sufficient, under the most stringent construction of the law (Southern Cross Gold & Silver Min. Co. v. Europe Min. Co., 15 Nev. 383); and, indeed, the case seems to come directly within the authority of Howeth v. Sullenger, 113 Cal. 548, 45 Pac. 841, cited supra. Stakes driven in the ground are, in the absence of convenient natural objects, the most common means of marking a tract of land, and "the most certain means of identification." Hammer v. Milling Co., 130 U. S. 299, 9 Sup. Ct. 551, 32 L. Ed. 967; 1 Lindl. Mines, p. 483, § 373. It may be that the marking of the claim by substantial stakes at four corners will not be of itself sufficient (Taylor v. Middleton, 67 Cal. 656, 8 Pac. 594), but here it is found that some of the stakes were in the open ground, and, as the ledge had been sufficiently developed to show its existence and direction, the boundaries of the claim could be readily traced from these. Both claims were also marked by the blazed oak, and from that alone the boundaries as given in the notice could be readily traced. The posted notices, it is said, cannot be substituted for the marking, but they "may be an aid in determining the situs of the monuments." 1 Lindl. Mines, p. 483, § 373. They therefore constitute a part of the marking, as does every other object placed on the ground for the purpose of marking it or otherwise, if it in fact does help to mark it. It may, indeed, on account of its temporary nature, be, in general, of minor significance; but this is not so where the location is followed by the actual and continued working of the claim. Jupiter Min. Co. v. Bodie Consol. Min. Co., 7 Sawy. 110, 11 Fed. 666. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff's location was good, and the findings sufficient.

This conclusion is also, in some degree, supported by other findings of the court, which are "that defendants were knowing to the above facts, and recognized the existence of said claims, but claimed that a sufficient amount of assessment work had not been performed by the plaintiff"; and that one of them "had been watching the plaintiff during the summer of 1897, to see if he did the required amount of assessment work on his claims." It appears, therefore, that the location was at least sufficient to satisfy the defendants, who alone are adversely interested, and that it thus effected the full purpose contemplated by the act. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER OURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

KERN COUNTY v. FAY et al. (L. A. 795.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1901.)

PLEADING—DEMURRER—STIPULATED FACTS—
DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S FEES—STATUTES.

1. Where a complaint alleges substantially the same facts as are later contained in a stipulation of facts of the parties on which judgment was rendered, a demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

2. Under St. 1893, p. 346, § 197, providing that the district attorney of K. county shall receive, as compensation for his services, a fixed annual salary; and section 216, prescribing that such salary shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind rendered by him as such officer,—such attorney, holding office from 1895 to 1899, was not entitled to the fee of $10 for each suit of foreclosure against delinquent purchasers of school lands, authorized by Pol. Code, § 3533, passed in 1873, in addition to his salary, since the money was collected by him in his official capacity.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the county of Kern against Alvin Fay and others. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Alvin Fay, for appellants. J. W. Ahern and S. C. Smith, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The defendant Fay was the district attorney of Kern county from the first Monday of January, 1895, to the first Monday of January, 1899, and the other defendants were sureties on his official bond, as required by law. The action is to recover the sum of $630, moneys alleged to have been collected by the defendant Fay as such district attorney, and to have been unlawfully retained by him. After a demurrer of the defendant Fay to the complaint had been overruled, he filed an answer containing a general denial of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint. For the purpose of the trial, the facts were stipulated and findings waived. The appeal is taken from the judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff on said stipulated facts. Two questions are presented by appellants on the appeal: First, it is contended that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint; second, that the evidence in said cause is insufficient to justify the decision rendered. As the complaint sets forth and alleges substantially the same facts as contained in the stipulation of the parties, the demurrer was properly overruled, if the stipulated facts are sufficient to sustain the judgment. Really, therefore, there is only one question presented, and that is whether the defendant Fay is entitled to retain the money collected by him in his official capacity as district attorney. The money in question was collected and received by defendant Fay as district attorney of Kern county, as costs taxed in suits to the number of 63 brought in the superior court of Kern county for the foreclosure of certificates of purchase of state school lands situate in said county. The register of the state land office furnished said Fay a statement embracing school lands in Kern county sold by the state upon which payments were then due and had not been paid. The said delinquents failing to make payment, said actions of foreclosure were commenced and prosecuted, and decrees rendered annulling the certificates of purchase of said lands and for costs. Said defendant thereupon presented a claim to the state board of examiners, which was allowed, in the sum of $4,053.04, costs and expenses incurred in the prosecution of said suits. This sum included an allowance as attorney's fee of $10 in each of said actions, amounting, as stated, to $630, which said defendant failed and refused to turn over with the other costs and expenses so collected.

In retaining the money in question so collected, the appellant Fay relies upon section 3553 of the Political Code, which reads as follows: "The district attorney is entitled to receive ten dollars for each suit brought, to be taxed as costs." This section is found in the article of said Code entitled "Proceedings against Delinquent Purchasers." Sections 3546-3556. The Codes went into effect the 1st of January, 1873. Some of the sections in the article in question have been amended since, but such amendments do not affect the question under consideration. In the earlier history of the state, it seems to have been the policy of the law to compensate county officials mostly, and in many cases entirely, by fees collected for the work performed. Sheriffs collected and kept the mileage earned in civil cases, and the counties paid them mileage in criminal cases. County clerks collected and retained fees for each instrument filed, each notice given, and each record or copy made. The same was true of recorders, auditors, and to some extent district attorneys. By the constitution of 1879 it was intended to make an entire change in the mode of compensating such officers for their services, and to abolish the fee system. The legislature is required by general uniform laws to provide for the election and appointment in the several counties of boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, district attorneys, and such other officers as public convenience may require. "It shall regulate the compensation of all such officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession." Const. art. 11, § 5. To carry out this mandate of the constitution, the legislature, in 1883, passed a county government act. St. 1883, p. 299. This act revised the whole subject of the duties of county officers, and provides for classifying the different counties by population for the purpose of regulating compensation. Generally speaking, the manner of compensating officers is completely changed. Fees collected go to the treasury, and officers get flat salaries. It contains some 40-odd classes. The opening paragraph of each section, at the beginning of each class, reads something like this: "In counties of the ——— class the county officers shall receive as compensation for their services required by law, or by virtue of their office, the following salaries, to wit." Several county government acts have been passed since the first, in 1883. Defendant Fay was acting as district attorney under the act passed in 1893. St. 1893, p. 346. This contains a classification of counties, as did the former acts on the same subject, and the county of Kern belongs to the thirty-fifth class. "In counties of the thirty-fifth class, the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law the following salaries, to wit." Section 197.

Then follows a list of the county officers of said class, with their respective salaries, and to the district attorneys a salary of $2,000 per annum. Section 216 reads: "The salaries and fees provided in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, either as officers, or ex officio officers; their deputies, and assistants, unless in this act otherwise provided."

As to the office of district attorney, it is nowhere otherwise provided in said act. On the other hand, in the section defining the duties of the district attorney, it is declared that he must "on the first Monday of each month file, with the auditor, an account, verified by his oath, of all moneys received by him in his official capacity during the preceding month, and at the same time pay them over to the county treasurer." County Government Act 1893, § 136 (St. 1893, p. 380). It would seem quite clear that under the provisions of the county government act of 1893 the district attorney is not permitted to retain for his own use any moneys collected by him in his official capacity; that the salary prescribed by said act is intended to compensate said officer in full for all services rendered by him. Changing the rule for compensating the district attorney so that he may not retain any fees collected to his own use does not necessarily repeal section 3553 of the Political Code in reference to the costs, including an attorney's fee, collectible in suits of the character that were prosecuted in this case. It would be immaterial, however, whether that section were repealed or not. The money in this case was collected by appellant Fay in his official capacity as district attorney, and he cannot now be heard to say that it was paid to him illegally, and that he therefore has a right to retain it. *People v. HOLT v. HOLT et al. (L. A. 943.)

PARTITION OF REAL PROPERTY—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE—FINAL ORDER—APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, providing that an appeal may be taken to the supreme court from an interlocutory judgment in an action for partition which determines the interests of the parties; and Id. § 956, declaring that on appeal from a judgment the court may review any intermediate decision which involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision from which an appeal might have been taken,—on an appeal from a final order in an action for partition, taken more than six months after the entry of an interlocutory decree therein, the court cannot consider the sufficiency of the complaint, or order overruling a demurrer thereto, since those matters were concluded by the interlocutory decree, and could have been considered on an appeal therefrom.

2. Where, on an appeal from a final order in an action for partition of real property, no objection is urged to the only matters determined by such order, the order should be affirmed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by William W. Holt against Frances M. Holt and others. From an order confirming the sale of the common property, and fixing the amount of the attorney's and referee's fees, the defendant Frances M. Holt appeals. Affirmed.

Hester & Ladd, for appellant. Chas. L. Batcheller and E. E. Bacon, for respondents.

GRAY, C. This is an action in partition in which the complaint alleges that the plaintiff, Holt, and the defendant Frances M. Holt, are tenants in common, each having an estate of inheritance to the extent of one undivided half of the whole of the fee in a certain described lot in the city of Los Angeles, and that defendant Frances Bacon has a mortgage lien on the said interest of Frances M. Holt to the extent of $500, besides interest. The action was commenced January 6, 1899, a general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, an answer filed, and a trial had, followed by an interlocutory decree of partition made on May 25, 1899, and filed on the 27th of the same month. This decree adjudicated and determined the rights and interests of the several parties to the suit in the lot in question, found that a partition could not be had without great prejudice to the owners, and ordered that a sale be made by the referees named in the decree, and the proceeds thereof be applied by said referees (1) to the payment of the general costs, including cost of abstract and attorney's fees; (2) to payment of costs of references and sale therein; (3) that the residue be paid to the several parties to the suit, the specific part that each should receive being fully stated in the decree. The court in this decree specially reserved its finding and order as to the amount of attorney's fees to be allowed until the making of its final decree. Subsequently a sale was made under this decree to the respondent Frank Jackson, and thereafter an order confirming said sale was duly made by the court, and filed on the 6th day of January, 1900. In this order the attorney's fees were fixed at $100, and referee's fees at $30. This appeal is from the last-mentioned order, which is referred to in the notice of appeal as "the final judgment and decree therein entered in the said superior court on the 6th day of January, 1900." The notice of appeal was filed and the appeal taken on April 20, 1900, more than 60 days after the entry of the order appealed from, and more than 6 months after the entry of the said interlocutory decree.

The only reasons urged for a reversal on this appeal are: (1) The complaint does not state sufficient facts, and the demurrer to it should have been sustained; (2) the court failed to find, upon the issue tendered in appellant's answer, as to her right to a homestead upon the said property. These questions cannot be considered upon this appeal.

The objection urged against the complaint is that it fails to set forth specifically and particularly the origin, nature, and extent of the interests of the several parties in the property described in the complaint. The nature and extent of the several interests were set forth in the complaint, and if the complaint was not sufficiently specific in the respects stated, and the court had improperly overruled the demurrer, such action could be reviewed only on appeal from the interlocutory decree of partition; for that decree is a final judgment, certainly, as to all questions determined in it (Hammond v. Cailleaud, 111 Cal. 206, 43 Pac. 607); and whether the order here appealed from be treated as an order made after final judgment, or as itself a final judgment, it is plain that the decree of partition cannot be reviewed, because an appeal might have been taken from such decree (Code Civ. Proc. § 963), and any intermediate decision that might have been appealed from cannot be reviewed on this appeal (Id. § 956). For reasons apparent from the foregoing argument, we are also precluded from here reviewing or deciding anything as to the issue concerning the homestead.

This appeal cannot be treated as taken from the decree of partition, for the notice of appeal was filed after the time limited by statute for taking such an appeal. In the interlocutory decree of partition the question of attorney's fee was specially reserved for future consideration, and that matter was for the first time adjudicated in the order here appealed from. We may therefore treat such order as a final judgment as to the attorney's fee, at least, and in that view of the matter, as nothing is urged against said fee, we think the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

INSOLVENCY—DISCHARGE—JURISDICTION—GENERAL APPEARANCE.

Where a creditor has appeared generally in the insolvency proceedings, filed its claim, and voluntarily or in response to some notice appeared and opposed the application of the insolvent for her discharge, it should not be heard to object to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that certain affidavits of publication of notices throughout the proceedings were insufficient to show that the court acquired jurisdiction.

Application of Emily C. Yoell, an insolvent, for a discharge. From an order granting her discharge, a creditor appeals. Affirmed.

Jackson Hatch, for appellant. D. W. Burchard, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Emily C. Yoell petitioned for and obtained her discharge in insolvency. Written opposition to her discharge was filed by certain creditors who had proved their debts, upon the sole ground that the insolvent had concealed a part of her estate. At the hearing no testimony was offered in support of this ground of opposition, but the attorney for one of the contesting creditors opposed the discharge upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction in the court, for that certain affidavits proving publication of notices throughout the proceedings were insufficient to show that the court had acquired jurisdiction. But this particular creditor here appealing appeared in the insolvency proceedings, filed its claim in due and proper form, and later, either voluntarily or in response to some notice, again appeared and filed its written opposition to the granting of the insolvent's petition for discharge. In all this no objection was taken or suggested as to any deficiency in the notices. Having thus made its general appearance and become an actor in the insolvency proceedings, we think it may not now be heard to urge this ground in opposition. Pomeroy v. Gregory, 66 Cal.

MARTIN v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 2,243.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1901.)

APPEAL—LACHES—DISMISSAL.

The dismissal of an action on the ground of laches in the prosecution thereof will not be disturbed on appeal, where no abuse of discretion is shown.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Eleanor Martin, administratrix, etc., against the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for defendant dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. W. & E. B. Holladay and D. P. Belknap, for appellant. Franklin K. Lane, City Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The action involves the title to a tract of land in San Francisco held by the defendant for public purposes. The complaint was filed in 1872, and the answer thereto was filed in 1873. In December, 1875, upon the petition of the plaintiff, the cause was removed to the United States circuit court, and in October, 1887, was remanded to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. No further steps therein were taken by either party to the action until June 28, 1899, when a motion was made on behalf of the defendant to dismiss the same upon the ground of laches and want of prosecution on the part of the plaintiff. The motion came on for hearing August 18th, at which time certain affidavits and other documentary evidence in support thereof were read, and, after argument by counsel, the court made its order granting the motion, and thereupon entered judgment dismissing the action. From this judgment the plaintiff has taken the present appeal, and in support thereof urges that the dismissal of the action was without the authority of the court. The authority of the superior court to dismiss an action, on the ground of laches on the part of the plaintiff in prosecuting the same, has been frequently exercised, and, unless it is made to appear that there was a gross abuse of discretion

In making such dismissal, its action will not be disturbed in this court. The matter was very fully considered in People v. Jefferts, 126 Cal. 296, 58 Pac. 704, and more recently in Nicol v. City & County of San Francisco (Cal.) 62 Pac. 513. Upon the authority of these cases, the judgment herein is affirmed.

BAKER v. BORELLO et al. (Sac. 871.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 19, 1901.)

PRACTICE AND PLEADING—MODIFYING INSTRUCTIONS—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—AMENDMENT—JURISDICTION.

1. Where the court modified an instruction requested by the defendants before giving it to the jury, but did not import therein any error prejudicial to the defendants, the defendants could not object to it.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court, in its discretion, may allow an amendment to any pleading or proceeding, does not authorize the superior court to amend a bill of exceptions which had been settled and used on a motion for a new trial before an appeal had been taken from the order denying the motion, since after appeal the court was deprived of jurisdiction, and could not change the record on which it acted in denying the motion.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; E. R. Rector, Judge.

Action by Joshua Baker against F. M. Borello and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Knox and P. F. Dunne, for appellants. J. F. McSwain, J. F. Peck, F. G. Ostrander, and F. W. Henderson, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendants in this case appeal from an order denying a new trial. The respondent makes a preliminary motion to correct the record of the proceedings in the superior court. The facts are that the defendants, in support of their application for a new trial, served a draft of their proposed bill of exceptions, which showed that the trial judge of his own motion had given a certain instruction, numbered 18, to the giving of which they had duly excepted. The proposed bill also contained a special assignment of error upon the giving of instruction numbered 18. In this particular the bill of exceptions was settled and allowed by the trial judge, Hon. J. K. Law, in substance as proposed by defendants, and was filed April 27, 1900. The motion for a new trial was submitted to Judge Minor on June 28th and denied on July 2d. Defendants appealed July 14th, filed the transcript in this court August 22d, and on October 11th filed and served their brief, in which they presented their assignment of error upon the giving of said instruction. The attention of the respondent seems then to have been drawn for the first time to this feature of the bill of exceptions, and soon afterwards, and within six months from the settlement of the bill, he commenced proceedings to amend the record so as to make it appear that the instruction of which the appellants are complaining was really given at their request, and not volunteered by the court. After considerable delay, occasioned by a change of incumbents in the office of superior judge, an order was made by Judge Rector on January 15, 1901, correcting the bill substantially in accordance with the motion of the respondent; that is to say, it appears from the order of Judge Rector that the defendants presented the instruction to Judge Law—the trial judge—with a request that it be given, but it was not given in precisely the form in which it was requested. Before giving it, Judge Law struck out one or two words, and altered one sentence slightly, but without changing its meaning or effect. The only tendency of the alterations made by him was to make the instruction somewhat less open to the objection now urged against it than it was as originally requested by the defendants. Because of this modification of the instruction by the court before giving it, the appellants contend, in opposition to this motion,—that the statement contained in the bill of exceptions as proposed was true,—that the instruction given was not the instruction they asked, but an instruction volunteered by the court; and upon this point they cite Morgan v. Peet, 32 Ill. 281, where it was decided that the party asking an instruction may except to the giving of such instruction with an addition which is prejudicial to him, and is not law. I should not doubt the correctness of that decision, but it does not fit this case. This bill of exceptions, as corrected, shows that defendants asked a certain instruction, and that the court gave it in a slightly modified form. Their right to object to it therefore depends upon whether the changes made by the trial judge imported into it some new and distinct error prejudicial to them, as in the Illinois case. We cannot see that any such change was wrought in the instruction, but, if there was, they have their exception to the modification, and that matter could be considered when the appeal is heard upon its merits. In the meantime the action of the trial court in modifying, before giving, the instruction, is no obstacle to making the record speak the exact truth. We are brought, then, to the question whether it was competent for the superior court to correct this bill of exceptions after the entry of the order denying a new trial, and an appeal to this court, and the filing of the record here. This bill of exceptions being the basis of the motion for a new trial, and the record upon which the order overruling that motion rests, can it be changed without first setting aside that order, and can that order be set aside by the superior court after it has been appealed to this court? We have no doubt that a bill of exceptions or statement which has been settled after appeal taken may be corrected by a proper proceeding under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., commenced, as this was, within six months after the settlement, for in such cases the superior court is empowered to settle the bill or statement—i. e. to complete the record—after, and for the purposes of, the appeal. Flynn v. Cottle, 47 Cal. 526; Sprigg v. Barber, 118 Cal. 592, 50 Pac. 682; In re Lamb's Estate, 95 Cal. 408, 30 Pac. 568. But a bill of exceptions, prepared and settled beforehand, to be used in support of a motion for a new trial, after the denial of the motion and an appeal therefrom presents a different question. We are of the opinion that in such case the record cannot be amended, and this for reasons which, though technical, are nevertheless conclusive. The appeal deprives the superior court of jurisdiction to set aside its order denying the new trial, and while that order is in force the record upon which it is based cannot be changed, and this court must review the order upon the same record upon which it was made. Hayne, New Trial & App. § 160, and cases cited. It has been held—and, we have no doubt, correctly held—that, where a new trial has been granted by an order improvidently or prematurely made before the record was properly settled and certified, this court, upon reversal of the order, may remand the cause for further and orderly proceedings upon the motion (Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331; Thomas v. Sullivan, 11 Nev. 280); but this rule of practice does not meet the exigencies of this case. What was said obiter in Grand Grove U. A. O. D. v. Garibaldi Grove No. 71, U. A. O. D. (Cal.) 62 Pac. 486, cannot be applied as a universal rule, but only to those cases in which the power of amendment has not been lost. The motion to amend is denied.

MERRILL v. PACIFIC TRANSFER CO.

(S. F. 1,453.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1901.)

CARRIERS—RECEIPT FOR GOODS—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY—KNOWLEDGE OF TERMS—STATUTES—INSTRUCTIONS—NEGLIGENCE—PROVINCE OF JURY—PLEADING—ALLEGATION OF DAMAGES.

1. Where the complaint in an action against a transportation company for the loss of a trunk alleged that defendant lost the trunk, and set forth its value, and that defendant had refused to pay the same, and defendant set up a special contract limiting its liability, and offered to submit to a judgment for a certain sum, an objection after verdict that the complaint was insufficient, in that it failed to allege damages, was without merit.

2. Civ. Code, § 2176, declares that a passenger or consignor, by accepting a contract for carriage, with knowledge of its terms, assents to any limitation of liability stated therein; and section 19 declares that every person who has notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry has constructive notice, where by prosecuting inquiry he might have learned them. Held that, in an action for the loss of a trunk, it was error to refuse to charge that if, when a receipt which limited the carrier's liability was delivered to plaintiff, the circumstances were such that a prudent man would have read the limitation as to liability, then he had notice thereof, and that it would not excuse him to say that he did not read the notice of limitation.

3. Where, in an action for the loss of a trunk, the court erroneously refused to charge that it was for the jury to say whether plaintiff had constructive knowledge of the limitation of liability contained in a receipt given him, such error was not harmless, on the ground that the evidence showed gross negligence on the part of the carrier, from which it cannot be exempted from liability under Civ. Code, § 2175; the question of gross negligence not having been submitted to the jury.

4. In an action against a transportation company for the loss of a trunk, it was error to admit testimony as to expenditures by plaintiff for wearing apparel, as leading the jury to consider such expenditures outside of the value of the contents of the trunk.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Charles Merrill against the Pacific Transfer Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. P. Langhorne, for appellant. Samuel Knight, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action is brought by plaintiff, assignee of his wife, to recover from the defendant, a common carrier, damages for its failure to deliver a trunk and its contents. In its answer defendant denied that the loss of the trunk was occasioned through its negligence, and further, as a special defense, pleaded a contract for the carriage of the trunk by which the limitation of liability for its loss was $100, and offered to allow plaintiff to take judgment for $100 in compensation for his injury. The case was tried before the court and a jury, and a verdict rendered in plaintiff's favor for $950. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and from the judgment and from the order so denying its motion it prosecutes this appeal.

The point was made in the lower court upon the motion for a new trial, and is pressed in this court, that the complaint was not sufficient to sustain the judgment, in that it fails to allege that plaintiff has sustained damages. But, however inartificially it may have been drawn in this respect, that pleading sufficiently charges the failure of defendant to deliver the trunk in accordance with its contract, and avers that by its gross negligence and that of its servants it lost the trunk, sets forth the reasonable value of the trunk and of its contents, pleads that defendant, though requested to pay the value of the same, has refused to do so, and prays judgment in the sum of $950. Defendant by its answer treated this as a sufficient pleading, made denial of the material allegations, set up the special contract, and offered, as has been said, to permit plaintiff to take judgment in the sum of $100. The case throughout was tried upon the theory that issue was joined upon these matters, and that the pleadings sufficiently declared upon the issues. It is too late, after verdict found and judgment rendered, to raise the point. Horn v. Hamilton, 89 Cal. 276, 26 Pac. 833. There was not here an absence of a material averment. It was the case of a material averment defectively pleaded, and, while the point might have been well taken upon special demurrer, we think the objection may not now be heard. City and County of San Francisco v. Pennie, 93 Cal. 465, 29 Pac. 66; Thompson v. De Kum (Or.) 52 Pac. 517.

The undisputed facts disclosed at the trial were that Mr. Merrill, coming to San Francisco, delivered to the agent of the defendant transfer company certain brass baggage checks or tokens, with the understanding that the baggage called for by them was to be delivered at his house in San Francisco. The agent in return gave to Mr. Merrill a paper upon which, with printed matter, were written the check numbers, the name and address of Mr. Merrill, and the signature of the agent. This paper, over the signature of the agent, contained the following: "Read following conditions of this contract. This company will not become liable for loss of or injury to merchandise, money, or jewelry contained in baggage in any event, nor for an amount exceeding one hundred dollars upon any trunk and contents, or twenty-five dollars upon any valise or package and contents, unless specially agreed for in writing. If these conditions are not acceptable, notify agent, otherwise the party accepting this contract of carriage is bound thereby." The plaintiff, receiving the receipt, read the address to see if it was correct, and read the penciled memoranda. He read nothing else upon it. He was familiar with the usual method of the transaction of the business of the transfer company, had traveled a good deal, and had always been in the habit of giving his checks to and taking a receipt from the agent of the transportation company. It was light enough to read. There was time enough for him to have read the printed portion, but he could not with certainty have done so without using his eyeglasses. He did not, however, think to read it or attempt to read it. He put the receipt in his pocket. He does not recollect that he ever read the printed portion of any receipt. He read the printed portion of this one only after the trunk was lost. He did not know that there were conditions on the receipt. He regarded it merely as a receipt,—as the only thing he had to connect him with his baggage. He paid the price usually charged, which was 50 cents for each trunk. The trunk with other parcels of baggage, was sent by the company in one of its wagons for delivery after nightfall. There was only one man in charge of the wagon. He, of necessity, in delivering baggage was compelled to leave his wagon standing in the street, unwatched and unattended. On returning to it after making delivery of a piece of baggage, he observed that the trunk had been stolen. He delivered the other parcels at the Merrill residence, stating that this particular trunk had been overlooked and would be delivered later. He did not announce the theft, fearing that he would be detained and delayed, and thus prevented from catching a certain train to which he was under orders to deliver baggage.

Appellant complains of certain instructions given and refused by the court. Section 2176 of the Civil Code provides that "a passenger, consignor, or consignee, by accepting a ticket, bill of lading, or written contract for carriage, with a knowledge of its terms, assents to the rate of hire, the time, place, and manner of delivery therein stated; and also to the limitation stated therein upon the amount of the carrier's liability in case property carried in packages, trunks, or boxes, is lost or injured, when the value of such property is not named; and also to the limitation stated therein to the carrier's liability for loss or injury to live animals carried. But his assent to any other modification of the carrier's obligations contained in such instrument can be manifested only by his signature to the same." Defendant proposed an instruction as follows: "In regard to the so-called receipt given by defendant's agent to Mr. John F. Merrill, acting for Mrs. Merrill, it is claimed by plaintiff that it was received by Mr. John F. Merrill without notice of its terms or of the limitation of liability printed thereon. Now, in regard to what constitutes notice, I instruct you that notice may be either actual or constructive. Notice is actual when it consists in express information of a fact, and constructive when imputed by law. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned such fact. Accordingly, if you find that when the receipt in question was delivered by defendant's agents to Mr. John F. Merrill, acting for Mrs. Merrill, the circumstances of which Mr. Merrill had actual notice were such that a prudent man could and would have read the limitation as to liability in said receipt, then I instruct you that in law Mr. John F. Merrill, as agent of Mrs. Merrill, had due notice of such limitation of defendant's liability, and that it is no excuse of Mr. John F. Merrill to say that he did not then read said limitation of liability, if he had free opportunity to do so." This instruction was refused; the court basing its refusal upon its construction of section 2176 of the Civil Code, which it held to mean that the passenger must have actual knowledge of the terms of the alleged contract, or his acceptance of it did not bind him. It is observed that the instruction is framed upon the theory that if Mr. Merrill, by all the circumstances of the case, was put upon notice of the terms of the contract, he was, in accepting it, bound by them.

Coming to the law of the matter, section 18 of the Civil Code provides that notice is actual which consists of express information of a fact, and constructive which is imputed by law; and section 19, that every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which by prosecuting inquiry he might have learned such fact. Mr. Merrill denied that he had actual knowledge of the limited liability clause of the contract. If actual knowledge alone would bind him, as was the theory of the trial court, the instruction was properly refused. The question is new in this state, but in New York, where it has frequently arisen, it has been uniformly held that the determination whether, under all the circumstances, the passenger was chargeable with knowledge under the doctrine of notice, actual or constructive, was for the jury, and that it is not sufficient for the passenger to disclaim actual knowledge. Thus, in Madan v. Sherard, 73 N. Y. 335, it is said: "The fact that the receipt was printed in large type, and could be easily read; that it was received in the daytime, or when there was sufficient light to enable the traveler to read it; that he was acquainted with the methods of the business,—these and other facts may be shown, not as conclusive against a recovery, but as bearing upon the ultimate fact to be proven, that the plaintiff when he accepted the receipt knew of its limitations, or that it contained special terms for the carriage of the property." So, again, in Kirkland v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 171, it is said: "He [the passenger] cannot escape from the terms of a contract, in the absence of fraud or imposition, because he negligently omitted to read it; and, when the other party has a right to infer his assent, he will be precluded from denying it to the other's injury. The plaintiff is, we think, in that position. The contract was one which the parties might lawfully make. The defendant had a right to infer from the plaintiff's acceptance of the receipt without dissent that he assented to its terms. Now, after a loss has occurred, it is too late to object that he is not bound. If he had objected at the time, the defendant would have been entitled to exact as a condition of carrying the parcel a compensation equivalent to the risk of insurers. The circumstances imposed upon the plaintiff a duty to read the receipt." Such, without further multiplying citation or quotation, is the true principle. Objection is made by respondent that "knowledge" is not synonymous with

"notice," and this is certainly true to the extent, at least, that the two words are not always interchangeable in meaning. "Notice," in one sense, means the legal instrumentality by which knowledge is conveyed, or by which one is charged with knowledge. One having knowledge that he is a defendant in a suit is not bound to appear until there has been brought home to him the legal instrumentality of knowledge, a proper notice. But, upon the other hand, where the Code speaks of actual and constructive notice, it means no more than that under the indicated circumstances a man is legally chargeable with knowledge. It is too narrow a view of section 2176 of the Civil Code, therefore, to hold that the passenger can be charged with the conditions of the contract only by a showing of his actual knowledge of them. The knowledge itself may be imputed to him by conduct. The instruction in question was therefore improperly refused; for it was with the jury to say whether, under all the circumstances as disclosed by the evidence, Mr. Merrill had the actual or constructive notice or knowledge contemplated by the law.

But respondent makes further answer that even if the court erred in its theory of the law of the case, and consequently in its refusal to give the offered instruction, the error was harmless, because the evidence conclusively shows that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence, and that, therefore, even if the passenger had knowledge of the limiting clause of the contract, it would not exempt the defendant in this case from the full measure of his liability for loss, because of the fact that the loss was occasioned by its own gross negligence. In this, reliance is had upon section 2175 of the Civil Code, to the effect that a common carrier cannot be exonerated by any agreement made in anticipation thereof from liability for the gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong of himself or his servants. Such, unquestionably, is the law of this state. Pierce v. Southern Pac. Co., 120 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 874, 52 Pac. 302. But the question whether or not the common carrier was guilty of gross negligence was in the first instance one for the jury to pass upon, under proper instructions from the court; and this court may not be asked to usurp this function of the jury, and thus decide a question which has never been submitted to them.

It appears, therefore, that a new trial in this case must be ordered. In contemplation of such new trial only one further point demands consideration. The evidence offered and admitted in reference to the expenditure by Mrs. Merrill of the sum of $300 for wearing apparel should have been excluded. It could not have tended to enlighten the jury as to the actual damage which was suffered by the loss of the trunk, and it might well have tended to confuse them and mislead them into the belief that her expenditures in replacing wearing apparel, apart from and outside of the value of the contents of the trunk, were to be considered by them in assessing damages. The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 556 v. THISBY.
(Sac. 720.)

SAME v. THISBY et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1901.)

NEW TRIAL—MOTION—NOTICE OF INTENTION —SUFFICIENCY—PREMATURE NOTICE—
TRIAL BY COURT—APPEAL.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 659, declares that a notice of intention to move for a new trial shall be filed within 10 days after notice of the decision of the court, when the action is tried without a jury, and within the same time after verdict when tried by a jury. Held, that where special issues submitted to a jury formed only a portion of the controversy, and the remaining issues were tried by the court, and on its findings of fact, together with the answers of the jury, the judgment was rendered, a notice of intention filed before the decision of the court, but within 10 days after the answers of the jury, was premature, as the action was one tried by the court.

2. Where, on an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the bill of exceptions showed that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was insufficient, in that it was prematurely filed, a statement in the bill that appellants had served and filed notices of their intention to move for a new trial within the time allowed by law did not cure the defect, such statement being but a legal conclusion.

3. While the notice of intention to move for a new trial forms no part of the record on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, yet where the bill of exceptions shows that the notice of intention was insufficient, and it does not appear that respondent has waived such objection by accepting service of either the notice of intention or of the proposed statement and bill of exceptions, or that it suggested any amendment thereto, or was present at the settlement, the order would be affirmed.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; Joseph W. Hughes, Judge.

Actions by reclamation district No. 556 against Mrs. R. Thisby and others. From orders denying motions for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hiram W. Johnson, Grove L. Johnson, and Johnson, Linforth & Whitaker, for appellants. M. S. Wahrhaftag and A. L. Shinn, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff seeks by these actions to condemn a right of way over a strip of land belonging to the defendants for the purpose of constructing thereon a levee and canal. The two actions were tried together as a single cause, and have been presented here in a single record, and upon the same argument. Certain issues were submitted to a jury, and its verdict thereon adopted by the court, and additional findings were made upon other issues. Upon these findings the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and afterwards denied the defendants' motions for a new trial. From these orders the defendants have appealed. No appeal has been taken from the judgments.

The sufficiency of the complaint or of the findings to support the judgment, or the right of the plaintiff to maintain the actions, cannot be considered upon an appeal from the orders denying a new trial. Brisson v. Brisson, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186. The respondent contends that the order of the superior court must be sustained upon the ground that it was without jurisdiction to entertain the motion for a new trial, inasmuch as no proper notice of an intention to make such motion had been given. Although certain special issues were submitted to a jury, these issues formed only a portion of the controversy between the parties to the actions, and the remaining issues were tried by the court, and findings of fact made by it thereon, upon which, together with the answers of the jury to the questions submitted to them, the court rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The "actions" were, therefore, tried by the court, and, under section 659, Code Civ. Proc., until the court had rendered its decision, it was not competent for either party to give notice of its intention to move for a new trial. The notices of intention to move for a new trial were given and filed November 1, 1897, while the decision by the court was not made until April 21, 1898. These notices were within 10 days after the jury had given their answers to the special issues submitted to them, but, as the "actions" were not tried by a jury, the notices were premature, and gave to the court no power to act upon the motion which should thereafter be made under the notices. Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126; Bell v. Marsh, 80 Cal. 411, 22 Pac. 170. No judgment could have been rendered in the case at the time the jury rendered its verdict, and the trial of the action was not concluded until the court had rendered its "decision" upon all of the issues submitted to it. "A case has not been tried until all the issues have been disposed of, and there has been no decision until the court has passed upon the facts, and drawn its conclusions of law therefrom." Bell v. Marsh, supra; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 1074; Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 211. The rule of procedure for causes tried by the court is the same whether they are cases in equity or actions at law. Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial does not form part of the record on appeal, and need not be incorporated in the statement therefor (Pico v. Cohn, 78 Cal. 384, 20 Pac. 706); and it has been held, for the purpose of sustaining the action of the court below, that, where the record is silent upon the subject, it will be assumed that the notice was given within the proper time (Patrick v. Morse, 64 Cal. 462, 2 Pac. 49); yet if the notice is in fact set forth in the statement or bill of exceptions, and it appears therefrom that it was either insufficient or not given within the proper time, it then becomes necessary for the appellant to have it appear by the record that this defect was overcome or waived. There is nothing in the record herein from which it can be held that the respondent waived this objection to hearing the motion for a new trial, and it may be assumed, in support of the order, that it was made in consideration of the fact that the proper notice had not been given. The statement in the bill of exceptions that the appellants served and filed the notices of their intention to move for a new trial "within the time allowed by law" is but a legal conclusion, and is overcome by the fact that the date of such service and filing is itself given in the bill of exceptions. It does not appear that the respondent accepted service of either the notice of intention, or of the proposed statement and bill of exceptions, or that it suggested any amendments thereto, or was present at the settlement. See Dominguez v. Mascotti, 74 Cal. 269, 15 Pac. 773. The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HILTEL (Cr. 686.)

ARSON — JURISDICTION — INDORSING COMPLAINT AS FILED—EVIDENCE—FIRING ADJACENT BUILDING—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFINITIONS — WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY — PROOF.

1. Under Pen. Code, § 811, providing that, where an information of the commission of a public offense is laid before a magistrate, he must examine the informant and any witness he may produce, etc., the omission of a magistrate to indorse on a complaint for arson the fact that such complaint was filed did not deprive the magistrate of jurisdiction of the case.

2. A dwelling and two outhouses were destroyed by fire, which was first seen breaking through the roof of one of the latter, which had been locked a short time before, and the key thereof hid in the dwelling. When the first neighbor arrived, defendant was coming from behind one of the outhouses. The fire in the dwelling was then breaking through an interior partition. Defendant made no effort to extinguish the flames till after neighbors arrived, and no cry of help or of fire had been heard. Defendant, whose wife owned the house, was the only one seen around when the fire broke out. He had been greatly excited shortly before, and was very angry at his wife, who intended getting a divorce. Defendant testified that he had lain on the bed about 8 o'clock, was soon asleep, and was awakened by the outhouse fire, but said nothing about the fire in the dwelling. The fire was discovered shortly after 8 o'clock, and had then been burning for some time. Held, that the evidence warranted a conviction of arson against the defendant.

3. Where a dwelling and two outhouses were so close together that the burning of one must have resulted in the destruction of the others, it was competent in a prosecution for burning the dwelling to show that the three buildings were fired simultaneously.

4. Where the court instructed the jury that, though they could not find the defendant guilty of arson for burning a wine cellar which he was not charged with burning, still if they found that he set fire to the wine cellar willfully and maliciously, beyond a reasonable doubt, and that it was so close to the dwelling that the burning of the former must necessarily cause and did cause the dwelling to take fire and be consumed, this would constitute arson, there was no error.

5. Where the trial court, in a prosecution for arson, was not requested to define circumstantial evidence to the jury, it was not error to omit to do so.

6. A requested instruction, in a prosecution for arson, that the jury should give the same weight to defendant's testimony as they would give to that of any other witness, was properly refused.

7. A requested instruction, in a prosecution for arson, that intent was a material ingredient in every crime, and must be proved by positive evidence, was properly refused.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; E. D. Ham, Judge.

John Hittel was convicted of arson, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Webber, C. H. Beerstecher, and Weber & Rutherford, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendant was convicted on an information charging him with the crime of arson. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. When brought into court to plead, defendant moved to set aside the information on the ground that no complaint was ever filed against him, and that the warrant of arrest was issued without authority of law, and the magistrate had no authority to inquire into the charge laid in the information. It was admitted that a complaint was made and sworn to before a justice of the peace, who certified to the fact in the usual way; that the justice entered in his docket the fact that the complaint was filed; thereafter he issued the warrant of arrest, and defendant appeared in person and by counsel, and the complaint was read to him, whereupon he said he was ready to proceed with the hearing, and the hearing was had, witnesses being sworn for the people, and defendant was held to answer, the order being indorsed on the back of the complaint. There was no indorsement showing that the complaint was filed, and it is urged that this omission left the magistrate without jurisdiction, and was fatal to any proceedings by the trial court. The provisions of the Penal Code are found in chapter 4, and in section 811 the duties of the magistrate are pointed out. It is nowhere required that the complaint shall be marked "Filed," although the magistrate should so mark it for purposes of identification, if for no other reason. In the case here there is no question as to the identity of the complaint, and that defendant had it read to him, and was committed upon it after due hearing. The jurisdiction of the magistrate did not depend upon his having first marked the complaint "Filed." It was sworn to before him, and was entered "Filed" in his docket, was left with him, and upon it he issued the warrant of arrest. This was sufficient to give him jurisdiction.

2. Defendant contends that the evidence did not support the verdict. There is evidence that defendant and his wife lived unhappily together; that he was given to drink, and abused his wife to such extent as to make her life with him insupportable, and proceedings for divorce had either been commenced by her or were in contemplation. Some years prior to the alleged arson there had been a separation, and defendant conveyed to his wife property he owned in the country, about two miles from Calistoga, he retaining certain saloon property in the town. On the 12th of June, 1900, the family resided on this country property, and consisted of defendant, his wife, son, and daughter, the children being both over age. A few days previous to the above date defendant had so ill treated his wife as to compel her to go to a near neighbor's for shelter and protection. Towards evening of the 12th defendant went in search of his wife. He first called at John Maunder's, one-half mile from defendant's home, about 7 o'clock. Maunder testified: "He wanted to know if his wife was there. I told him 'No,' and he said she had not been home for three days. I said I didn't know anything about it. Well, he says, 'My God,' he says, 'I mean to fix this business before to-morrow night.' He was angry, and very excited. That was about three-quarters of an hour before the fire. * * * He said further that they had done him out of $2,500 within the last three weeks. I said: 'How is that? What is that?' Well, he says, 'Out of all the machinery and cooperage.'" He next went to M. S. Boland's, about one-quarter of a mile from defendant's home, where his wife had taken refuge. Boland testified that when he came there he was very mad, accused Boland of improper relations with defendant's wife, and applied opprobrious epithets to Boland, whereupon the latter compelled him to leave the premises. Boland testified that defendant "was very excited and angry; comparatively sober." This was between 7 and 8 o'clock. Defendant then returned to his own place. Defendant's son testified that he and his sister left their father at their house to go to a party at some neighbor's about 20 minutes before 8 o'clock. The son testified that he spoke with his father just before leaving, and that his father was very much excited, and called him and his mother and Boland vile names. In the rear of the dwelling, and about 12 or 15 feet distant, was a frame structure called the "wine cellar," in which was stored some machinery, the cooperage referred to by defendant, some wine, fruit, and other articles. A tank house stood about 33 feet from the dwelling. All three buildings were constructed of wood, and in the tank house was a stove and some family supplies. When the son left to attend the party, he locked the front door of the dwelling house, leaving the door in the rear open, and defendant was then in the dwelling. He also locked the side door of the wine cellar, having first bolted on the inside the only other door leading into the building, and hid the key in the dwelling. The door of the tank house was left unfastened. The son testified that his father told him "several times that we never would make no wine in those cooperage, and he knew my mother was going to have a separation—that is, a divorce—before long." Witness Bennett lived about 70 rods from defendant's place. He passed defendant's house in a wagon about 8 o'clock the evening of the 12th, and saw a light in the tank house, but nowhere else. On reaching his home, and while unhitching his horses, his attention was attracted by a bright light in the direction of defendant's house, and, looking, discovered that fire was breaking through the roof of the wine cellar. It was, he thought, about 15 minutes past 8 o'clock. He ran to defendant's place. He heard no noise coming from the Hiltel premises. When he first got there he ran close to the house, and a dog came out at him. That was the first noise he heard. He went to the tank house to find a hose, and get some water to put out the fire. He testified: "I couldn't find any buckets, and directly Mr. Hiltel stepped out from behind the tank house, and I got some cans and threw three or four cans of water onto the shed adjoining onto the house near the cellar." Defendant was fully dressed, except his coat was off. Witness went into the tank house, and also into the kitchen and dining room. These buildings he describes as full of smoke. In the dwelling a fire was breaking through one of the interior partitions, tending to show that it could not have started from the wine cellar fire, and so were the indications as to the fire in the tank house. Several neighbors came soon after Bennett arrived, and, while there is some difference in their testimony, the result of the evidence was that all three buildings seem to have been fired by some one or more persons nearly simultaneously. Some of the witnesses were of the opinion that the dwelling was destroyed by the fire communicated from the wine cellar; others saw the fire in the dwelling before the outside caught from the cellar, and testified that it was not put out, and would have destroyed the house. The evidence was that up to the time the first neighbor arrived defendant had made no effort to extinguish the flames in any of the buildings, and none of the neighbors heard any cry of fire or for help. After they arrived, defendant assisted in removing articles from the house. Defendant testified in his own behalf. His statement was that he took his coat off and laid down on the bed about 8 o'clock, and soon fell asleep, and was awakened by the light shining from the tank fire through the window of his bedroom. He made no explanation of the fire issuing from the partition in the house, and which had filled it with smoke by the time Bennett arrived. It is highly improbable that a stranger to the premises could have set fire to all three houses in the interior of each in so short a time without attracting defendant's attention. All the neighbors agree that the fire occurred shortly after 8 o'clock, and, as it must have burned some minutes before attracting their attention, it would follow that the fire must have originated before defendant says he laid down and slept. Without stating other evidence tending to support the verdict, we think enough appeared to warrant the jury in fixing the guilt upon defendant.

3. The testimony as to Mrs. Hiltel being the owner of the premises on which the fire occurred was admissible. The land was fully identified as the same as that conveyed to defendant by deed, and by him deeded to his wife. It was competent to show what the wine cellar contained, and to show that the cellar and the tank house and dwelling were apparently fired simultaneously, although the information charged defendant with burning the dwelling, and did not include the other two buildings. There was evidence tending to show that the dwelling would inevitably have been destroyed from the fire in the cellar, and likewise the tank house. They were so close to each other that the burning of any one would warrant the belief that all would inevitably perish, especially as there were no appliances to extinguish the fire, and the distance from the neighbors would make it out of the question for them to reach the scene in time to be of much, if any, avail.

The court—properly, we think—instructed the jury that, while they could not find the defendant guilty of arson for burning the wine cellar, inasmuch as he was not charged with having caused the burning of this particular building, still if they should find from the evidence, beyond any reasonable doubt, that he set fire to the wine cellar willfully and maliciously, and that it “was situate so close to the building alleged in the information as having been burned by defendant, as that the burning of said wine cellar necessarily caused, and did then and there cause, the flames from said wine cellar to be communicated to said house charged * * * as having been burned by defendant, and that said fire was thus communicated from said wine cellar to said alleged house alleged to have been burned, and then and there caused said house to take fire and be consumed, this would constitute a burning within the meaning of the law of the crime of arson.” We discover no error in this instruction.

The court instructed the jury as to what constituted direct or positive evidence, and that there is another kind of evidence called circumstantial. The court did not undertake to define this latter kind of evidence, but the court said that it “is where it is sought to convict a person by a chain of circumstances which are sufficient in themselves to establish the guilt of the party to the satisfaction of the jury beyond all reasonable doubt. Both of these classes of testimony are proper, and upon either the jury may convict, providing they are sufficient to satisfy their minds beyond all reasonable doubt of the guilt of the party.” It is complained that the instruction “left the jury to judge for themselves” as to what constituted circumstantial evidence. It would have been proper enough for the court to give to the jury a definition of circumstantial evidence, but it was not error to fail to do so. The court was not asked to define this class of evidence.

Defendant asked, and was refused, certain instructions, and now urges error for such refusal. We find here no ground for reversal. He asked, for example, that the jury be told that they should give the same weight to defendant's testimony as they would give to any other witness; that intent is a material ingredient in every crime, and must be proved by positive evidence, etc. Neither of these instructions correctly stated the law. The other instructions were to the effect that the defendant could not be convicted if the jury should find from the evidence that the dwelling caught fire from the burning of the wine cellar or tank building. But the court—we think, correctly—instructed the jury on this phase of the case, and did not err in refusing the instruction asked by defendant. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

BANK OF UKIAH v. REED et ux.
(S. F. 1,543.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1901.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY—ORDER OF SALE—APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR—DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT—PLEADING—CONTRACT TO PAY TAXES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EXONERATION FROM INTEREST—AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.

1. On foreclosure of mortgages, plaintiff asked that each of two separate parcels of land subject thereto, and each of two species of personality, one of which was subject thereto, and the other pledged to secure the mortgage notes, should be sold separately, but without designating any particular order for the sale. To sell all of the property as an entirety was impracticable. To determine what order was best, the court took testimony, and directed sales of the personality first; the sale of the pledged personality taking precedence. No objection was taken to the form of the decree, nor appeal taken therefrom till after the sales, which resulted in a deficiency judgment. Appellants did not bring up the evidence, nor show that they were injured. Held, that there was no error, since the court would have been justified in following by analogy the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 682, cl. 1, for the terms of an ordinary writ of execution, warranting a like order of sale, and, moreover, the presumption on appeal was in favor of its validity, and it was incumbent on defendants to show error, and that they were injured.

2. Bank stock was assigned to secure notes also secured by two separate mortgages covering both real and personal property, and in an action on the notes and to foreclose the mortgages the counsel fees for the foreclosure were included in the aggregate sum, which was declared to be a lien on the property given to secure the notes, and the bank stock was directed to be sold before the other property. Held, that an objection that the direction caused the proceeds of such stock to be applied to counsel fees, no portion of which was a lien thereon, was unfounded, and that it was immaterial to defendant, since the stock was security for the entire debt, and, the entire property being insufficient to satisfy the judgment, defendants were not injured thereby.

3. On foreclosure of two separate mortgages, an omission to make counsel fees allowed for the foreclosure of each a specific lien on the property described in that mortgage is only a technical error, which does not invalidate the sale of all the mortgaged property; the proceeds being insufficient to satisfy the judgment.

4. That a portion of property included in mortgages was not included in the judgment on foreclosure thereof is no ground for reversal, though the mortgagors are entitled to have all of the mortgaged property sold before there can be any personal liability, since such portion was thereby freed from the mortgage lien, and if the judgment was not satisfied by the sale a reversal was unnecessary, as the mortgagors' rights could be fully preserved by modifying the judgment by striking out all liability for the deficiency, and plaintiff's voluntary satisfaction of the deficiency judgment had the same result.

5. An averment in a complaint on the foreclosure of mortgages that they provide "that the plaintiff may pay all taxes, liens, or assessments upon the said property, and that the same shall be repaid with interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per month," falls short of showing a contract by which the mortgagor is obligated to pay any taxes on the money loaned or on the mortgages given therefor, and which is for that reason null and void, under Const. art. 13, § 5; the exoneration from liability to pay interest being an affirmative defense.

6. Defendants to a mortgage foreclosure cannot complain that a franchise, sale of which is forbidden by statute, but which was included in the mortgage, was directed to be sold, since if such property were sold no title would pass, and they could sustain no harm therefrom.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; S. K. Dougherty, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Ukiah against John S. Reed and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Heller & Powers (James L. Robison, of counsel), for appellants. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action in foreclosure. The appellant John S. Reed executed to the plaintiff July 23, 1892, his promissory note for $15,491, and at the same time, to secure its payment, executed a mortgage upon certain real estate in Mendocino county, known as the "Reed Ranch." December 5, 1893, he executed to the plaintiff another promissory note, for $4,702, together with a mortgage for securing its payment upon the property described in his former mortgage, and at the same time transferred and assigned to the plaintiff certain shares of stock in the Bank of Ukiah as additional security for the payment of both of his said promissory notes. April 2, 1894, as further security for the payment of said notes, he executed a mortgage upon certain other real property in the county of Mendocino, and also a chattel mortgage upon certain sheep held by him in that county. The present action is brought to recover judgment for the amount of the promissory notes, and that the above property be sold in satisfaction thereof. The appellant Anna M. Reed is the wife of the mortgagor, and is made a defendant under the averment that she claims some interest in the property. John S. Reed demurred to the complaint, and thereafter withdrew his demurrer and consented that his default be entered. Anna M. Reed filed a consent that default be taken against her, stating also that she declined to further answer or appear in the action. Their defaults were thereupon entered by order of the court, and on September 18, 1897, judgment against them was entered in favor of the plaintiff, determining the amount due to it, and directing a sale of the property described in the complaint. In its judgment the court directed that the bank stock should be sold first, and the other personal property next, and thereafter the real estate in two specific parcels, as therein designated. Under the order of sale issued thereon, as appears from the briefs filed in behalf of the respective parties, and also from copies of the records of the superior court filed herein, the property described in the judgment was sold for less than the amount found due to the plaintiff, and a deficiency judgment entered against the mortgagor. This deficiency judgment was afterwards voluntarily satisfied by the plaintiff. After the sale had been made and the return thereon filed by the sheriff, viz. March 18, 1898, the present appeal was taken, and is presented here upon the judgment roll, without any bill of exceptions.

1. The court did not err in directing the order in which the property should be sold. The appellant had mortgaged to the plaintiff two separate parcels of real estate and two distinct species of personal property. The plaintiff had asked in its complaint that the lands respectively described in each of the two mortgages thereof should be sold in one lot or parcel, and that each of the two species of personal property should be sold separately in one lot or parcel. No particular order for the sale of these particular pieces was designated or requested therein, and the court was not required to follow the order in which the parcels had been enumerated by the pleader or set forth in the complaint; nor were there any equities of third persons to be considered in determining the order in which the sale should be made. It would have been impracticable, if not inequitable, to direct all the property to be sold as an entirety. In the absence of any showing upon the subject the court would have been justified in following by analogy the requirements of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 682, cl. 1) for the terms of an ordinary writ of execution, and directing that the personal property be sold before resorting to the real estate. Acting as a court of equity, it was proper for it to direct the property to be sold in such order as would be for the best interests of the parties to the action; and it appears from the judgment that the court took testimony for that purpose, and found therefrom that it was for the best interests of all parties that the property should be sold in the order therein directed, for the reason that it would sell to better advantage and bring a better price by being sold in that order. This provision in the judgment is not erroneous as a matter of law, nor is there any presumption against its validity. If, as claimed by appellants, it is erroneous as a matter of fact, it was incumbent upon them to cause such error to appear. If there was any ground upon which the court could have given this direction, it must be assumed that such ground was shown to it. The appellants have not brought up the evidence, nor do they show that they have been in any respect injured. In Cord v. Southwell, 15 Wis. 211, it was held that the court might in its judgment direct the order in which the mortgaged premises should be sold, without any foundation being laid therefor in the pleadings, and might determine this order upon facts shown at the hearing, and that, if such directions were erroneous, it was incumbent upon the defendant to show that to be so. The same principle is sustained in Macomb v. Prentiss, 57 Mich. 225, 23 N. W. 788; Gregory v. Campbell, 16 How. Prac. 417; Wilts. Mortg. Forec. § 491; Ping. Chat. Mortg. § 1918; Jones, Mortg. § 1618; Hopkins v. Wiard, 72 Cal. 262, 13 Pac. 687. Carmichael v. McGillivray, 57 Cal. 8, cited by appellants, does not present a different rule. In that case the plaintiff asked for the "usual decree" in foreclosure suits, and as its conclusion of law the court held that the plaintiff have judgment "as prayed for in the complaint." Instead of following this direction, the judgment directed that the ditch be sold before the sale of the mining claims. Upon the appeal therefrom it was made to appear to the supreme court by an affidavit to that effect that this provision of the judgment was inequitable and would work an injustice to the mortgagors. The judgment was reversed upon the ground that the decree was a departure from the "usual form," and was not warranted by the "finding of the court." See, also, Broder v.

Conklin, 98 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 211. In the present case no objection to the form of the decree, or attempt to modify its terms, was made to the superior court, nor was the appeal therefrom taken until after the property had been sold in accordance with its terms; nor has it been made to appear here that the defendants have been in any respect injured, or that a greater sum of money would have been received if the sale had been made in any other way than that directed by the court.

2. The court allowed to the plaintiff $800 as counsel fees for the foreclosure of the mortgages upon the real estate and the sheep, and this amount was included in the aggregate sum which was declared to be a lien upon the property given as security for the payment of the notes. It is urged by the appellants that the effect of directing that the bank stock be sold before the sale of the other property was to cause the proceeds of such sale to be applied to the payment of these counsel fees, whereas it appears from the findings that no portion of the counsel fees was a lien thereon. This objection is, however, specious rather than real. The bank stock was a security for the entire indebtedness upon the promissory notes, as much as was the other property; and it was immaterial to the defendants whether the bank stock or the other property should be sold first, so long as the sale of the entire property would be insufficient to satisfy the judgment. Unless the bank stock should sell for the entire amount of the judgment, exclusive of the counsel fees, the defendants would not have been injured by having it sold first. As the proceeds of the entire property were insufficient to satisfy the judgment, the defendants have suffered no injury by reason of the order in which the sale was directed. If the judgment had directed that the other property be first sold, and that, after paying to the plaintiff the counsel fees, if the balance of its proceeds should be insufficient to satisfy the judgment the bank stock be then sold, the position of the appellants would be the same as it would under the decree first rendered. For the same reasons the omission to make the counsel fees allowed for the foreclosure of each of the several mortgages a specific lien upon the property described in that mortgage was only technical error.

3. The mortgage, as alleged in the complaint, included as a portion of the mortgaged property the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 27, T. 22; but the judgment does not declare that this parcel is subject to the lien, nor does it contain a direction for its sale. The appellants urge that the court thereby erred, and that, inasmuch as they have the right to have all of the mortgaged property sold before there can be any personal liability, the judgment must be reversed. The error of the court, if any error there was, was its omission to include this parcel with the lands subject to the lien. It could properly direct the sale of only that property which it had found to be so subject. It is highly probable that the omission results from a mistake of the scrivener in describing the property, either in the complaint or in the judgment. The same omission or mistake is found in the prayer of the complaint, which enumerates the property that the plaintiff asks to have sold, and the judgment follows the terms of this prayer. But, even if the parcel were included in the mortgages, the failure of the plaintiff to have it included in the judgment would merely have the effect to free it from the lien of the mortgage, as well as from a sale in satisfaction of the judgment. Mascarel v. Raffour, 51 Cal. 242; Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613; Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 54, 18 Pac. 808; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200; Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. 283, 51 Pac. 2, 542. If the judgment is satisfied by the sale of a portion of the mortgaged premises, the mortgagor will hold the omitted portion discharged of all lien. If the judgment is not satisfied by the sale, a reversal of the judgment is not necessary, but the rights of the mortgagor are fully preserved by directing that the judgment be modified by striking out all liability for the deficiency. In the present case the same result has been obtained by the plaintiff's voluntary satisfaction of the deficiency judgment.

4. It is further objected that the court was not authorized to make any portion of the taxes paid by the plaintiff upon the real estate included in the mortgage a lien upon the other property given as security for the indebtedness. It is a sufficient answer to this objection that it does not appear that the judgment includes any amount for the payment of taxes. It is not specifically declared therein that any portion of its amount is for taxes paid by the plaintiff, nor does it appear from a comparison of its amount with a computation of the indebtedness claimed in the complaint that any amount paid for taxes is included therein.

5. The claim that the provision in the mortgages for the payment of taxes takes away all liability for the payment of interest upon the indebtedness is not sustained by the record. The mortgages themselves are not set forth in the complaint, but it is averred that they provide "that the plaintiff may pay all taxes, liens, or assessments upon the said property, and that the same shall be repaid with interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per month." Section 5 of article 13 of the constitution declares that every contract by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment "on money loaned or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien," shall, as to the interest specified therein, be null and void. The above averment falls far short of showing a contract by which the mortgagor is obligated to pay any taxes upon the money loaned or upon the mortgages given therefor. This exoneration from liability is an affirmative defense which must be established on the part of the defendant. There is no substantial difference between the averment herein and the provision in the mortgage considered in Marye v. Hart, 76 Cal. 291, 18 Pac. 325, which it was held did not have the effect claimed by the appellants herein.

6. It is next contended that the court erred in directing a sale of the franchise of the Ukiah Gas Works, for the reason that such franchise is not the subject of a sale under execution. As the appellants included this mortgage in their mortgage to the plaintiff, it might well be held that they are estopped from questioning plaintiff's right to a judgment for its sale in the foreclosure of that mortgage; but if, as claimed by them, a transfer of the franchise, either by way of mortgage or by judicial sale, is forbidden by statute, no title would pass by the sale, and the appellants can sustain no harm therefrom. The judgment is affirmed.

McLEOD v. BARNUM. (S. F. 1,555.)

MORTGAGES — CHATTEL MORTGAGES — STATUTES — VALIDITY — PROPERTY SUBJECT TO MORTGAGE — CONTRACTS — SALES — RETENTION OF GOODS OF VENDEE — RESCISSION — EVIDENCE — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A mortgage of a leasehold interest in land, with the improvements thereon, which the lessee had a right to remove at the expiration of the term, on certain conditions, was a mortgage of an interest in real estate, and hence valid, under Civ. Code, § 2947, declaring that any interest in real estate capable of being transferred may be mortgaged.

2. The amendment of 1895 to Civ. Code, § 2955, placing after the words "mortgages may be made on the following personal property" the words "and none other," does not render a mortgage on personal property not enumerated invalid as between the parties; no rights of third parties being involved.

3. A vendee holding possession of the property purchased may not set up in defense to an action for the price that the vendor's title was defective.

4. Where, in an action for the price of property sold, a letter written by defendant to a former owner of the property was not shown to have been lost, but a witness was permitted to state that the letter was an offer by defendant to purchase the property for a greater sum than she had contracted to pay plaintiff, the error was harmless, since the testimony was immaterial.

5. Where the loss of a letter written by defendant was not shown, but its recipient testified as to its contents without objection by defendant, and the witness was cross-examined as to the contents, defendant could not object to the subsequent testimony of another witness as to the contents on the ground that the loss had not been shown; such witness giving the contents substantially the same as the recipient.

6. Where, in an action for the price of property sold, defendant contended the seller's title to have been defective, it was not error to permit plaintiff to introduce a bill of sale which formed a link in her chain of title.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; F. M. Angellotti, Judge.

Action by Angus McLeod against Amelia D. Barnum. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Crandall & Bull, for appellant. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from judgment and order denying a new trial. On the 13th day of March, 1896, one Helen M. Atwater was the owner and in the possession of a certain lot in Tiburon, Marin county, and a lease thereof for the term of 11 years from the 15th day of February, 1896, at a monthly rental of $15 per month, with a two-story frame building thereon, known as the "El Dorado Hotel," together with the furniture, bar, and bar fixtures, and other personal property in and connected with said hotel. By the terms of the lease the lessee was given the right to remove all improvements then on the said lot, or that might be thereafter placed thereon, at the termination thereof, upon complying with the conditions therein named. On said day the defendant purchased of said Helen M. Atwater the lease, improvements on the leased premises, furniture in the hotel, bedding, cooking utensils, bar, and bar fixtures, wines, liquors, and other personal property in and about the hotel, for the sum of $1,950. As part of the purchase price for all of the aforesaid property, the defendant executed to plaintiff the promissory note set forth in the complaint for the sum of $500, and at the same time executed and delivered to plaintiff a mortgage, which mortgage recited that the mortgagor mortgaged "that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land [describing lot], and including the building and improvements on said land known as the 'El Dorado Hotel,' * * * and all the interest of the mortgagor in said land; * * * the said interest being a leasehold interest under that certain lease from Israel Kashaw to Helen M. Atwater dated the 17th day of February, 1896." The plaintiff acted as the agent for said Helen M. Atwater in taking said note and mortgage. After the said sale and the execution of the said note and mortgage the defendant went into possession of the said leased premises and personal property. The said promissory note has not been paid, nor the interest thereon. The court filed findings, and by its judgment and decree directed a sale of the mortgaged premises to satisfy the judgment.

It is contended that the mortgage was of personal property, and of personal property not enumerated in Civ. Code, § 2955, and for that reason void even between the parties. The mortgage was of an interest in real estate, and therefore within the provision of section 2947 of the Civil Code. If the property mortgaged were personal property, the mortgage would be valid as between the parties. Bank v. Moore, 106 Cal. 673, 39 Pac.

1071; Bank v. Gibson, 109 Cal. 197, 41 Pac. 1008; Tomlinson v. Ayres, 117 Cal. 572, 49 Pac. 717. It is said that by the amendment of 1895 to Civ. Code, § 2955, after the words "mortgages may be made upon the following personal property," the words "and none other" were added, and that since the amendment a mortgage of personal property not enumerated is absolutely void even between the parties. We do not think such is the law. Neither do we think the legislature intended any such consequence. It would require very plain and imperative language to convince us that the legislature intended to prevent parties from making a mortgage upon any personal property, as between themselves, where the rights of no third parties are involved. In section 2957 it is provided that a mortgage, unless accompanied by the affidavit required by the statute, and acknowledged and recorded, is void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers for value. But the mortgage is, without the affidavit or acknowledgment, good between the parties. A law that would prohibit competent parties from making a valid contract, as between themselves, where no rights of third parties intervene and no public policy is violated, would be a very serious infringement of the right of making contracts.

The defendant in her answer alleged that the title to the property is and was defective, and that she has never been given a good and valid title to the said property. The court found, in finding 1, that defendant did receive a good title to the property. The different steps or links in the chain of title are very fully and minutely set out. Defendant's counsel have devoted several pages of their brief in attempting to show that the different and independent parts of this finding are not supported by the evidence. It is unnecessary to examine the specifications as to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding, for the reason that the court found—and the finding is sustained by the evidence—that defendant "ever since the 13th day of March, 1896, held and retained, and now holds and retains, the possession of all the said property, and has ever since said day had the use and profits thereof." The law will not allow a vendee to obtain possession of property under a contract of sale, and while in possession to defend against an action for the purchase money upon the ground of the title being defective. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 18, 27 Pac. 942; Gross v. Kierski, 41 Cal. 112. In this case the plaintiff seeks to foreclose upon the property mortgaged, and defendant seeks to retain possession and prevent the foreclosure upon the ground that the title of the vendor was and is defective. If the title could be tried in this way, and should be found defective, the defendant might retain possession forever, without paying the amount she agreed to pay, or restoring the plaintiff to his former rights. The court found "that the said cross complainant never rescinded or offered to rescind with said Helen M. Atwater the purchase which was made by the said cross complainant of the said hotel and leasehold interest and personal property described in the said cross complaint, or the contract which was made between the said cross complainant and the said Helen M. Atwater with relation thereto, and that the said cross complainant never returned or offered to return to the said Helen M. Atwater any of the property mentioned and described in the said cross complaint." This finding is not challenged. In view of the finding that defendant has remained and is in possession of the property, and that she has made no attempt at rescission, and that she has not paid the note, it becomes unnecessary to discuss all the criticisms of findings made in appellant's brief. The material findings are supported by the evidence, and it would serve no useful purpose to discuss the evidence as to those which are immaterial.

The witness Cochrane, while on the stand, was permitted, under defendant's objection, to state the contents of a letter written by defendant to one Mrs. Delcroix; and it is now urged that such ruling was prejudicial error. The principal objection to the contents of the letter being given in evidence was that the loss of the letter had not been proven. The witness testified that in the letter defendant offered Mrs. Delcroix $3,500 for the property,—$1,200 cash, and the balance in installments of $500 every six months. We regard the evidence as immaterial, and therefore harmless. But, if it were material, appellant is not in a position here to avail herself of the error. The witness Delcroix was permitted to testify without objection to the contents of the letter in her direct examination. She gave the contents substantially as given by Cochrane. Appellant's counsel fully cross-examined her as to the letter and its contents. There is no contradiction of the evidence of either of these witnesses as to such contents. The appellant, therefore, did not object to the evidence as to the contents of the letter when such evidence was first offered. Not only this, but she fully interrogated the witness as to such contents. She will not now be allowed to say that it was error for the subsequent witness to be questioned concerning the contents of the letter. If the objection had been sustained, the record would still contain the evidence of Mrs. Delcroix as to the contents of the letter.

A bill of sale of the property from Jane Delcroix to James W. Cochrane was offered in evidence. To this defendant objected upon the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. The admission of the bill of sale is now claimed to be error. Defendant had denied the title of plaintiff to the property, and alleged that the title was defective. This bill of sale was a link in the chain of title, and made apparently necessary by the defense interposed by defendant. The defendant objected to the title as being defective, and objected to all proof offered by plaintiff to show that it was not defective. It would be trifling with justice to say such ruling was error.

We have examined the other assignments of error, but they require no special notice. We find no error that would justify a reversal of the case. The judgment and order are affirmed.

expiration of 20 days from the date of the order directing its payment, a right of action for the entire assessment shall accrue, the acceptance by the district of an installment so delinquent is a waiver of its right of action thereunder for the entire assessment, so that the right of action for the remainder of the assessment is not barred in 3 years from the time such installment became delinquent.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by reclamation district No. 536 against J. W. Hall to recover delinquent assessments. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Devlin & Devlin, for appellant. John M. Gregory and W. A. Gett, for respondent. A. L. Shinn, amicus curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was at all times named in the complaint the owner of lands in reclamation district No. 536. The assessment list, properly made and certified, was filed with the county treasurer of the county of Solano on December 4, 1891, where it remained for more than 30 days; and, the assessments not having been paid, the treasurer of said county returned the same on the 11th day of January, 1892, to the board of trustees of the plaintiff. The trustees at various times made calls for installments on the various assessments so made. The defendant paid the first nine calls or installments, but paid only a portion of the tenth, and has wholly refused to pay the eleventh. More than 20 days elapsed after the eleventh call before the commencement of this action. The eleventh call was made July 1, 1896. On October 12, 1897, the board of trustees of plaintiff made an order that, by reason of the failure of the defendant to pay such calls or installments, the whole amount of his said assessment should be due and payable at once, and that an action be commenced for the same. This action was commenced, in pursuance of said order, to collect the balance due by defendant on his whole assessment, and to have the same declared a lien upon the real estate owned by him upon which the said assessment was levied. The case was tried before the court, and findings filed, upon which judgment was ordered and entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll.

The question here is as to whether or not the judgment is the legal conclusion from the facts found. The court found "that on January 21, 1893, the said board of trustees, by an order duly entered on the minutes of said board, determined to call in an installment of $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. of the whole of said assessment, to wit, \$566.26; that owing to the said third installment not having been paid within twenty days from the date of said call, to wit, on or before February 11, 1893 (but was paid March 2, 1893), a cause of action for the collection of the same, and for the whole of said assessment remaining unpaid, against the land of said defendant, J. W.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 536 v. HALL.
(Sac. 706.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.)

DRAINS—RECLAMATION DISTRICT—IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENTS—ACTIONS—LIMITATION—WAIVER—INSTALLMENTS—ACCEPTANCE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3466, providing that, if any installment of an assessment due a reclamation district shall remain unpaid at the Hall, to wit, 75 per cent. thereof, accrued, and as the complaint in this case was not filed within three years of time, reckoned from February 11, 1893, the cause of action stated in the complaint is barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California." The call of January 21, 1893, remained unpaid for some 20 days after the time named in the call; and the court below proceeded upon the theory that a cause of action accrued thereupon for the whole assessment, and as the suit was not brought within 3 years after February 11, 1893, it was barred by the provisions of section 338, Code Civ. Proc. In this the court erred. The amount of the call of January 21, 1893, was paid March 2, 1893, and accepted by the plaintiff. Thereafter calls were made for installments August, 1893, November, 1893, January, 1894, September, 1894, April, 1895. These were the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth installments. They were all paid by defendant and accepted by plaintiff. It is provided in section 3466 of the Political Code as follows: "At the end of thirty days, the treasurer must return the list to the board of trustees of the district, and all unpaid assessments shall bear legal interest from the date of the return of the list to said board, and shall thereafter be collected and paid in separate installments, of such amounts and at such times, respectively, as the board, from time to time, in its discretion, may, by order entered in its minutes, direct; and a cause of action for the collection of any such installment shall accrue at the expiration of twenty days from the date of the order directing its payment: provided, that if any such installment shall remain unpaid at the expiration of said twenty days, then the whole of the assessment against the land owned by the person failing to pay such installment shall become due and payable at once, and may, in the discretion of the board, be collected immediately, in one and the same action." Under the provision of the said section quoted, the installment called for by the order of January 21, 1893, not having been paid within 20 days thereafter, the board of trustees could have regarded the whole amount of defendant's assessment as due and payable, and could at any time after the expiration of said 20 days, and before accepting payment thereof, have commenced an action therefor. But by accepting the amount of said installment March 2, 1893, the plaintiff waived its right to consider the whole amount due. If after March 2, 1893, and before making another call or order for payment, plaintiff had brought an action for the whole amount of the assessment, it could not have maintained it. It could not receive the payment, and at the same time claim the benefit or advantage it might gain by the failure to pay. The provision was inserted for the benefit of reclamation districts, and to insure prompt payment of installments as called for by the board. If the district in such case desires to take advantage of the provision, it must do so before it has received the money from the party in default. It will not be allowed to take the money, and at the same time take the benefit or advantage arising from the money not being paid. It is too elementary to need citation of authorities that a provision in a promissory note that the whole amount of principal shall become due upon default of interest is waived by the payee afterwards accepting the interest. So a provision in a lease that it shall be void if the rent is not promptly paid when due is waived by the acceptance of the rent by the lessor after default. The same principle applies here. The defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for the entire assessment, payable in installments as ordered by plaintiff's trustees. The statute formed part of the contract, and is to be read into it. The whole amount by the assessment became due plaintiff upon default in the payment of the third installment. It afterwards accepted the payment. Defendant was, by the indulgence of plaintiff, allowed to make the payment after default. He cannot now claim advantage by reason of the indulgence shown him. The judgment is reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment for plaintiff upon the findings for the amount due, as prayed for, and declaring the same a lien upon the premises of defendant, and directing a sale thereof to satisfy the claim of plaintiff.

PEOPLE v. TAPIA. (Cr. 683.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECORD—OPINION OF TRIAL JUDGE—MURDER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—NEW TRIAL—CORPUS DELICTI—CONFESSION—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. On appeal from a conviction and an order denying a new trial, though the opinion of the trial judge attached to the bill of exceptions showed clearly that a new trial should have been granted because of the insufficiency of the evidence, such opinion cannot be considered in determining whether the conviction should be set aside, since it is not a part of the record.

2. Deceased was found among the ruins of his house, a great deal of his body consumed by fire. Tracks of a horse were discovered near the burned house, which, though not owned by defendant, had been in his possession a few days before. There was evidence that a purse found on defendant had been the property of deceased, though it was not clearly identified, and some evidence that defendant had been seen carrying a gun which had belonged to deceased, though he was not clearly identified as the person seen with it. An Indian, a comparative stranger to defendant, who was also an Indian, testified that defendant confessed to him that he killed deceased. Held, that a refusal of a new trial cannot be set aside on appeal, since it cannot be said, as matter of law, that there was no evidence to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.

3. Under Pen. Code, §§ 1093, 1127, providing that the court must state all matters of law necessary for the information of the jury, and must charge on any points pertinent to the issue if requested, it was error to fail to instruct that in determining whether there was sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti the asserted confession or other evidence, which did not tend to prove the corpus delicti, but merely tended to connect defendant with the crime charged, could not be considered, though the instructions requested on such question were not correctly drawn.

4. Where, in a prosecution for murder, defendant's sole defense was that he did not commit the act, it was error to instruct that, the commission of the homicide by defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or excuse devolved on him, since it was not applicable to the case.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Ramon Tapia was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Reversed.

George H. P. Shaw, H. K. Heffleman, Nutt & Shaw, and Neale & Goodbody, for appellant. Trety L. Ford (Henry A. Melvin, of counsel), for respondent.

McFARLAND J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to life imprisonment. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

The appellant is an Indian, evidently unlettered and ignorant. He was charged with the murder of one Jacob J. Veitinger, who was a somewhat elderly man, and lived alone in a small house in the country. On July 28, 1899, his nearest neighbor, Mr. William Cooper, discovered that Veitinger's house had been burned down since the previous day, and found among the ruins the dead body of Veitinger. A great deal of his body had been entirely consumed by the fire; still we think it was sufficiently identified as the body of the deceased. But the evidence of the other facts necessary to make full proof of the corpus delicti—that is, that his death was caused by criminal means used by another person, and not by his own act or by accident—was very slight. We hardly think that any jury would have found that a murder had been committed without certain evidence tending somewhat to connect appellant with the crime charged, and particularly without the testimony of another Indian, named Francisco (who was comparatively a stranger to appellant), to the effect that appellant had made a confession to him that he (appellant) killed the deceased. Apart from this alleged confession, the main evidence relied on by the prosecution consists of some testimony that tracks of a certain horse were discovered at a point not very far away from the burned house, and at other points within a few miles, and that the horse, although owned by another party, had been a few days before in the possession of appellant; some testimony that a purse found on appellant had been the property of the deceased; and some testimony that appellant had been seen carrying a gun which had been the property of the deceased. The testimony as to these matters was, to say the least, not very satisfactory; and these matters, if considered as proved, are not very convincing as to any of the facts necessary to appellant's conviction of murder.

There is in the bill of exceptions, regularly settled and certified, an opinion of the judge before whom the case was tried, given on denying the motion for a new trial, from which it certainly appears that he ought to have granted the motion. The judge examines the evidence in detail, and clearly shows that, in his opinion, it was not sufficient to warrant the verdict. He shows that the purse was not sufficiently identified as the purse of the deceased, that appellant was not identified as the person seen with the gun, and that the horse tracks do not "cut a very material figure." As to the asserted confession to Francisco, the judge says: "I do not see how anybody can possibly read that, or hear the man testify, and believe him at all. I do not give it a particle of credence. He is an enemy who is prosecuting the defendant. He is in jail himself.

* * * Then as to that confession,—if I know anything about weighing evidence whatever,—after reading the testimony, that bears external and internal evidence of falsity from beginning to end." He then speaks of the unreliability of the testimony of certain Indians who were hostile to appellant, and, imagining that Francisco was on trial for the murder of Veitinger, shows that the facts would make as strong a case against him as against appellant, and says, "Therefore I say the evidence is unsatisfactory." But, after showing clearly that the evidence, in his opinion, was not sufficient to warrant the verdict, he questions whether "my doubts amounted to such reasonable doubts as would warrant the court in setting aside the verdict on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence"; and he concludes as follows: "I believe I shall deny the motion, and let the supreme court pass on these questions." But "these questions" were questions of fact, over which the trial judge had full jurisdiction; while this court has appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases "on questions of law alone." As was said in People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130, 23 Pac. 228: "He [the trial judge], too, had to be satisfied that the evidence, as a whole, was sufficient to sustain the verdict. If he was not, it was not only the proper exercise of a legal discretion, but his duty, to grant a new trial." See, also, People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 44 Pac. 166; People v. Baker, 39 Cal. 686; People v. Flood, 102 Cal. 330, 36 Pac. 663; People v. Chew Wing Gow, 120 Cal. 298, 52 Pac. 657. The sufficiency of the evidence is a "question of law" only where the question is whether there is any evidence to support the verdict, or whether the evidence is so unsubstantiated as to practically amount to no evidence. "That the defendant may move for a new trial on the ground of the preponderance of the evidence in his favor upon some issue which is material for the prosecution to establish, and that the court below, if of the opinion that there is such preponderance, should set aside the verdict, is a well established and recognized rule. It is also settled that this court will not deal with the question of the preponderance of evidence." People v. Ashnauer, 47 Cal. 98. We are not unmindful that a ruling of a trial court cannot be set aside here merely because a wrong reason was given for it. We are aware, also, that ordinarily an opinion of a lower court is not the subject of review here, and is not a legitimate part of the record. Therefore, in determining the question whether the trial court should have granted a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, we must disregard the opinion above noted; and, thus looking at the case, we are not prepared to say that, as a matter of law, there was no evidence to support the verdict. But, with the opinion before us, we cannot avoid a somewhat strong impression that the defendant has been wrongfully convicted of the high crime of murder in the first degree; and as, in such a case, a very slight error of law committed during the trial might have improperly influenced the jury, it is our duty to look with very close scrutiny into the assignments of error. Of course, a judgment will not be reversed for an erroneous ruling, where it appears that it could not have been prejudicial to the party who complains of it; but, considering the peculiar character of the evidence in the case at bar, it cannot be said that certain errors which we shall notice were not prejudicial.

As before stated, the main evidence against the appellant was his alleged confession to the witness Francisco. Of course, it is well-settled law that the corpus delicti must be established independently of evidence which merely tends to connect the defendant with the crime charged, and independently of any asserted extrajudicial admissions or confessions of the party charged, and that such admissions or confessions cannot be considered as evidence of the corpus delicti. In People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440, this court declared the rule as follows: "The term 'corpus delicti' involves the elements of crime," and that "defendant's admissions cannot be used to establish any necessary element in the commission of the crime." See, also, People v. Thrall, 50 Cal. 415. In Gray v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. St. 380, the court says: "The true rule in such cases is believed to be this: When the commonwealth has given sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti to entitle the case to go to the jury, it is competent to show a confession made by the prisoner connecting him with the crime. Under such circumstances the jury should first pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence of the corpus delicti. If it satisfies them beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime has been committed, then they are at liberty to give the confession such weight as it is entitled to." In the case at bar, if it be considered that there was some evidence of the corpus delicti, without the confession, which entitled the case to go to the jury, still that evidence was exceedingly slight, and it is highly probable that the jury considered the confession in determining that the corpus delicti had been sufficiently proved. In Territory v. Farrell, 6 Mont. 12, 9 Pac. 536, the lower court had instructed the jury substantially that they might find defendant guilty upon his admissions alone; and the appellate court reversed the judgment on account of such instruction, and said: "There was other evidence from which the jury might have found the corpus delicti, yet we cannot say but the jury might have found the conviction of the defendant upon his confessions alone under this instruction for their guide." In the present case the court refused to give certain instructions on this subject asked by appellant, and numbered 4 and 6. The clear purpose of these instructions was to inform the jury that in determining whether the crime charged had been committed they could not consider the confession, or any evidence which tended solely to connect the appellant with the supposed crime. Perhaps neither of these instructions, when closely examined, will be found to be absolutely perfect; but we think that either of them might have been given without any prejudice to the prosecution. By instruction 4 the court was asked to instruct the jury that: "If * * * you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt whether Jacob J. Veitinger met his death from natural or accidental causes, or from the act of some person, you cannot consider any evidence introduced herein for the purpose of or tending to connect the defendant with the crime upon which he is now being tried." The evident purpose of this instruction was to tell the jury that in determining whether the corpus delicti had been sufficiently proven they should not consider evidence which tended solely to connect defendant with the crime, and, if so understood, it would have been correct; but, as there might be evidence which tended to prove the corpus delicti, and also to connect the defendant with the crime, the instruction is perhaps subject to the criticism that it does not distinguish evidence having that double character. The instruction numbered 6 contains a correct statement of the meaning of corpus delicti, and the kind of evidence necessary to establish it. The last paragraph of the instruction is as follows: "Alleged confessions, and any other evidence the purpose of which is to connect, or attempt to connect, the accused with the offense charged, cannot be considered by you until the corpus delicti has been proved to your satisfaction to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt." This is subject, also, to the same criticism as that above noticed as applicable to instruction 4. But we think that if, in the opinion of the court, these instructions, as offered by appellant's counsel, did not apply or with perfect correctness state the principle of law that was evidently intended, it should, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, either have modified them so as to comply with its views, and given them as modified, or should have given an instruction upon the subject in its own language. A court is not always called upon to instruct on a point when not asked to do so, and ordinarily counsel cannot complain of the refusal of an instruction which is not perfectly correct; but on a trial for murder, where a man's life or liberty is at stake, and with such a condition of evidence as is here exhibited, a court is not justified in refusing to instruct at all upon the paramount and vital questions in the case, simply because a particular form of instruction asked by counsel may be safely refused. Sections 1093 and 1127 of the Penal Code provide that the court, in charging a jury, must state to them "all matters of law necessary for their information," and must charge "on any points pertinent to the issue, if requested by either party." In the case at bar the defendant certainly requested instructions on a point clearly and paramountly "pertinent to the issue"; and, considering the peculiar circumstances of this case, we do not think that the court was justified in ignoring the point entirely on account of the form in which the request was made. We do not want to be understood as saying that, as a general rule, a judgment will be reversed for want of full instructions; but in this particular case we do not see how the jury could have properly come to a conclusion without an instruction that in determining whether there was sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti they could not consider the asserted confession or other evidence which did not tend to prove the corpus delicti, but merely tended to connect the appellant with the crime charged; and yet such instruction was not given in any part of the charge, although an instruction on that point was of the highest importance to a proper consideration of the evidence by the jury. The only instruction given which at all approached the point was appellant's instruction No. 2, which was merely to the effect that in determining whether the remains found in the ruins "were the remains of the body of Jacob J. Veitinger" they could not consider evidence tending to connect the appellant with the crime charged. Under the instructions given, the jury were at liberty to consider the confession as evidence of any fact necessary to be proven, and it is impossible to say that they did not so consider it; indeed, in view of the character of the other evidence, it is highly probable that the confession was the main evidence upon which they found that a crime had been committed. An instruction on this subject was clearly essential to a proper consideration of the evidence by the jury; and we think that in this case it was prejudicial error for the court not to give such instruction, after its attention was directly called to the point; and that, without such instruction, the appellant did not have a fair trial.

We think that it was also prejudicial error, considering the nature of the issues, to give the following instructions: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justified or excusable. But you will observe in this connection that the burden of proof thus cast upon the defendant is not used in any literal sense. It is not necessary that the defendant shall in this matter, more than in any other, prove affirmatively that he did not intend such consequences. It is sufficient that it appears to your understanding by testimony given, by inferences correctly and properly drawn from the whole of the testimony in the case, that, notwithstanding the burden was cast upon him, there still exists in your minds a reasonable doubt of his guilt." Of course, this instruction should not have been given, for it was entirely inapplicable to the case. The appellant did not set up any defense by way of excuse for or justification of an alleged act. He denied that he committed the act, and that was his sole defense. The first part of the instruction is taken from section 1105 of the Penal Code, and is applicable only when a defendant sets up circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification of an admitted or proved homicide. But the instruction goes beyond the statute, and states further principles not applicable to the case. Of course, a judgment will not be reversed for an instruction containing a mere abstract principle because it is not applicable to the case, where it appears that no injury was done. But can that be said in the case at bar? The instruction assumed repeatedly the fact of the "commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved," and while the judge may not have intended to intimate that there was proof of such fact, yet the jury may readily have understood the language used to have that meaning. It is difficult to imagine why the instruction was given at all, and it cannot be said that it might not have influenced the jury, and thus prejudiced the appellant.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment must be reversed, and therefore it is not necessary to consider the exceptions to the very voluminous charges on the subjects of reasonable doubt and circumstantial evidence, some parts of which are at least doubtful. It will be assumed that, if there shall be another trial, the instructions on those points will be confined to a few simple propositions. In conclusion we desire to say that this decision is based upon the very peculiar features of this case as above shown, and that in many cases the errors above noticed would not call for a reversal. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HARDISON v. DAVIS. (L. A. 765.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1901.)

BILLS AND NOTES — INDORSEMENT — CROSS COMPLAINT — OVERRULING DEMURRER — HARMLESS ERROR — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY — INDORSEMENT BY MISTAKE — AVERMENT — SUFFICIENCY — QUESTION OF FACT — REVIEW — NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT — BURDEN OF PROOF — MISTAKE OF FACT — REASONABLE DILIGENCE.

1. Where, in an action against an indorser of a note, he answered that the indorsement was made by mistake, and without consideration, and also filed a cross complaint to the same effect for cancellation of the indorsement, and the court, sitting as a jury, found in defendant's favor on the issue raised by the petition and answer, an order overruling plaintiff's demurrer to the cross complaint was not prejudicial to plaintiff.

2. Where defendant, in his cross complaint and answer, averred that he indorsed a note sued on by mistake, an objection that the question as to how he came to sign his name on the back of the note was not admissible under the pleadings cannot be sustained.

3. Where defendant alleged that he indorsed the note in suit by mistake, and without consideration, it was not necessary to aver that the mistake was not due to his negligence.

4. Where, on an issue as to whether defendant indorsed the note in suit by mistake, and without consideration, defendant testified that he indorsed the note believing it was another for a less amount, which had been executed by the maker to carry out a joint enterprise of the maker and defendant, evidence as to whether any consideration moved from the maker, or plaintiff, the present holder, to defendant, for indorsing the note at the time the indorsement was made, was properly admitted.

5. A decision of the trial court on a question of fact will not be reviewed where there is substantial evidence to support it.

6. Where defendant averred that he indorsed the note in suit by mistake, and there was no evidence that the mistake was caused by defendant's negligence, the burden was not on defendant to show that he had not omitted any legal duty.

7. Under Civ. Code, § 1577, defining a mistake of fact as one arising from an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract, that defendant indorsed the note in suit under the impression that he was indorsing another note, executed by the same maker, to be used in an enterprise in which defendant was interested, constituted a mistake of fact.

8. Where the court found that defendant's indorsement of the note in suit was made by mistake, and without consideration, the question of reasonable diligence required in rescinding a contract has no application, as there was no contract to rescind.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Action by Edwin Hardison against F. E. Davis. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Blackstock & Ewing, for appellant. Toland & Andrews and Orestes & Orr, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action upon a promissory note for the principal sum of $832, alleged to have been made and executed by James Mack to plaintiff on December 28, 1894. It is also alleged in the complaint "that on or about the 20th day of June, 1895, the defendant, Davis, wrote his name upon the back of said note, to give it credit, and delivered the same to plaintiff." Judgment is sought against defendant only, Mack not being a party to the suit. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered against him and from an order denying a new trial.

The defendant admits that he placed his signature upon the back of the note on the date stated in the complaint, but alleges that his doing so was the result of a mistake; that he did not intend to indorse the note in question, but did intend to indorse a $400 note given on that date by plaintiff to the First National Bank of Santa Paula; that he had never agreed to indorse the note in suit, but did agree to help to obtain $400 from said bank to be furnished to said Mack that he might go on the racing circuit of California with a certain race horse jointly owned by plaintiff, defendant, and said Mack; that in pursuance of this agreement the said $400 was obtained from said bank, and defendant wrote his name thinking that he was indorsing the said $400 note given to said bank for said last-mentioned sum; that he inadvertently wrote his name on the wrong note; that said note for $400 was fully paid and satisfied by the plaintiff, defendant, and said Mack before the commencement of this action; and that the indorsement by defendant of the note in suit was without consideration therefor. The defendant pleaded the foregoing facts in his answer in defense to the action. He also set up the same facts in a cross complaint, and prayed that the court order the note in suit to be taken into custody of the court, and his name be canceled therefrom, and that it be declared that cross complainant is not liable upon said note, and for general relief. Plaintiff demurred to the cross complaints for want of facts to constitute a cause of cross complaint in said action. This demurrer was overruled, and plaintiff answered said cross complaints. A trial was thereafter had before the court, a jury having been specially waived. The defendant testified to the facts substantially as hereinbefore set out. The findings were to the same effect, and the judgment was that plaintiff take nothing, that defendant's name be canceled from the note, that plaintiff be forever estopped from bringing any action against defendant on account of said note, and that defendant recover his costs.

1. There was no error prejudicial to appellant in overruling his demurrer to the cross complaints. The facts stated in the cross complaints were also pleaded in the answer as a defense; and, found to be true, they constituted a good defense, and it was on account of those facts that it was decreed that plaintiff take nothing in the action. On the complaint and answer alone the court could determine, as it did, from the evidence, that the signature of defendant was not binding upon him—First, because it was made by mistake; and, second, because it was given without consideration. The judgment that plaintiff take nothing estopped him from maintaining another action against defendant on this cause of action. The signature on the back of the note could be of no further value to plaintiff, and it could do him no harm to have it canceled. The error, if any was made in overruling the demurrer to the cross complaints, was, therefore, without prejudice to any substantial right of appellant.

2. The objection to the question asked of defendant as to how he happened to put his signature on the back of the note, based on the ground "that there is no averment of a mistake in the cross complaint," was properly overruled. There was such an averment in the cross complaint, and in the answer also, and the evidence sought was relevant under both. It was not necessary to allege that the mistake relied on was not the result of defendant's negligence.

3. Against the objection and exception of appellant the defendant, as a witness, was allowed to answer, and did answer in the negative, the following questions: "Did any consideration ever move to you from either Hardison or Mack for the indorsing of this $832 note? Was there any consideration, at the time you indorsed this note, moved from Hardison to Mack for your indorsement?" The rulings in allowing these questions to be answered were not erroneous. The witness had already testified fully as to the circumstances under which he wrote his name on the back of the note in suit, and as to what induced him to do so. This testimony showed that there was no consideration for his indorsing the said note; and, being in a position to know the ultimate fact, and appellant having the opportunity to cross-examine him, it was not improper for him to testify directly that there was no consideration. Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 109. The other objections to testimony are not of sufficient importance to require special notice. It is sufficient to say that there was no error prejudicial to appellant in overruling them.

4. Appellant contends that the finding favorable to the defense of mistake is without support in the evidence. Defendant testified to facts which, if believed, established this defense beyond any question. And in support of the finding we must assume that defendant told the truth. This court has many times declared that it would not interfere with the decision of the trial court as to questions of fact, where there was any substantial evidence supporting it. This rule is not affected by the degree of evidence required under the law. It is left to the trial court to determine whether the evidence establishes the fact, just as it is left to that court to say where the preponderance of evidence is in other cases. Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 24 Pac. 930. Even in criminal cases, where the rule of proof beyond a reasonable doubt is firmly settled, the decision of the tribunal before which the witnesses appear as to questions of fact is rarely interfered with by the appellate court. There is no evidence that defendant's mistake was caused by the neglect of a legal duty on his part, and, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, the presumption is against any neglect of legal duty. There is, therefore, nothing in appellant's contention based on the alleged failure of defendant to make a negative showing on this subject. Defendant's mistake arose out of "an unconscious ignorance" of a present fact. Civ. Code, § 1577. The case of Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 Pac. 304, does not contain anything applicable to the case in hand.

The facts contended for by the respondent, and found by the court to be true, established the nonexistence of the alleged contract upon which the action was based. In other words, it was shown that there was no meeting of minds in the matter, and that no such contract ever existed. There was, therefore, no contract to rescind; and the rule of reasonable diligence, etc., laid down in the Code as applicable to cases of rescission, finds no application here.

The other points urged by appellant are without merit. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

FLINN et al. v. MOWRY. (S. F. 1,604.)

Modification of judgment. For former opinion, see 63 Pac. 724.

PER CURIAM. The judgment heretofore rendered herein is set aside, and the following judgment is rendered in lieu thereof: That portion of the judgment decreeing a lien against the lands of the defendant in the sum of $238.76, and directing a sale of said lands in satisfaction thereof, is affirmed. The judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,146, with interest thereon, for the paving and curbing of Laguna street, is reversed, and a new trial is ordered of the issues upon which the said personal judgment was given. The order denying a new trial, so far as it applies to the issues upon which the judgment was rendered for laying the sidewalk, and decreeing a lien therefor, is affirmed.

LATHROPE et al. v. FLOOD. (S. F. 1,703.) 1 (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1901.)

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — CONFINEMENT CASE—UNWARRANTED ABANDONMENT—DAMAGES.

Defendant was employed to attend plaintiff during her first confinement. He assumed charge of the case, visiting plaintiff at intervals, until he deemed it the proper time to employ instruments to aid in the delivery of the child, whereon the plaintiff shrank back and screamed, compelling the defendant to let go the instruments. Defendant threatened the plaintiff that if she did not quit screaming he would quit the case, and on the failure of a second or third attempt to use the instruments he abruptly left the house. This was at midnight, and it was an hour or more before another physician could be obtained, who, on examination, found that plaintiff's condition was not such as to require the use of instruments just then. Held, that a verdict of $2,000 was not excessive for the unwarranted abandonment of the case and the mental suffering occasioned plaintiff thereby.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Margaret A. Lathrope and another against P. H. Flood. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Garret W. McEnerney, for appellant. Wm. S. Barnes and Edgar D. Peixotto, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action against a physician to recover damages for the alleged injuries occasioned by his negligent and unskillful treatment of his patient, and for injuries resulting from the violation of his contract of employment in abandoning her case, and leaving her, in a critical period, without proper or any medical attendance. The case was tried by a jury, which rendered a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $2,000. This appeal is taken from the judgment and from the order denying the defendant a new trial.

The defendant, P. H. Flood, a practicing physician in San Francisco, was employed by the plaintiffs to attend Margaret Lathrope in her prospective confinement. She was a young married woman, and pregnant with her first child. At the beginning of her labor, Dr. Flood was sent for and attended. He concluded that the case would be a prolonged one, and went away, visiting the house at intervals. He returned on the evening of the 27th day of April, and after examination of his patient decided that it would be necessary to employ instruments to aid in the delivery of the child, and that the time for the use of such instruments had arrived. He therefore ordered the attendant nurse to place the patient in proper position, and inserted the instruments, whereupon the sick woman, in fear, or pain, or both, shrank back, compelling the doctor to let go of the instruments or greatly imperil the lives of both mother and child. He made a second effort with like result, and perhaps a third, though this is in controversy. He testifies that he warned the woman to be quiet, and explained to her the danger, both to herself and unborn infant, occasioned by her conduct, and finally told her that, if she "did not quit, he would quit." Upon the part of the plaintiff the evidence is that the woman was suffering excruciating pain, which was increased by the insertion of the instruments; that she screamed, whereupon the doctor said: "You quit your screaming. If you don't quit, I'll quit." Upon the failure of a second or a third effort to employ instruments, the defendant abruptly left the house, without a word of explanation or suggestion to any one. This was about midnight. The husband followed him into the street, imploring him to return, and not to leave his wife in that condition. The defendant refused. "The doctor's reply was, in substance, that the woman screamed, and he was not used to working for women that screamed. The doctor also said that there were plenty of doctors around, and that I could go to the German Hospital. I said, 'I know you cannot get doctors from the German Hospital at this time of night.'" Mr. Lathrope asked him to recommend somebody, and the doctor replied: "You can get any one you like. Get whoever the devil you please. I am not going back." Then he walked away. After an interval of an hour or more, during which time the patient was left with knowledge that the physician had abandoned her, and without any medical attendance, the presence of another physician was secured. He found her not so far advanced in parturition as to require the use of instruments until some six or eight hours afterwards, when, by their aid, he delivered her of an infant, which lived about eight minutes. It does not appear that defendant's treatment of the case up to the time of his abandonment of it was either negligent or unskillful. It does not appear that undue physical injuries were inflicted by his treatment, either upon the mother or the child. If either suffered in this respect, it is demonstrated that the actuating cause was the conduct of the patient in moving and shrinking while the instruments were actually inserted. Upon this it is contended by appellant that the verdict is grossly excessive, and that it would be difficult to sustain a verdict even for nominal damages. But other considerations enter into the determination of the question. It is the undoubted law that a physician may elect whether or not he will give his services to a case, but, having accepted his employment, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, he is bound to devote to the patient his best skill and attention, and to abandon the case only under one of two conditions: First, where the contract is terminated by the employer, which termination may be made immediate; second, where it is terminated by the physician, which can only be done after due notice, and an ample opportunity afforded to secure the presence of other medical attendance. Much expert testimony was given by physicians in this case to the effect that the relation of confidence between physician and patient is all-important, and that a physician is justified in abandoning a case where that relationship does not exist. This is quite true, but the circumstances of abandonment are equally important. He can never be justified in abandoning it as did this defendant, and the facts show a negligence in its character amounting well-nigh to brutality. A young woman is in the throes of labor with her first child. She is suffering apparently not only the natural travail, but something more. Her condition is such that the physician has decided that the time to employ instruments to aid her delivery is at hand. He does employ them; and because the woman, in her fear and anguish, is refractory, he, as he himself testified, "became disgusted"; "he was not a child, to be trifled with"; and so leaves the house in the dead hour of the night, without time or opportunity afforded for the family to procure the attendance of another doctor. Such conduct evidenced a wanton disregard, not only of professional ethics, but of the terms of his actual contract. It was a violation of that contract, and for all damages that resulted the defendant is justly responsible. Barbour v. Martin, 62 Me. 536; Ritchey v. West, 23 Ill. 385; Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 S. E. 564, 18 L. R. A. 627. The plaintiff testifies that her physical sufferings greatly increased after the doctor's departure, and while she was thus left unattended. What her mental sufferings, perturbation, and fear were, the evidence abundantly shows; and, indeed, it was most natural, under the existing circumstances, believing she was going to die, passing through woman's martyrdom thus unaided, that her mental anguish should have been most acute. The law has no scales by which to measure with exactness such mental suffering and the reflex effect of such mental suffering upon the physical condition. The jury, for the injuries suffered by plaintiff, were instructed that in fixing compensatory damages they were to take into consideration the physical injury and suffering and the mental suffering and humiliation, if any, caused by the defendant's negligent act or breach of contract. We can perceive nothing excessive in the verdict which they rendered, and nothing to indicate that they must have been influenced by passion or prejudice. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

TUERS v. TUERS et al. (S. F. 1496.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1901.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—DIVORCE—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCING—ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 3439, declaring that every transfer of property made with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or other person on his just demand shall be void, the transfer of certain property by a husband to his daughter after his wife had commenced suit for divorce, but before himself or his daughter had any knowledge of such action or its contemplation, was valid.

2. A woman who had commenced suit for divorce prior to her husband's conveyance of his property to his daughter had no rights under Civ. Code, § 3457, subd. 4, providing that an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void as to such creditors if the assignor reserves any interest in the assigned property before all his existing debts are paid, since she was not strictly a creditor, nor was the assignment one for the benefit of creditors.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action by Martha J. Tuers against William G. Tuers and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Block, for appellant. Chas. H. Hogg, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by Martha J. Tuers, divorced wife of William G. Tuers, against William G. Tuers, Grace Patterson, his daughter, and her husband, to obtain a judgment declaring null and void a deed and transfer of his property made by defendant William G. Tuers to his daughter. The consideration for the transfer was love and affection, "and that the said Grace Patterson shall afford and give to me a home in her house for the term of my natural life." Before the execution of this instrument Martha Tuers had commenced her action for divorce against her husband on the ground of extreme cruelty. She obtained a decree awarding her a divorce with permanent alimony and counsel fees. In the present complaint she charges that the transfer was made by her husband after the commencement of the divorce proceedings, and was made and received with the common intent upon the part of the grantor and grantee to hinder, delay, and defraud her of her property rights in the divorce action, and that by reason of the transfer, and of the additional fact that William G. Tuers has no other property, she is in fact hindered, delayed, and defrauded in the collection of her alimony and counsel fees. The court found that at the time of the deed and transfer neither William G. Tuers nor Grace Patterson had any knowledge or information that Martha J. Tuers had begun or contemplated beginning an action for divorce, alimony, and counsel fees against the defendant; and that the transfer was made and received in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, and without the intent upon the part of either party thereto to hinder or delay or defraud the plaintiff, or any creditor, or any other person out of any property right or rights whatsoever. Martha Tuers, at the time of the commencement of her action for divorce against defendant, was not, in strictness, a creditor. Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 47 Pac. 37. She became such creditor at the time of obtaining her judgment. Livermore v. Boutelle, 11 Gray, 217; Chase v. Chase, 105 Mass. 385; Burrows v. Purple, 107 Mass. 428; Morrison v. Morrison, 49 N. H. 69; Tyler v. Tyler, 126 Ill. 536, 21 N. E. 616; Ullrich v. Ullrich (Conn.) 37 Atl. 393. Plaintiff, therefore, cannot bring her case within the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 3457 of the Civil Code, which declares that an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void as to such creditors if the assignor reserves any interest in the assigned property before all his existing debts are paid. The transfer here was not an assignment for the benefit of creditors, nor, as has been said, was plaintiff a creditor at the time it was made. But, upon the other hand, plaintiff had a right of action founded upon section 3439 of the Civil Code, declaring every transfer of property made with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or other person of his just demands to be void. It was upon this section of the Code that the action was based; but, before recovery may be had, plaintiff must establish the material averments of her pleading, and this, under the findings of the court, she has utterly failed to do. The judgment and order appealed from must, therefore, be affirmed.

VOSBURG v. VOSBURG. (L. A. 918.)

APPEAL—MOTION TO DISMISS—ORDER OF COURT—REFUSAL TO OBEY.

Defendant appeals from a judgment granting plaintiff a divorce, from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from a subsequent order directing him to bring one of the minor children from New York and give him into the custody of the plaintiff. Defendant did not obey this order, but kept the child, and stayed himself outside the jurisdiction of the court, for the purpose of preventing the execution of the judgment of the court with regard to the custody of the child unless such judgment were favorable to him. Held not sufficient ground on which to dismiss defendant's appeals.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by Kate S. Vosburg against John S. Vosburg. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from an order granting plaintiff custody of minor children, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Works & Lee, for appellant. J. S. Chapman and Charles Silent, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J.: This case is before us on a motion of respondent to dismiss three appeals of appellant,—from the judgment, from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from an order made subsequently to the judgment modifying the decree as to the care and custody of the minor children of the parties. The action is for divorce, brought by the wife against the husband, and was commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county, in this state, where the parties resided. By the judgment plaintiff was granted a divorce, and it was decreed that, of the three minor children of the parties, plaintiff should have the custody of the two younger, and defendant the custody of the eldest, a son named Roydon. It was found by the court that before the commencement of the action defendant had taken the boy Roydon to the state of New York, upon a promise to plaintiff that he would return the child in the fall of the year 1898, but that he did not comply with the promise and had kept him in New York; and it was decreed that defendant should bring said boy back to Los Angeles and keep him within the jurisdiction of the court, and allow the plaintiff to have his society at certain stated times, and that upon defendant complying with that part of the decree he should have at stated times the society of the two children whose custody was awarded to plaintiff. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, and, it having been denied, he appealed from the judgment, and from the order denying said motion. Afterwards plaintiff filed a petition alleging that defendant had not brought Roydon back to California, but still kept him in New York, and praying for further direction as to the control of the children. Defendant appeared and contested the petition; and the court on July 7, 1900, made an order giving the custody of Roydon to plaintiff, and again directing defendant to bring him to California. From this order defendant also appealed.

The present motion to dismiss these appeals is based on the records on appeal, and on an affidavit of plaintiff in which certain facts are stated,—the most important ones being that defendant has not obeyed the order of July 7th, and has not brought the boy Roydon to California, or within the jurisdiction of said superior court; that his refusal to obey said order is without excuse; that he keeps said Roydon in New York, and stays there himself, for the purpose of preventing said superior court, or this court on appeal, from executing or compelling obedience to the judgment already given, or to any judgment which may be given with respect to the custody of said Roydon, unless it be agreeable to him; and that he is speculating on the results of his appeals, and is thus guilty of contempt of courts. It further appears by the affidavit and the findings of the court that the appellant also took one of the younger children to New York at the time he took Roydon, and that, on a habeas corpus proceeding instituted by respondent before a New York court, the custody of said Roydon was awarded to appellant. These statements in the affidavit of plaintiff constitute substantially the grounds upon which the motion to dismiss the appeals is based. The situation as above set forth seems to afford the appellant some advantage which, perhaps, a party, under the circumstances, should not have; but we cannot see that it presents any legal ground for dismissing the appeals.

In determining the motion, we do not deem it necessary to pass on some of the points made by appellant,—as, for instance, that there was no jurisdiction to make any order as to the custody of the child out of the state; that pending the appeal from the judgment there was no authority in the court to change it by the order of July 7th; that this motion depends on questions of fact which were litigated at the main trial, and can be properly considered here only on an appeal from the judgment; and that the adjudication of the New York court on habeas corpus is conclusive as to the custody of the boy Roydon. Assuming, for the purposes of this opinion, that respondent's views on these matters are correct, still the case presented does not warrant a dismissal of the appeals. It certainly does not present one of the grounds for dismissing an appeal prescribed either in the Code or the rules of this court, and it seems to be admitted that there is no precedent for a dismissal for the reasons here relied on. It is contended that there should be applied to this motion the principle upon which certain appeals in criminal cases have been dismissed, because the appellant had broken jail and disappeared, but this contention cannot be maintained. In People v. Redinger, 55 Cal. 290, the leading case on the subject in this state, many of the authorities are reviewed, and the decision is put mainly on the grounds that a criminal action can proceed only when the accused is in custody, either actual or constructive; that he has the right "to appear and defend in person, and with counsel," and that, although our Code prescribes that "the defendant need not personally appear in the appellate court," still "he has no longer the right to appear by counsel when he has escaped from custody, until he has returned to custody"; that by breaking jail and escaping he had waived the right to have counsel appear for him, and had waived his right of appeal; and that courts are not required "to encourage escapes and facilitate the evasion of the justice of the state by extending to escaped convicts the means of reversing their convictions." In such a case the defendant, by an act done after judgment, has so changed his status as to make the execution of the judgment impossible. But there is no such situation in the case at bar. The status of appellant and of the boy Roydon is exactly the same as it was at the rendition of the judgment and order from which he appeals. Whatever part of the judgment was enforceable at the time it was rendered and at the time the appeals were taken, would in like manner be enforceable upon its affirmance. In addition to the specific grounds for dismissing appeals prescribed by statute and rules of court, an appeal will also sometimes be dismissed where it clearly appears that the judgment has been satisfied or the case settled, so that there is no dispute remaining between the parties, and no actual controversy pending; but no such condition appears in the case at bar. And, moreover, we cannot see any other general ground upon which this motion to dismiss can be placed. The motion to dismiss the appeals is denied.

ROSE et al. v. MESMER et al. (S. F. 2,455.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1901.)

PRACTICE—INJUNCTION—SUPREME COURT—ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

Where an appeal was taken to the supreme court from a judgment decreeing that a certain dam was maintained without authority, such court had no jurisdiction to grant a petition for an original injunction, alleging that certain of the defendants had threatened to enforce the judgment by removing the dam, and would do so unless restrained; such act amounting only to a threatened trespass by the parties, involving no act by the court.

In bank. Action by Anderson Rose and others against Louis Mesmer and others. Pending an appeal from the judgment therein, José Antonio Machado applies for a restraining order. Denied.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, Dunn & Crutcher, and Lee & Scott, for petitioners. Clarence A. Miller and M. J. McGarry, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Application for a restraining order. The superior court rendered its judgment in this action August 1, 1900, and it was entered of record August 6th. By the judgment the rights of the several parties to the action in certain lands described therein, and in certain waters held to be appurtenant to said lands, were defined and determined. It was also adjudged that no party to the action has any right to maintain a certain dam then existing, or any dam or other obstruction in the channel of La Ballona creek, upon parcel No. 55 of the lands described in the decree, or to divert any water by means of such dam or other obstruction through any portion of a certain ditch denominated the "Upper Ditch," leading from said dam through and over a portion of the lands. An appeal was afterwards taken to this court, and an undertaking in the sum of $300 filed in support of said appeal. An application is now made to this court on behalf of the appellants for an order restraining the respondents from removing said dam, or any part thereof upon the ground, as stated in said application, that at the time of the rendition of the judgment the dam was upon said parcel of land, and in such condition as to divert all the waters of the creek across which it is constructed, and still remains in the same condition, and that by means thereof the petitioners divert and convey the waters upon their lands; that certain of the respondents "threaten that they will enforce the said judgment by entering upon the said land whereon said dam is situated and removing the said dam," so as to cause all the waters of the creek to flow elsewhere than upon the lands of the petitioners; and that said respondents will, unless restrained by an order of this court, enforce said decree by so entering upon said lands and removing said dam, and will prevent your petitioners from diverting the waters of said creek by means of said dam"; and that, in case said dam is removed, said petitioners will sustain great damage. The petitioners have cited several cases in support of their motion, wherein this court has restrained the superior court from enforcing the judgment appealed from, or set aside the proceedings taken by it therefor, upon the ground that by the appeal the power of the superior court to enforce its judgment was suspended until the determination of such appeal. But in each of these cases the superior court was itself seeking to enforce its judgment by some process issued thereon, or by proceedings instituted for the purpose of punishing the respondents for contempt in disregarding the judgment. It does not appear in the present case that the superior court is attempting to enforce its judgment, or that any process has been issued for that purpose. The statement in the petition that the respondents threatened to enforce the judgment "by entering upon said land whereon said dam is situated, and removing the said dam," does not indicate that the court is, in any respect, seeking to enforce its judgment. Whether the appeal herein has the effect to supersede the power of the court to enforce its judgment is not involved in the present proceeding. It does not appear that any application has been made to that court for this purpose, and, in the absence of any action by it, we are not called upon to determine whether the appeal has such effect, or, if it has, that the court would disregard it. In Dulin v. Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123, we had occasion to consider the function of a writ of superse-deas, and the power of this court to control the enforcement of a judgment of the superior court after an appeal therefrom had been taken. It was there held that the writ is directed to the court whose action is sought to be restrained, or to some officer of that court who may be about to enforce its judgment, and is limited to restraining any action under the authority of the court upon the judgment appealed from. It was also said: "The writ cannot be used to perform the functions of an injunction against the parties to the action restraining them from any act in the assertion of their rights other than to prevent them from using the process of the court below to enforce the judgment." The provision in section 949, Code Civ. Proc., by which an appeal in certain classes of judgments "stays the enforcement of the judgment," is, by the terms of the section, limited to "proceedings in the court below upon the judgment," and has no effect elsewhere. If the respondents have no right to remove the dam, their act in so doing may constitute a trespass for which the petitioners would have their remedy in the proper forum; but it is not within the jurisdiction of this court to issue an original injunction to prevent the commission of a trespass. The principles declared in Dulin's Case must control the rights of the parties in the present application. The application is denied.

SIMS v. PETALUMA GASLIGHT CO.

(S. F. 2,215.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1901.)

CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—DIRECTORS—QUANTUM MERUIT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—GAS PLANT.

1. A contract made on behalf of a corporation, by a person who is its president and one of its directors, with a partnership composed of himself and another person, is void, since the director occupies a fiduciary relation to the corporation, such that he cannot take part in any transaction where he has an interest adverse to that of the corporation.

2. Defendant contracted to pay plaintiff $4,000 for erecting a gas plant to have a capacity of 3,000 feet per hour. The contract was invalid, and suit was brought on a quantum meruit. The capacity of the plant was between 1,000 and 2,000 feet. There was no testimony showing the value of the labor or materials used in erecting the plant. Held not sufficient to support a finding that $4,000 is the reasonable value of the labor and materials used in constructing the plant.

In bank. Reversed.

For opinion in department, see 62 Pac. 300.

VAN DYKE, J. The complaint in this case contains two counts. The first declares upon a contract in writing alleged to have been entered into between Harvey J. Lewelling and Stephen W. Van Syckel, partners in business under the name and style of Lewelling & Van

Syckel, and the defendant gas company, August 20, 1896. It is alleged that by the terms of said contract Lewelling and Van Syckel agreed to build and erect certain water-gas apparatus at the gas works of said defendant, in Petaluma, Cal., for the purpose of manufacturing gas from crude oil, or distillate, by a process known as the "Van Syckel Water-Gas System," the work to be done and the materials to be furnished at the expense of the said Lewelling & Van Syckel, and the plant to have a capacity of 3,000 cubic feet per hour of 22 to 23 candle power gas, for which it is alleged that the defendant agreed to pay said Lewelling & Van Syckel the sum of $4,000; and it is further alleged that the said Lewelling & Van Syckel constructed said gas plant according to the terms of said agreement, and that thereafter, and before the bringing of the suit, they assigned to plaintiff all their right, title, and interest in said contract, and that no part of the contract price had been paid. The second count is in the nature of a quantum meruit for work, labor, and services performed and for materials furnished by said Lewelling & Van Syckel to and for the defendant in the erection and construction of a water-gas apparatus at the gas works of said defendant, the reasonable value of which work, labor, and materials, it is alleged, is the sum of $4,000. The court found, among other things, that the said S. W. Van Syckel on the 31st day of July, 1896, purchased of I. G. Wickersham, then the owner thereof, all the stock of the said Petaluma Gas Company, except five shares, for the sum of $16,500, paying thereon the sum of $1,000, and giving his note for the balance, payable in two years, at 6 per cent. interest; that to secure the payment of the said note said S. W. Van Syckel transferred the said stock to I. G. Wickersham, and agreed, as a further security for the payment thereof, to erect and attach to the said plant of the said Petaluma Gas Company his water-gas system; that, while said Van Syckel was so the owner of the stock of said gas company as aforesaid, the defendant entered into the agreement set out in the plaintiff's complaint, with Van Syckel & Lewelling, to construct the said water-gas system; that, the said Van Syckel neglecting to pay said indebtedness to said Wickersham, the said property subsequently reverted to the said Wickersham, the former owner thereof. From the record it appears that at the trial of the cause the written contract referred to was introduced on behalf of the plaintiff, showing that the same was executed by Lewelling & Van Syckel, as one of the parties thereto, and the Petaluma Gaslight Company, by S. W. Van Syckel, president, and F. A. Wickersham, secretary, as the other party thereto. It is set forth in the appellant's opening brief, and not controverted by respondent, that, after the cause had been submitted to the court upon argument, the court below held the written contract to be invalid, it appearing to have been executed by Van Syckel, as president of the defendant company, on the one part, with himself and Lewelling as parties of the other part; but the court nevertheless found that Lewelling and Van Syckel finished and completed the gas plant according to the terms of the agreement mentioned in the first cause of action pleaded in said complaint. It also found that within two years next prior to the commencement of the action the defendant became indebted to Lewelling & Van Syckel in the sum of $4,000 for work, labor, and services performed by them in the erection and construction of the water-gas apparatus at the gas works of the defendant, and for material furnished by said Lewelling & Van Syckel in and about said work at the special instance and request of said defendant; that the sum of $4,000 is the reasonable value of said work and labor and materials so furnished. From the judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff on said findings, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The court was clearly correct in holding that, for the reasons stated, the contract introduced in evidence on the part of the plaintiff was invalid. Being president of the defendant corporation, Van Syckel necessarily was one of the directors thereof (Civ. Code, § 308); and as such he occupied a fiduciary relation to the corporation and its stockholders. "A trustee may not use or deal with the trust property for his own profit, or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner." Id. § 2229. He cannot take part in any transaction in which he, or any one for whom he acts, has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary. Id. § 2230. In fact, this rule did not have its origin with the Codes, but is much older. It is against public policy to permit any person occupying fiduciary relations to be placed in such a position that he may be tempted to betray his duty as a trustee. "Hence the rule is unyielding that a trustee shall not under any circumstances be allowed to have any dealings with the trust property, with himself, or acquire any interest therein. Courts will not permit any investigation into the fairness or unfairness of the transaction, or allow the trustee to show that the dealing was for the best interest of the beneficiary." Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 29, 28 Pac. 788. In Railway Co. v. Blakie, 1 Macq. 461, it is said: "So strictly is this principle adhered to that no question is allowed to be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of the contract so entered into. It obviously is or may be impossible to demonstrate how far in any particular case the terms of such a contract have been the best for the interests of the cestui que trust which it was possible to obtain. It may sometimes happen that the terms on which a trustee has dealt or attempted to deal with the estate or interests of those for whom he is a trustee have been as good as could be obtained from any other person; they may even at the time have been better; but still so inflexible is the rule that no inquiry on that subject is permitted." See, also, Cook, Stock & S. § 648; Mor. Priv. Corp. § 516; Graves v. Mining Co., 81 Cal. 303, 22 Pac. 665; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 Pac. 777.

The written contract being out of the way, the question was not whether Lewelling & Van Syckel completed the gas plant according to the terms of that agreement, as there was no such agreement in law in existence; but the real question was what work and labor was performed and materials furnished for the company of which it received the benefit, and what the value thereof was, without regard to any express contract. The plaintiff could not recover on the written contract, but he might recover, as upon a quantum meruit, for what the defendant actually received in value. But the evidence does not support the finding that the plant was finished according to the contract. By the terms of that contract the plant was required to have a capacity of 3,000 cubic feet per hour, of 22 to 23 candle-power gas. Van Syckel, on behalf of the plaintiff, testified that it required two hours to heat the plant so that it would make gas, and then it would make from 1,000 to 2,000 feet until heated again. "The ordinary make, however, was from 1,000 to 1,500 feet." Lewelling, also on behalf of the plaintiff, testified: "I know the capacity of the machine per hour. It is inside the amount stated in the contract." He says on cross-examination that he "tested the capacity and found that it would make from 1,000 to 1,500 feet of gas per hour; that he saw it make that amount of gas two or three times." Mr. Cheffins, witness for the plaintiff, who had charge of the plant, testified that some days it would make 3,000 feet, and sometimes less, taking 14 to 15 gallons of oil per thousand feet. William Mills, witness for the defendant, who had charge of the plant from the first, testified that it would not make 3,000 feet per hour. This is the substance of the testimony in reference to the capacity of the plant constructed by plaintiff's assignors, from which it is seen that it does not support the finding referred to. There is no testimony whatever introduced showing the amount of work and labor, either in number of days or value of services, or the amount and value of materials furnished. The case seems to have been tried entirely upon the theory of the validity of the written contract, as the testimony introduced related to that only, and not to that of the second count on the quantum meruit. Defendant's attorneys sought to obtain testimony in reference to the value of the plant as constructed, and asked the following question of the witness Mills: "Has this plant been any addition to the original plant for making gas, or adds anything to the value of that plant?" This was objected to by the plaintiff as being irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and the objection was sustained. Defendant further sought to ascertain which machine—the old or the new one—would make the best and cheapest gas, and the same objection and ruling were had thereon as to the other question. If the question before the court was whether the written contract had been performed or not, the objections were properly sustained; but, if it was whether the defendant had received any benefit from the work and labor performed or material furnished, the questions were proper, and the answers thereto should have been allowed. The finding that the defendant became indebted to Lewelling & Van Syckel in the sum of $4,000 on account for work and labor performed and materials furnished in the erection and construction of water gas apparatus, and the further finding that the sum of $4,000 is the reasonable value of said work, labor, and material furnished by said Lewelling & Van Syckel to the defendant, have not, nor has either, any support in the evidence. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HARRISON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment. I concur, also, in the opinion of Mr. Justice VAN DYKE, except that part of it in which is discussed the general proposition that a trustee cannot deal with his beneficiary. In my opinion, the rule is stated too broadly. I think that under the rule the contract here involved was invalid, but the law as declared in the opinion would exclude exceptions which have been often sanctioned.

SCOVILLE v. ANDERSON. (S. F. 1,677.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1901.)

INSOLVENCY—ATTACHMENT—TIME—COM-PUTATION—CALENDAR MONTH—DAYS—FRACTIONS.

1. Under Insolvency Act 1895, p. 139, § 21, providing that an attachment is dissolved if levied within one month prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings, the commencement of such proceedings is an act, within Code Civ. Proc. § 12, declaring that the time in which any "act provided by law" is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last; as the latter provision relates to acts "permitted by law," and not merely to acts commanded.

2. Insolvency Act 1895, p. 139, § 21, provides that an attachment is dissolved if levied within one month prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings. Code Civ. Proc. § 12, declares that the time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last; and Civ. Code, § 14, subd. 4, enacts that the word "month" means a calendar month, unless otherwise provided. Held, that the rule given for the computation of time applied in computing the time between the levy of an attachment and the institution of insolvency proceedings, and fractions of a day would not be considered, as they are to be considered only in determining priority of events happening on the same day.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Bill by J. J. Scoville, assignee in insolvency, against A. Anderson, to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reed & Nusbaumer and H. W. Hutton, for appellant. Henry N. Beatty and W. W. Sanderson, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Upon January 22, 1896, A. Anderson, defendant and appellant herein, commenced an action in the superior court of the county of Alameda against one William Schmidt to recover a money judgment. Thereafter, on the 24th day of January, at the hour of 12:30 p. m., he caused an attachment to be levied upon certain real estate of William Schmidt, a member of the co-partnership of George F. Smith & Co., which real estate is situated in the city and county of San Francisco. At the hour of 4:20 p. m. of the 24th day of February, 1896, a petition was filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, asking that the partnership of George F. Smith & Co. be adjudged insolvent. An adjudication to this effect was given on the 17th day of November, 1896, upon which day Scoville, plaintiff herein, was appointed assignee. Meanwhile, by order and permission of the court in insolvency, Anderson was allowed to prosecute his action then pending in the superior court of Alameda county to a judgment, and he did so. He subsequently caused execution to be issued upon his judgment, and the land in San Francisco upon which the attachment had been levied was sold on the 1st day of September, 1896, Anderson himself being the purchaser at the sale. On the 5th day of September, 1897, he received his sheriff's deed for the land. Upon the 29th day of May, 1897, Scoville, as assignee of the insolvent co-partnership, commenced this action to quiet title to the land, and from the judgment and decree so quieting the assignee's title Anderson appeals.

Upon his appeal he presents two points for consideration: First, that Scoville's action is a collateral attack upon the order of the superior court granting Anderson permission to prosecute his action, and upon the judgment and execution of the superior court of Alameda county; and, second, that the attachment in the action prosecuted in the superior court of Alameda county was levied more than one month prior to the initiation of the insolvency proceedings. It is conceded that the fee of the property was in William Schmidt, and that all of Schmidt's title, except as affected by the lien of the attachment, passed to the assignee under his appointment, so that the assignee took title by relation as of the 24th day of February, 1896. Insolvency Act 1895, p. 139, § 21; Dambmann v. White, 48 Cal. 450. It is likewise unquestioned that an attachment of the property of an insolvent is dissolved by operation of law if levied within one month prior to the commencement of the proceedings in insolvency. Insolvency Act 1895, p. 139, § 21; Cerf v. Oaks, 59 Cal. 135. Section 49 of the insolvency act provides that, if the amount due the creditors is in dispute, the suit by leave of court in insolvency may proceed to judgment for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due, which amount may be proven in insolvency, but execution shall be stayed. It was in pursuance of this provision of the insolvency act that the order of the court in insolvency was made permitting Anderson to prosecute his suit to judgment, and it does not appear that the order was any broader or went any further than this. In the present action there is no controversy over, and consequently no attack direct or collateral upon, the sufficiency of the judgment, nor the justice of the sum awarded. The respondent assignee admits Anderson's right to prosecute his action to final judgment. His contention is that the attachment lien was dissolved by operation of law by virtue of the fact that insolvency proceedings were commenced within one month next after the levy of the attachment; that, the attachment lien being dissolved, it was not merged into the judgment obtained by Anderson, and that the assignee's title acquired upon the 24th day of February, 1896, was freed from the lien of the attachment, and absolutely perfect; that, notwithstanding this, the existence of the sheriff's deed constituted a cloud upon his title, which he is entitled to have removed by a court of equity. Upon the other hand, respondent concedes that, if the attachment was filed more than one month before the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, it was and continued to be a valid, subsisting lien upon the property, antedating and superior to his own title, a lien that was subsequently properly disposed of by execution sale, and that the question, therefore, is not at all one of collateral attack upon a judgment the validity of which is not assailed, and the sufficiency of which is not in question, but is the single one, namely, did the assignee, on the 24th day of February, 1896, acquire a title to the real property described in the complaint, free of the lien of the attachment imposed upon said property by the levy of January 24, 1896? This position is sound.

Respondent relies upon the provisions of section 21 of the insolvency act, declaring that the "assignment shall dissolve any attachment made within a month next preceding the commencement of the insolvency proceedings." Appellant, recognizing that the validity or invalidity of his attachment lien depends upon this section, insists that in the computation and measurement of time, to protect his private right, the law will regard the fractions of a day, and that between 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon of January 24, 1896, and 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon of February 24, 1896, more than one month had elapsed, and that his attachment lien was, therefore, not dissolved. In measuring and computing time it has been the rule from a very early day in this state to exclude the day upon which the event happened,—a rule and method of computation differing from that of the earlier English practice, which was the inclusive method, under which the time began to run upon the day of the happening of the event. Thus, while in People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 408, it is said that the general rule seems to be that in the computation of time from an act done the day of the act is to be computed, in the next case, of Price v. Whitman, 8 Cal. 412, the exclusive rule is adopted, and it is said: "Of late the general rule of construction seems to have been to exclude the first day;" and in Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, 39 Cal. 540, where it was sought to have the court return to the earlier or inclusive rule, it is said: "We think we are bound by the gravest considerations of public order and security not at this late day to disturb the rule so distinctly and authoritatively settled." Finally, the matter was definitely put at rest by a provision placed in the Codes to the effect that "the time in which any act provided by law is to be done, is computed by excluding the first day and including the last." Code Civ. Proc. § 12; Cr. Code, § 10; Pol. Code, § 12. Still further as bearing upon the question we have in section 14, subd. 4, of the Civil Code, the provision that the word "month" means a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed. Applying these fixed rules, it is demonstrated that, if the act from which time is to run be considered the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, then the 24th day of February is excluded, and, counting backward one calendar month, there is included all the 24th day of January, upon which day the attachment was levied, and the attachment, consequently, was levied within the month. The same result is reached if the initiatory act be considered as the levying of the attachment upon the 24th day of January, by which method the 24th day of January is excluded from computation, and the month runs to and includes all of the 24th day of February. To this, however, objection is made that the filing of the insolvency proceedings was not, within the meaning of section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "an act provided by law to be done"; but this language does not mean that it is an act the doing of which is commanded by law. It applies equally to all acts permitted by law, of which certainly this is one. The analogy in the case of the time allowed to respond to a summons, as to which it is not doubted that the statute applies, is perfect. The party upon whom service is made is allowed 10 days in which to plead. There is no compulsion upon him to plead. He is merely permitted to do so if he wishes. It is an act provided by law to be done.

But it is still further insisted by appellant that, having due regard to the private rights of the parties litigant, the law will regard fractions of a day. The principle here involved was expressed in Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, supra, as follows: "Fractions of days are not to be noticed, unless in a case in which it becomes necessary to ascertain the relative order of occurrences happening on the same day." The supreme court of the United States, in Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689, 25 L. Ed. 766, and in Township of Louisville v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 104 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 775, reviews with much care the authorities and the learning of the law upon the question, and voices its conclusion as follows: "For most purposes the law regards the entire day as an indivisible unit, but, when the priority of one legal right over another depending upon the order of events occurring upon the same day is involved, this rule is necessarily departed from." Appellant places reliance upon the language of Main v. Gilman (C. C.) 11 Fed. 214, quoted with approval by this court in Hoyt v. Railroad Co., 87 Cal. 610, 25 Pac. 160, 1066, where it is said: "It is insisted that the law knows no fractions of a day, but this ancient maxim is now chiefly known by its exceptions. When private rights depend upon it, the courts inquire into the hour at which an act was done, or a decree was entered, or an attachment was laid, or any title accrued." But the principle underlying this language is easily discerned. Where the law requires or permits an act to be done within a statutory period of time or number of days, the question becomes one simply of the measurement of time, and, so measuring time, the first day is excluded, all of the last day included, and fractions of days are totally and universally disregarded. The acting party has all of the last day within which to proceed. But where the question before the court is one where the determination of private rights depends upon the order in point of time of the performance of two or more acts usually done upon the same day, the courts are, of necessity, required to determine the priority and sequence of these events, and to this end always, as of need they must, consider parts and fractions of days. No one, for example, would consider that a defendant upon whom a summons had been served at 10 o'clock in the morning was in default because his answer was not filed until 4 o'clock of the afternoon of the tenth day. Upon the other hand, where the question is that of priority of time in the levy of two or more attachments,—the recording of deeds and the like,—the actual time of performance becomes the essential question, and fractions of days are scrupulously regarded. Of this latter class of cases was that of Hoyt

v. Railway Co., supra, the facts being that a rule of this court provided that, if the transcript was on file when notice was given of a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file, that fact should be a sufficient answer to the motion. The transcript in that case was filed upon the day the motion was served, but some hours after service. In resisting the motion to dismiss, it was urged that the law would not regard fractions of a day, and that the appellant was in time, therefore, if his transcript was filed at any hour upon the day of the service of the notice. It was in answer to this that the language of the federal court above quoted was employed. It was thus not a question where fractions of a day were considered in the measurement of time, but merely where they were considered to determine the priority of the happening of one of two acts. Price v. Whitman, supra, and Iron Mountain Co. v. Haight, supra, were both cases where the measurement of time was under consideration. In both it was urged that fractions of days should be regarded. In both the question was considered, and the fractions rejected. The other cases relied upon by appellant will be found upon examination to be those where the question was not of measurement of time, but a determination as to the priority of the order of events occurring on the same day. The case at bar, then, involves the question of the measurement of time, as to which it is clear that the law will not regard fractions of days, and that the attachment lien was, therefore, avoided by the initiation of the insolvency proceedings upon the 24th day of February. The same conclusion was reached by the supreme court of Connecticut in a parallel case arising under its insolvency act. Miner v. Manufacturing Co., 62 Conn. 410, 26 Atl. 643. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

TAXATION — SOLVENT CREDITS — SECURITY—NONTAXABLE SECURITY—SUPPLE-MENTAL ASSESSMENT.

1. Under Const. art. 13, § 1, declaring that moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, and things capable of private ownership shall be taxed, outstanding loans are taxable notwithstanding that they are secured by pledge of nontaxable personal property.

2. Where a corporation had returned a sworn statement of its property, which was listed and assessed to it, and the taxes thereon collected, an additional assessment of property, not contained in the list, was properly made thereafter; the previous assessment, based on the verified list, not preventing the assessor from making another assessment of property that has escaped assessment; Pol. Code, §

3885, declaring that no assessment shall be illegal because not completed within the time required.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the city and county of San Francisco against La Societe Francaise d'Epargnes et de Prevoyance Mutuelle. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stanly, McKinstry, Bradley and McKinstry, for appellant. Alfred Fuhrman, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action to recover $5,551.60 alleged to be due to plaintiff from defendant as taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, on solvent credits, admitted to be owned by defendant, aggregating $348,721, and secured by nontaxable stocks and bonds. Plaintiff had judgment for the full amount demanded, from which defendant appeals, and urges as the grounds thereof—First, that the credits are not taxable, because they are secured by pledge of property not taxable; second, the assessor had no right or power to assess the said credits, because defendant had already handed in a sworn statement of its property for said fiscal year, which was listed to it, assessed, and the taxes thereon collected by the assessor (it all being personal property), and the said credits were not included in said statement nor in said assessment, but in an additional assessment, made by the assessor subsequent to payment made by defendant as aforesaid, and not based on any sworn statement.

1. We are of the opinion that loans or solvent credits secured by pledge on nontaxable property are taxable. Section 1 of article 13 of the constitution provides that "all property," with certain exceptions therein stated, "shall be taxed in proportion to its value." It further provides that the word "property" as used in said "article and section" shall include "moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises and all other matters and things, real, personal and mixed, capable of private ownership." The admitted credits or outstanding loans of defendant come clearly within the above constitutional definition of "taxable property," and the fact that such loans are secured by pledge of nontaxable personal property in no way affects the question.

2. The assessor was not bound by the verified list of property furnished by defendant, but it was his duty to assess to defendant any of its property that had for any reason escaped assessment. This question is set at rest, and the reasons given, in People v. National Bank of D. O. Mills, 123 Cal. 53, 55 Pac. 685; Savings & Loan Soc. v. City & County of San Francisco (Cal.) 63 Pac. 665. The power of the assessor to make a supplemental assessment embracing newly-discovered property cannot be limited or in any way affected by the previous assessment based on the verified list made by defendant. It is the duty of the assessor to assess all the property for the current fiscal year, and this duty continues so long as the assessment books of such current year are under his control, and whenever he discovers property that has up to that time escaped assessment he should list and assess it to the owner in the manner provided in the Political Code. No assessment is illegal "because the same was not completed within the time required by law." Pol. Code, § 3885. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

HELLINGS et al. v. DUVALL et al.
(S. F. 973.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1901.)
APPEAL AND ERROR—MOTION TO DISMISS—FORMER MOTION—SLANDER OF TITLE—ISSUES—JUDGMENT.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 182, providing that, if an application for an order made to a court in which an action is pending is refused, no subsequent application for the same order shall be made except to a higher court, a motion to dismiss an appeal will not be considered after a former motion to dismiss has been denied.

2. In an action for slander of plaintiffs' title to certain real estate, a defendant's answer denied all allegations of the complaint, alleged ownership in her, and prayed for costs, and that plaintiffs take nothing by reason of their complaint. On the trial no evidence was offered on behalf of plaintiffs. The judgment, in addition to the relief demanded by defendant, adjudged that plaintiffs were not and that defendant was the owner of the land. Held, that so much of the judgment as related to the title to the land was erroneous, since plaintiffs' title was only incidentally involved in the action, and, on their failing to offer any evidence, ceased to be involved in any way, and defendant's title was not involved in the action or defense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by W. B. Hellings and others against Henrietta Duvall and others. From a judgment for defendant Henrietta Duvall, plaintiffs appeal. Modified.

For former appeal, see 51 Pac. 335.

T. M. Osmont and Chas. H. Hubbs, for appellants. Henry S. Foote and Sidney M. Van Wyck, Jr., for respondent.

SMITH, C. Action for slander of plaintiffs' title to certain real estate. The complaint, besides stating in detail the facts constituting the slander, alleges the plaintiffs' ownership of the property described. The answer of defendant Duvall denies all the allegations of the complaint, and alleges ownership in her. The prayer of the answer is for costs, and that plaintiffs "take nothing by reason of their complaint." On the trial no evidence was offered on behalf of the plaintiffs. The judgment, besides granting the relief demanded, further adjudges that the plaintiffs are not, and that the defendant Duvall is, the owner of the lands described in the complaint and judgment. There was a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground of the omission of certain parts of the judgment roll from the transcript, including the answer of defendant Crittenden; and, the motion coming on to be heard, the appeal was dismissed June 7, 1897, as to that defendant, and on December 8th of the same year the motion denied as to the other respondent. 51 Pac. 335. This disposes of the motion to dismiss the appeal, and it would be improper for us to reconsider it. Code Civ. Proc. § 182. The appellants seek by this appeal to have the judgment modified by omitting the adjudication as to the land, and we have no doubt they are entitled to this relief. The plaintiffs' title was only incidentally involved in the action, and, on their failing to offer any evidence, ceased to be in any way involved. The defendant Duvall's title was not involved either in the action or defense, and the allegations of her answer on that point were surplusage. The adjudication of title in her favor was beyond the scope of the action or defense, and therefore erroneous. The defendant Crittenden is in no way interested in this question, and the dismissal of the appeal as to him does not affect it. We advise that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs thereof, the first-named paragraph commencing with the words, "Good cause therefor appearing, it is ordered, adjudged," etc., and the last ending with the words, "45 feet to the point of commencement," and, as thus modified, that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs thereof, the first-named paragraph commencing with the words, "Good cause therefor appearing, it is ordered, adjudged," etc., and the last ending with the words, "45 feet to the point of commencement," and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

WARNER BROS. CO. v. FREUD et al.
(S. F. 2,248.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1901.)

APPEAL—JUDGMENT—DISMISSAL—PAYMENT—ESTOPPEL.

1. Where a judgment creditor has refused to acknowledge a sum paid to be a satisfaction of the judgment, he is thereby estopped from asserting, in a motion to dismiss an appeal from the judgment, that the judgment has been satisfied, and the controversy is at an end.

2. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the judgment appealed from has been satisfied by payment of the sum due thereon, unless such payment was by way of compromise, or with an agreement not to pursue an appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Edward A. Belcher, Judge.

Action by the Warner Bros. Company against Tiny Freud and others. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendants appeal. Motion to dismiss. Denied.

W. S. Goodfellow and W. B. Bosley, for appellants. Hart H. North and Henry E. Monroe (W. B. Treadwell, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground "that, after the taking of said appeal, the appellant Tiny Freud, administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Morris Freud, deceased, voluntarily paid to the respondent, and the respondent accepted, the whole sum of money specified in the decree appealed from; thus effecting a satisfaction of said decree." The motion is made upon the transcript and an affidavit showing that on August 12, 1899, said administratrix paid to the respondent $12,209.67 for the purpose of satisfying the judgment appealed from, and that the money was accepted, and the judgment satisfied. Without stating the facts so fully as might appear to be necessary if the merits of the appeal were now under consideration, the following will suffice for the purposes of this motion: Morris Freud died testate in 1882, seised of certain real estate, which he had mortgaged to the German Savings & Loan Society. By his will he devised to his wife, Tiny Freud, a life estate in said real estate, with remainder to five children in equal proportions; and said Tiny Freud is the administratrix with the will annexed of said estate. After the death of Morris Freud the bank foreclosed its mortgage, and on May 31, 1898, the property was sold thereunder, the bank becoming the purchaser. The respondent, having purchased the interest of one of the remainder-men, on November 30, 1898, as a successor in interest of the mortgagor, redeemed the property by paying to the bank the full amount of $11,609.44, and afterwards brought the present action, against Tiny Freud as administratrix and also in her personal capacity, and against each of the other devisees, praying that the amount of said redemption money which each of the defendants should severally pay be ascertained, and that, in default of such payment by a day to be fixed by the court, each of the defendants so defaulting to be forever barred and foreclosed of all interest in the premises. The answer alleged that the interest which the plaintiff purchased from said devisee was subject to the payment of the debts, charges, and expenses of administration, and that there are such debts, charges, and expenses remaining unpaid. The court found the proportion of the redemption money that should be paid by each of the defendants, and decreed that, in default of payment within 60 days, the interest of the defendant so defaulting should vest "absolutely and forever unconditionally in the plaintiff." From said judgment all the defendants appealed, and it is that appeal that respondent seeks to dismiss. The grounds upon which said motion is based have already been stated in the notice of motion and in the affidavit of Mr. North in support of the motion.

In opposition to the motion is an affidavit of Mr. Bosley, one of appellants' attorneys, stating very fully the circumstances under which said redemption money was paid by the administratrix, from which it appears that Mr. Bosley, Mr. Goodfellow, and Mr. Vandall went to the office of Mr. North, the attorney in fact of respondent, taking with them the money required to effect the redemption, a written tender, and a form of receipt to be executed by Warner Bros. Company by its attorney in fact and its attorneys, entitled in the court and cause, and the body of which is as follows: "Received from Mrs. Tiny Freud, administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Morris Freud, deceased, the sum of \$12,209.67, paid by her pursuant to the terms of the decree entered in the above-entitled action, and in full satisfaction of the amount provided to be paid by her as such administratrix by the terms of said decree,"—dated August 12, 1899. The receipt that was given by respondent is as follows: "San Francisco, August 12, 1899. Received from Tiny Freud, as administratrix of the estate of Morris Freud, dec'd, twelve thousand two hundred nine and $\frac{67}{100}$ dollars. [Signed] Warner Bros. Co., a Corp., per Hart H. North, Its Attorney in Fact." This receipt made no reference to the action, or the decree, or to any purpose for which the money was paid; but to all requests that the receipt prepared by the administratrix should be signed the reply was, "You have your receipt." Mr. Treadwell, of counsel for respondent, said, in effect, that they did not propose to sign anything or do anything that would enable appellant to get any of the money back; that it was their point that the administratrix had no right to effect redemption without an order of court. The facts stated in Mr. Bosley's affidavit were not replied to. It will be observed that in the notice of motion to dismiss this appeal there is no statement that the money was received or paid in satisfaction of the decree, but simply that the payment was voluntary, and the money accepted, "thus effecting a satisfaction of said decree"; and the affidavit of Mr. North is equally careful to avoid any statement that it was received in satisfaction of the judgment appealed from, though he concludes his affidavit with the legal conclusion, "whereby the said judgment became and is satisfied." In an affidavit made by said Tiny Freud in opposition to said motion it is shown that in August, 1900, she filed a petition in the superior court for partial distribution of the estate of Morris Freud, in which she alleged that the land described in the judgment appealed from in this action was the community property of herself and said Morris Freud; that the corporation, respondent herein, appeared and filed an opposition to her said petition, in which it was denied that said property was community property, and alleged that in an action commenced by said corporation against said Tiny Freud and all other persons interested in the estate the superior court, on June 17, 1899, duly made and entered its decree, whereby it was adjudged, among other things, that the interest of Tiny Freud in said real property was a life estate only, and that she had no other interest therein. Her affidavit then proceeds to state that in the present case, in which said judgment was rendered, there was no issue as to whether said real estate was community property; and that she intends to file a supplemental brief, and ask that the judgment be reversed or modified in so far as it may be held to determine that she had only a life estate therein.

The appeal in this case is taken by all the defendants, viz. Tiny Freud, Rosa Vogelsdorf, Hannah Freud, Emily Elaiser, Tiny Freud as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Morris Freud, deceased, and Emma Freud as executrix of the last will and testament of Isaac Freud, deceased. The judgment specifies the amount to be paid by each of these defendants, and divested the estate of each one who should not pay within sixty days. The appeal is from the whole of the judgment. The alleged satisfaction of the judgment was made by Tiny Freud as administratrix. It does not appear that any other of the appellants consented to the payment. We see no ground upon which the respondent has any right to have the appeal dismissed as to any of the appellants, unless it be as to the administratrix. It is shown that there are debts, charges, and expenses of the estate of Morris Freud unpaid. It was her duty to protect the estate as far as possible. If she failed to pay the amount required by the judgment to be paid by her as administratrix, and this court should affirm the judgment, the estate would have been lost to the heirs and creditors. We think she was not bound to determine at her peril what the judgment of this court would be upon the questions of law involved. There was no compromise, no concession by respondent, no condition imposed or assurance given that the appeal would not be prosecuted. On the contrary, respondent expressly refused to sign a receipt acknowledging satisfaction of the judgment; nor has it since offered to give or sign an acknowledgment of satisfaction; nor has any satisfaction of said judgment been entered of record; while the statement of its counsel at the time the money was paid, to the effect that nothing would be signed or done that would enable appellants to get their money back, and that the administratrix had no right to effect redemption without an order of court, would seem to imply that respondent did not intend that the payment should be the end of the matter. But, however that may be, the repeated refusals of respondent to acknowledge satisfaction of the judgment estops it from saying, for the purposes of this motion, that the judgment has been satisfied, and that for that reason the appeal should be dismissed. It cannot, for one purpose, refuse to acknowledge satisfaction of the judgment, and for another purpose insist that it is satisfied. In Hayes v. Nourse, 107 N. Y. 577, 579, 14 N. E. 508, it was said: "It must be deemed too well settled by authority to require further discussion that a party against whom a judgment has been rendered is not prevented from appealing to this court by the fact that he has paid the judgment, unless such payment was by way of compromise, or with an agreement not to take or pursue an appeal." In Erwin v. Lowry, 7 How. 184, 12 L. Ed. 660, the supreme court of the United States said: "Five years is the time allowed for prosecuting appeals to and writs of error out of this court, and in many cases decrees and judgments are executed before any step is taken to bring the case here; yet in no instance within our knowledge has an appeal or writ of error been dismissed on the assumption that a release of errors was implied from the fact that money or property had changed hands by force of the judgment or decree. If the judgment is reversed, it is the duty of the inferior court, on the cause being remanded, to restore the parties to their rights." Upon this point the foregoing is approved in O'Hara v. O'Connell, 93 U. S. 150, 154, 23 L. Ed. 840. In Hayes v. Nourse, supra, the court further said: "The statute giving the right to appeal only requires that the judgment shall be final; that the appeal shall be taken within one year after it is entered; and, anticipating such a case as that now presented, provides that, if the judgment appealed from is reversed, the appellate court may make or compel restitution. The same rule prevailed before the Code, and it was applied whether the judgment was paid before or after writ of error brought. The only difference was in the manner of proceeding to inform the court of the facts on which the right to restitution depended." Freeman, in his work on Judgments (section 480a), says: "One against whom a judgment is entered, if he fails to satisfy it, must expect to see his property seized and sold at a sacrifice; and it is difficult to conceive how his payment of the judgment can give rise to any estoppel against his seeking to avoid it for error. The better view, we think, is that, though the execution has not issued, the payment of a judgment must be regarded as compulsory, and therefore as not releasing errors, nor depriving the payor of the right to appeal." In the case at bar the court found that the real estate sold under the mortgage to the bank and redeemed by respondent, Warner Bros. Company, is of the value of $25,000. The amount paid on August 12, 1899, to respondent, $12,209.67, was less than one-half the value of the property. The judgment was a strict foreclosure of respondent's claim arising out of its redemption from the foreclosure sale; and under the judgment from which this appeal is taken, unless reversed, or satisfied by payment, the property would become forfeited to respondent. The payment made by administratrix, under these circumstances, was prudent, and might well be regarded as compulsory. In support of the motion, respondent cites several California cases, none of which conflict with those above cited. Morton v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 496, 498, 4 Pac. 489, was considered in Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 22, 24, 52 Pac. 41, where it was said that Morton v. Superior Court, supra, "was a collateral attack upon the judgment by way of certiorari, and did not involve the right of appeal from a judgment that had been satisfied"; and that "section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be invoked to abridge the right of appeal where a judgment has been satisfied against the will of appellant." People v. Burns, 78 Cal. 646, 21 Pac. 540, and In re Baby's Estate, 87 Cal. 200, 25 Pac. 405, 22 Am. St. Rep. 239, cited by respondent, were cases where the fruits of the judgment had been received by the appellant. It was held in Kenney v. Parks, supra, that in such cases "a party in whose favor a judgment has been rendered cannot enforce the judgment, and, while enjoying its benefits, appeal therefrom, and seek its reversal." So, in Marble Co. v. Black, 123 Cal. 23, 55 Pac. 600, it was said: "Appellant first contends that the judgment was satisfied, within the meaning of section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the execution sale; but this position is not tenable. The judgment was not, in fact, satisfied, and a forced payment by execution sale against a nonconsenting judgment debtor cannot be held to abridge any of his rights upon appeal;" and Kenney v. Parks, supra, was cited. San Diego School Dist. of San Diego Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of San Diego Co., 97 Cal. 438, 32 Pac. 517, cited in support of the motion, is broadly distinguishable from the present case. That was mandamus to compel the supervisors to levy a tax for school purposes. The board levied the tax pursuant to the judgment, and afterwards appealed from the judgment which they had executed. This court granted the motion to dismiss the appeal, saying: "A reversal of the judgment would not of itself set aside the levy of the tax which had been made, nor did the appellant, by its compliance with the judgment, lose any property or rights of which restitution could be made in case of reversal. Code Civ. Proc. § 957. The proceeding was for the purpose of compelling the defendant to perform an official duty, and not one in which it had any personal rights to be affected." Ferreira v. Tubbs, 125 Cal. 691, 58 Pac. 308, also cited by respondent, has no application here. The question there was as to the effect of a tender pending the appeal. There was no motion to dismiss the appeal, which was taken by the plaintiff from a judgment in his favor. If he had accepted the amount of the judgment, it would, as there said, have been an end of the litigation. The motion is denied.

TOMSKY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 1,206.)

EXECUTORS—GUARDIANS—ATTORNEYS — PROFESSIONAL MISCONDUCT—COURTS—PEREMPTORY ORDERS—JURISDICTION—CONTEMPT.

1. A probate court, on a hearing in the matter of an estate and guardianship, has no jurisdiction to peremptorily order an attorney to refund money received from the executrix and guardian in excess of what the court considers reasonable for the services performed; hence its conviction of the attorney for contempt for refusing compliance with such order was unwarranted.

2. Where an executrix and guardian paid an attorney an amount in excess of what the court thought reasonable, it was error for such court to summarily find the attorney guilty of neglect of professional duty without opportunity of defense in the ordinary way, since the attorney had a right to be heard as to whether or not he had neglected the business of his employment.

Department 2. Certiorari to superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Certiorari on petition of William Tomsky against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to review an order adjudging petitioner, an attorney, guilty of contempt in refusing to refund retainer fees paid by a guardian and administrator. Orders vacated.

Wm. Tomsky, in pro. per. Henry H. Reid, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Application for a writ of certiorari to review certain orders of said court, department 9 thereof, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. The petitioner was the attorney of one Dora Levy, the executrix of the will of Michael L. Levy, deceased, whose estate was being administered in said court, and also of said Dora Levy as guardian of the estate of one Marcus Levy, a minor, which was also pending in said court. The said Dora Levy paid to petitioner the sum of $80 as a retainer and for costs in the estate, and the sum of $30 as a retainer and for costs in the guardianship matter. On the 1st day of November, 1897, the court made an order in the said estate, reciting that petitioner had received the sum of $80 from the executrix, "which he claims as his attorney's fees," and that no order of court had been made allowing attorney's fees. The order then fixed the sum of $25 as the attorney's fee for the services of petitioner, and further ordered that he "return to said executrix herein forthwith the sum of $55." On the same date the court made an order in the guardianship matter reciting that petitioner had received from said guardian the sum of $30, which "he claims as his attorney's fees herein," and that no order of court had been made fixing attorney's fees. The order then directed the petitioner to return to the guardian "forthwith the sum of $30." On the 10th day of November, 1897, the petitioner, not having complied with the said orders or either of them, was, after notice, brought before the court on contempt proceedings. An order in the estate was made reciting, among other things, "that said William Tomsky obtained said moneys from said executrix under and by reason of his promise to her to diligently and properly attend to the settlement and final distribution of said estate, and to pay the necessary costs and charges of, and pertaining to, the administration of said estate, but that he has failed, neglected, and refused to perform the duties so undertaken by him, or to pay out of said moneys or at all the necessary costs and disbursements herein pertaining to said estate." The order further adjudged petitioner guilty of contempt of court in neglecting and refusing to return said money, as ordered by the court, and directed that he be committed to the county jail, imprisoned five days, pay a fine of $100, and that he be further committed to the county jail for the period of one day for every $20 of the fine, until said fine be paid. On the same day the court made an order in said guardianship matter, reciting the failure of the petitioner to pay the said $30 as ordered by the court, and that said petitioner "has not used any of said moneys for the purposes for which he obtained the same, but has converted the whole thereof to his own use." The order further adjudged petitioner guilty of contempt in refusing to pay the said money as ordered by the court, and, as a punishment therefor, directed that he be imprisoned in the county jail for five days, and pay a fine of $100, and, in default of payment, that he be committed to the county jail one day for each $20 of said fine, until the fine be paid. The foregoing statement shows that the court, without a trial, and without giving the petitioner the right to a defense in the ordinary way, found him guilty of neglect of duty and failure to perform services, and directed him in a summary manner to refund the money that had been paid to him. The court in so doing exceeded its jurisdiction. The money paid to petitioner was not paid to him as a trust fund, nor was it paid to him by order of court for a certain purpose. It had not been embezzled or fraudulently taken by him. It was money paid to him as a retainer, and for services by Dora Levy, who employed him. She had the right to employ him, and to make a contract with him, and such employment and contract were binding upon her. If petitioner failed to comply with his contract, or to perform the agreed services, she had her remedy by ordinary action against him, and the courts are open to her for such purpose. In her accounts with the estate, the court would allow her for reasonable attorney's fees, and if she paid out money for services that were never performed, or if she paid more than the reasonable value of such services, she might not be allowed such item in her account, but that would not affect the question as to her liability to petitioner. The petitioner had the right to his day in court, and to be heard as to whether or not he had neglected to attend to the business of his employment as agreed. It is true he is an attorney of the court and an officer thereof, but that does not deprive him of the equal protection of the law. The judge of the court could not arbitrarily order him to refund a retainer received by him, for the mere reason that in the opinion of the judge it had not been earned. The court would have the power to allow or reject the items so paid when the account of the executrix or guardian was presented for settlement, but its protecting arm does not extend so far that it can order all parties to refund money which, in the opinion of the judge, has been wrongfully obtained from the representative of the estate. It was said by this court in Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 413: "It is a principle that underlies all institutions and forms of government that no man can be deprived of his property, except in proceedings according to law, unless it be confiscated for the necessities or good of the public. If his title is claimed to be invalid or fraudulent and void, he is entitled to be heard according to the forms of law. Proceedings to punish him for contempt for not delivering it up, without a trial according to law, to another who claims it, are not the appropriate proceedings for the trial of issue of title. The issue of such title should be tried in an appropriate action, in which the verdict of a jury or the findings of the court may be had upon issues properly framed for the purpose of definitely determining the question of title." See, also, Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 Pac. 118; In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 492, 19 L. Ed. 994. In the latter case it was said by the supreme court of the United States: "The attorney may have cross demands against his client, or there may be disputes between them on the subject, proper for a jury or a court of law or equity to settle. If such appear to be the case, and no professional misconduct be shown to exist, the court will not exercise its summary jurisdiction; and, as the proceeding is in the nature of a contempt, the respondent ought to be permitted to purge himself by his oath. 'If he clear himself by his answers,' says Justice Blackstone, 'the complaint is totally dismissed.'" We do not think the record in this case shows any professional misconduct. No fact is found from which we could say the petitioner was guilty of professional misconduct. If he neglected to perform the professional services which he had agreed to perform, it might be in one sense professional misconduct, but whether he did so neglect or not was a question the petitioner had the right to have tried in the proper manner. The orders are set aside and annulled.

CROSBY v. CLARK. (Sac. 587.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.)

EJECTMENT — RAILWAY LAND — SETTLERS — PURCHASE — IMPLIED TRUST — FRAUD — TRIAL — PLEADINGS — AMENDMENT.

1. Where defendant in ejectment, who had settled on railway land under application to purchase, alleged that plaintiff, who subsequently purchased the same land, obtained his deed by fraudulently representing that defendant had abandoned the land, and the testimony showed that plaintiff's deed was withheld by the railway until they should obtain a relinquishment from defendant, and that plaintiff subsequently told the railway agent that defendant had left, and his whereabouts were unknown, a finding that plaintiff, knowing all the facts, for the purpose of defrauding defendant, induced the railway to sell to plaintiff, was sufficient to support a judgment for defendant, though it did not state that plaintiff, on making application, falsely represented that defendant had abandoned the land; since Civ. Code, § 2224, declares that one who gains a thing by fraud is, unless he has some better right thereto, an involuntary trustee for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had such property.

2. Where defendant settled on railroad land under an application to purchase, but plaintiff subsequently applied for and secured the same land by fraudulently representing to the railroad company that defendant had abandoned it, plaintiff held the same in trust for defendant, though the offers under which defendant settled on the land were not absolute, but provided that settlers who in good faith cultivated and improved lands belonging to the company would "generally" be given the preference.

3. Where defendant settled on land under application to purchase, and plaintiff applied for and secured the same land by fraudulently representing that defendant had abandoned it, in ejectment by plaintiff it was not error to allow defendant to amend his cross complaint by pleading a tender of the purchase price, and offer to deposit in court, as Code Civ. Proc. § 473, permits amendments of pleadings in conformity with justice.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Judgment by F. C. Crosby against Owen Clark. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Seymour, A. L. Hart, and Pullen & Wallace, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and L. L. Chamberlain, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The action is in the nature of ejectment, brought to recover a portion of the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 25, township 13 N., range 6 E., Mt. Diablo base and meridian, the land being situate in Placer county. The plaintiff derails title to the land in question under a deed dated July 26, 1887, from the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which company, it was admitted, became the owner of the lands in the year 1862 by a grant under the act of congress of that year. By way of cross complaint the defendant set up a prior right to purchase from the railroad company the land in question, based on the offers of said company, contained in its printed circulars inviting settlement on its lands, and the acceptance by the defendant of said offers, and the settlement upon and continuous occupation of the land from the year 1872, and by written application to purchase made to the land agent of the company in pursuance of its offers contained in said circulars on December 7, 1874. It is also alleged in defendant's cross complaint that the deed to the plaintiff was fraudulently procured by means of false representations made by the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the facts and rights of the defendant, to the land agent of the company, to the effect that the said defendant had abandoned the land, which representations were made for the purpose of defrauding the defendant. It is further alleged in the cross complaint that, after the execution of the deed to the plaintiff, the defendant tendered to the plaintiff, and offered to pay him, the full amount of all moneys and expenses paid by him for the said deed and as the purchase price of said land and premises, and demanded a conveyance of said land and premises from the plaintiff, and tendered said money into court, and prayed that it be adjudged and decreed that the defendant is the owner of said land and premises, and that the plaintiff has no right and title in the same, and for general relief.

The case was tried upon the issues raised by the answer to said cross complaint, and the findings of the court were in favor of the defendant. The offers contained in the circulars issued by the railroad company are fully set forth in the findings. They, in substance, invite persons who desire to purchase lands from the railroad company, including settlers, pre-emptors, and other claimants, to make application to the land agent of the company at Sacramento, describing the land by legal subdivisions, stating that such application will be filed, and that the party would be allowed three months to complete the purchase, and that during that time the land would not be sold to another without giving the applicant 30 days' previous notice; that actual occupants of lands belonging to the company will generally have a preference in the purchase at the regular price, and that no addition to the price would be made where there were improvements on the lands made by the settler; that in the case of conflicting claims an adjudication of the respective claims would be made by the land agent, on due notice given to both parties, and that persons desiring to purchase could buy on a credit of five years, by paying 20 per cent. of the price down, and interest annually in advance on the remainder of 10 per cent. per annum. It is also found that, induced by and wholly relying upon the offers, promises, and inducements made and held out to him by said corporation, the said defendant did, in the year 1872, enter and settle upon the described lands and premises, and has ever since, in such reliance and faith, held possession thereof, and did improve and possess said lands and premises, and that said defendant did accept the said offer and promises of the said corporation contained in the circulars aforesaid, and did file with said corporation, and deliver to, and the same was received and accepted by, it, his said acceptance and application to purchase said lands, in accordance with the terms of said circulars; that at the said time when the defendant filed his application, to wit, December 7, 1874, said corporation had not fixed the price of said lands and premises, and the same were not ready for transfer by said corporation; that the price was not fixed until the year 1887; that from the said December, 1874, down to and including the 27th day of July, 1887, said defendant was and continued to be in the open, actual, and sole possession and use of said lands and premises, visibly and notoriously, and during all said time did use and improve the same, and pay all the taxes thereon; that in the year 1887 the said corporation did fix the said price of said lands, and place and offer the same formally for sale; that the said defendant was at all times willing, able, and ready to pay the said corporation its said price in accordance with the terms of said circulars; that the said corporation failed and neglected to notify the defendant of the fixing of said price of said lands, or that said lands and premises were offered and ready for sale, and that said defendant did not know, or have any knowledge, prior to the date of the deed of plaintiff, that the said lands and premises were offered for sale, or were ready for sale; that said plaintiff was informed and was cognizant of and knew all and singular the matters and things aforesaid, and for the purpose of defrauding said defendant, and of reaping the benefit thereby for himself, and well knowing the rights of the defendant in the premises, did induce the said corporation to sell to him, said plaintiff, the lands and premises in question, and did then, to wit, July 27, 1887, receive from said corporation the deed in question. And as a conclusion of law that the plaintiff have and receive the sum so deposited in court by the defendant, and that the defendant be decreed the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of the land and premises in controversy, and for the costs of suit.

1. The appellant makes the point that the court failed to find that the plaintiff falsely represented that the defendant had abandoned the land in question at the time he made application to purchase. The land agent of the railroad company testified that the plaintiff was informed of the application of the defendant to purchase, and of his rights in the premises, and the deed was withheld pending the filing of relinquishment or abandonment of the defendant's application, which was then on file in the land department of the railroad company; and that the plaintiff subsequently called at the office of said land department, and stated that the defendant had left the premises in question, and that his whereabouts were unknown. Although the finding is not as specific as the testimony would warrant, it is sufficient, in this respect, to support the judgment. It is that the plaintiff, knowing all the facts and circumstances, and knowing the rights of the defendant, and for the purpose of defrauding him, "did induce said corporation to sell to him." It clearly appears that the plaintiff could not have obtained his deed from the railroad company while the land was in the actual occupation and possession of the defendant, claiming rights under the offers and inducements of said company, without obtaining a relinquishment of the rights of said defendant, or, at any rate, after notice and hearing. "One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." Civ. Code, § 2224; Story, Eq. Jur. § 885; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1053. Boyd v. Brinckin, 55 Cal. 427, was a case similar to the one under consideration. That was ejectment commenced by the plaintiff, to which the defendant, by way of cross complaint, set up substantially the same facts as are contained in the cross complaint of the defendant in this case. A demurrer interposed to this cross complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense or cause of action against the plaintiff was sustained. On appeal the judgment entered upon the demurrer was reversed. In speaking of the nature of the contract between the defendant, who had settled upon the land, and the railroad company, the court remarks that a contract of this character belongs to the group which is said to be "created by representations made by one party and acts done by the other party upon the faith of such representations," Pom. Cont. § 69. "And, further, the defendant alleges that the plaintiff, before and at the time of purchasing, had knowledge of the agreement between the defendant and the railroad company, and of all of the defendant's acts thereunder. If so, the plaintiff took the land impressed with a trust in favor of the defendant, and holds it in trust for the defendant, and can be compelled at the suit of the defendant to specifically perform the agreement of the railroad company by conveying the land in the same manner and to the same extent as the railroad company would have been liable to do had it not transferred the legal title; and the plaintiff is the proper party in the suit against whom to demand the conveyance." Railroad Co. v. Terry, 70 Cal. 484, 11 Pac. 769, was an action of ejectment to recover possession of the land occupied by the defendant. The defendant settled upon the land under the provisions of the printed circulars of the railroad company inviting settlers to go upon such lands and occupy and use them until such time as it would be ready to sell,—similar to the circulars and offers in the present case. When the land was graded, and the price fixed, the defendant made application under the circulars and offers to the land agent of the company to purchase, and his application was refused. The court, in its opinion, says that the company could not legally do this, "because the offer which it made to sell its lands to actual settlers, having been accepted by the defendant, who settled upon a portion of the lands, constituted a contract of sale, and established the relation of vendor and vendee between the company and defendant as a bona fide settler," and affirmed the judgment in favor of the defendant.

2. The appellant contends, however, that the cases referred to are not authority, for the reason that the offer of the company contained in the circulars in this case is different from the offer in the other cases, in this: The language of the offer in this case, as already shown, is, "Settlers and actual occupants who in good faith cultivate and improve lands belonging to the company will generally be given preference of purchase at the graded price." The word "generally" was omitted from the offers in the cases under consideration in Boyd v. Brinckin and Railroad Co. v. Terry, supra. However, in Kelly v. Railroad Co., 74 Cal. 557, 16 Pac. 386, the terms of the offer contained in the circular were identical with the offer in the present case. That was an action to compel the defendant to specifically perform a contract for the sale of the land. It appears that one Cole had settled upon the land in question, and continued to reside thereupon, and make improvements, relying upon circulars issued by the railroad company similar to those referred to in this case, and believing that he would have the prior right to purchase from the company; and it appears that Kelly resided in the vicinity, and knew all the facts, and of Cole's equities. Cole intervened in the action, and prayed for the conveyance of the land in controversy to him. The court below decreed that the land be conveyed to Cole, and Kelly appealed. The findings showed that by reason of false representations made by Kelly to the land agent of the railroad company, which were untrue, and known to be untrue by him at the time, the company was deceived, and entered into said contract; and, upon becoming aware of the deception which had been practiced by Kelly, refused to carry out the contract and make a conveyance. On the appeal, in reply to the contention of Kelly that the false representations were not productive of injury to the railroad company, this court said: "It is not necessary that the injury should result to the vendor. It is sufficient if it would result to third persons;" and the judgment was affirmed. In Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 419, 18 L. Ed. 930, it is said "that, where one party has acquired the legal title to property to which another has a better right, a court of equity will convert him into a trustee of the true owner;" and in Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 85, 20 L. Ed. 487, the court said: "If, for any reason recognized by courts of equity as a ground for interference in such cases, the legal title has passed to one party, when in equity and in good conscience it ought to go to another, a court of equity will convert him into a trustee." In this case it appears that the railroad company held itself ready to carry out its offer to the defendant under the circulars in question, and was only prevented from doing so by the fraudulent interposition of the plaintiff; and under well-settled principles of law the plaintiff should not be permitted to reap the fruits of his fraud.

3. The court did not err in allowing the defendant to amend his cross complaint pleading a tender and offer to deposit in court, nor in denying plaintiff's motion to strike out said amendment. Amendments to pleadings so as to enable the party to prove all the facts necessary to his cause of action or defense are favored. If, by reason of such amendment, the opposite party is taken by surprise, the cause can be continued, or time allowed to meet the amendment, or such other terms imposed as may be just under the circumstances. It can very rarely happen that a court would be justified in refusing a party leave to amend his pleading so that he may properly present his case. Code Civ. Proc. § 473; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786; Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 321; Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 33 Pac. 86.

The conclusion reached renders it unnecessary to consider the question of adverse possession and the statute of limitations. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SCHAAKE v. EAGLE AUTOMATIC CAN CO. et al. (S. F. 1,501.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1901.)

ACTIONS—JOINDER — PLEADINGS — PARTIES—COMPLAINT — UNCERTAINTY — DEMURRER—LEAVE TO AMEND — REFUSAL — MOTION TO VACATE—APPEAL—ABUSE OF DISCRETION—STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION—CORPORATIONS — DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS — LIABILITY—PROPERTY CHARGED WITH LIABILITY—ACCOUNTING.

1. Where the court sustained demurrers to a complaint without leave to amend, and the complaint stated a cause of action, the face of the record showed an abuse of the court's discretion to allow or disallow amendment of the pleadings.

2. Where an order refusing leave to amend was inserted in an order sustaining demurrers to the complaint, the former order was excepted to by force of Code Civ. Proc. § 647, providing that an order allowing or refusing to allow amendments to the pleadings would be deemed to have been excepted to, and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to move to vacate or modify the order entered in order to have the point reviewed on appeal.

3. A complaint alleged that a contract between the inventor of certain patented machines and improvements and a can company provided that if such machines and improvements were sold by the can company, or transferred for use under a license outside of certain territory, the inventor was to have a certain per cent. of the profits accruing thereby to such can company. It further alleged that the can company did sell such inventions and improvements to be used outside of such territory without any reserve or limitation, and that the buyer at such sale and its licensees were using such machines and improvements outside of such territory. Held, that the complaint stated a cause of action against the can company.

4. Under Civ. Code, § 309, declaring that the directors of corporations must not divide or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock, except what remains after the payment of all its debts on its dissolution or the expiration of its term of existence, the capital stock of one corporation, issued to a number of persons, all but one of whom were the stockholders of another corporation, in consideration of the transfer to the former of all the latter's property, capital, patents, and assets, was in fact the property of such latter corporation, and a fund for the payment of its debts; hence all such corporation's stockholders who had received any of the stock issued by the former corporation were proper parties to a suit against the latter corporation.

5. Where a complaint seeking to recover a certain per cent. of the profits accruing to a corporation by reason of the sale of certain property states that such corporation received no consideration for the transfer of the property, but further alleges that the corporation to which it was sold issued 2,888 shares of its capital stock to the stockholders of the corporation selling it, in payment for such property, the statement as to consideration did not prevent the facts alleged from constituting a cause of action, since it was a conclusion of law erroneously drawn from the facts.

6. Where a corporation issued part of its capital stock to the stockholders of another corporation in consideration of the transfer of all the latter's property, assets, and patents, including the right to use and authorize the use of certain patented machines outside a certain territory, with notice that such transfer created a liability against the latter corporation, and that such corporation could not discharge the same, it took the property charged with that liability, and was a proper party to a suit against the other corporation on the same.

7. Where a party had a right to a certain per cent. of the profits of the sale by a corporation of certain patents, and the corporation sold the patents, but directed the proceeds to be delivered to its stockholders, a complaint setting up these facts did not fail to state a case for an accounting, in that it failed to show that anything was received by the corporation for which it should account.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Edward A. Belcher, Judge.

Action on contract by Henry Schaaque against the Eagle Automatic Can Company and others. From a judgment sustaining demurrers to the complaint, without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

J. C. McKee and F. M. Parcells, for appellant. E. S. Pillsbury and Olney & Olney, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The other defendants are the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works (a corporation), Henry Pierce, Irvin Ayres, C. H. Watt, F. P. Howard, W. H. Talbot, A. L. Ayres, H. L. Hutchinson, E. B. Pond, William Renzie, J. M. Duke, W. P. Johnson, May Martin Philips, and J. W. Philips. These defendants, except the last two, were stockholders in the Eagle Automatic Can Company, and held all its stock (2,000 shares); and Pierce, Ayres, Watt, Howard, and Talbot were directors. The amended complaint was demurred to by each of the corporations, and also by the individual defendants, severally; and these demurrers were sustained, without leave to amend, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon entered.

The amended complaint alleges, in substance, the following facts:

On October 26, 1892, the said Eagle Automatic Can Company, a corporation engaged in the manufacture of tin cans by the use of certain automatic patented machines and processes, at the city and county of San Francisco, as party of the first part, entered into a contract with the plaintiff, as party of the second part, the substance of which is as follows: The second party agreed to serve as superintendent of the can factory of the first party for three years from the date of the agreement, unless it should be sooner terminated according to the terms thereafter set forth; that, in connection with his duties as superintendent, he should give due attention and care to perfecting, improving, and developing the various machines and machinery in use in the factory, and endeavor to improve said machines and discover and invent others for use in said factory and business; that any and all inventions or improvements which had been or might be invented, discovered, or made by the second party during the time he had been or should be employed as superintendent should be perfected and completed by the second party when so required by the first party, and applications for patents to be made when required by the first party at its expense, and to be assigned to it upon request, and, whether patented or not, any and all of such improvements or inventions so made should "be and remain the sole property of the party of the first part during the entire life of the patent or patents, and entirely in the control of said party, and for the exclusive use and benefit thereof: provided, that said party of the second part shall have an indefeasible interest in any and all of said inventions or improvements, whether patented or not, equivalent to twenty-five per cent. of all profits accruing to or received by the party of the first part on account of the sale, use, or license to use, or on account of the manufacture to sell, use, or license to use, any of said inventions or improvements, outside of the city and county of San Francisco." In consideration of the foregoing, the first party agreed to pay the plaintiff $190 per month during said period of three years, or until the agreement should be duly terminated according to its terms. The first party also agreed "to pay to the party of the second part ten per cent. of the cost price of any and all machines or parts of machines or improvements on machines made, discovered, or invented by the party of the second part as hereinbefore set forth, which said party of the first part shall cause to be used or authorize the use of outside of the city and county of San Francisco; also to pay to the party of the second part twenty-five per cent. of all profits accruing to or received by the party of the first part on account of the sale, use, or license to use, or on account of the manufacture to sell, use, or license to use, any of said inventions or improvements outside of the city and county of San Francisco." It was further agreed that in the event that the first party retired from the business of manufacturing tin cans, and for that reason had no further use for the services of the party of the second part, "then this agreement to cease and determine, and all future obligations hereunder shall be mutually canceled and annulled," and the first party released from payment of said salary, and the second party from the duties of superintendent or other service, and that inventions or improvements thereafter discovered should be for the exclusive use of the second party: "provided, that no rights or interests or obligations arising or originating before this agreement is terminated as herein set forth shall be affected in any manner by the said termination hereof."

The plaintiff further alleges performance of his said contract, enumerates 12 inventions for which patents were issued, 8 for which patents were allowed but not yet issued, and 7 improvements not patented, all of which were assigned and delivered to the said Eagle Automatic Can Company, and solely used by it; that in October, 1895, the defendant the Eagle Automatic Can Company entered into an agreement with the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, a corporation, and a defendant herein, to sell to it all its capital, patents, property, rights, franchises, privileges, and assets owned, held, or controlled by the defendant the Eagle Automatic Can Company, including all the inventions and improvements made by the plaintiff; that the same was so sold and delivered, to be used outside of the city and county of San Francisco, "or anywhere, without reserve or limitation," and that no consideration therefor was received by the Eagle Automatic Can Company, but that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, with the knowledge and approval of all the defendants, issued 2,888 shares of its stock to the following named defendants: Henry Pierce, 700 shares; F. P. Howard, 354 shares; Irvin Ayres, 835 shares; O. H. Watt, 520 shares; H. L. Hutchinson, 340 shares; W. P. Johnson, 10 shares; and to May Martin Philips, 129 shares. And it is alleged that said defendants gave no consideration for said stock, but received the same, according to said agreement, for procuring, consenting to, and ratifying said sale, and that thereby the Eagle Automatic Can Company was deprived of all its property, capital, and assets, has ceased to do business, and is insolvent. It is then alleged that the cost price of the machines and machinery patented, invented, and improved by plaintiff, and by him assigned and delivered to the Eagle Automatic Can Company, and by that company sold and delivered to the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, was $160,000, and the value of the stock issued therefor to the defendants above stated was $190,000. It is then alleged that at the time of said sale "several of the said machines and machinery were practically worn out and of little value, and were subsequently abandoned, so that the whole lot was sold for a sum far in excess of its value, and a very large profit—the exact sum being unknown to plaintiff—thereby accrued to said Eagle Automatic Can Company on account of said sale authorizing the use of said machines outside of the city and county of San Francisco, and said profit was received by said defendants in stock, as stated." It is then alleged that the value of the patents on machines and improvements discovered and invented by plaintiff, and delivered to the Eagle Company under said contract, was $74,000, the equivalent of which was paid to said defendants in stock, and which sum comprised the profits of the Eagle Automatic Can Company by the sale of said patents to be used outside of the city and county of San Francisco.

It is further alleged that said sale and transfer, the issuance of said stock, and the organization of said Pacific Sheet-Metal Works to receive said property and assets, were in pursuance of a conspiracy theretofore entered into by and between all of the defendants, acting in concert, with the intent of defrauding plaintiff of his rights and interests in said property under said contract, and in pursuance thereof dividing the proceeds and profits resulting from the consummation of said conspiracy, to wit, "2,888 shares of the capital stock of said Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, as stated, of the value of $288,800," and that all of said parties were fully aware and had notice of the existence of said contract, and that, as a result of said sale, plaintiff was entitled to 25 per cent. of the price paid for the patents sold and delivered to be used outside of the city and county of San Francisco, 25 per cent. of the profits on the machines and machinery so sold, and 10 per cent. on $160,000, the cost of the same, all with the purpose and intent to wrong and defraud the plaintiff; that plaintiff has no means of ascertaining, and is unable to state, what part of said sum of $288,800 was paid for the use of said patents inside of the city and county of San Francisco, and what part was for the use of said patents and machinery outside of said city and county; that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works and its licensees have used and are now using all the said patents and improvements outside of the city and county of San Francisco, "and nothing has been received by plaintiff for or on account thereof from said Eagle Automatic Can Company, or from any of said defendants, or at all; that by reason of the premises said defendants, and each of them, are indebted to plaintiff in a sum, the exact amount of which plaintiff is unable to ascertain, and therefore cannot state, but no part of which has been paid."

The prayer is: (1) "That an accounting be had, and the original cost, as well as the real value at the date of the sale, of the property and assets of said Eagle Automatic Can Company, in which plaintiff had an interest by reason of said contract, sold to said Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, the price paid for the same, the proportion of the price paid for use and authority to use the said patents, machinery, and improvements outside of the city and county of San Francisco, and the profits accruing from the sale, be ascertained." (2) That he have judgment against each for such sum as he may be entitled to, with interest, and for other proper relief. Each of the corporations and the individual defendants demurred separately, specifying that the facts stated do not constitute a cause of action, that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant, that several causes of action are improperly united, that the complaint is ambiguous in certain particulars and unintelligible in others. On November 10, 1897, the court made an order reciting that, the demurrers having been theretofore submitted and taken under advisement, "It is ordered that said demurrers be, and the same are hereby, sustained, without leave to the plaintiff herein to amend the complaint on file herein," and directing judgment to be entered in favor of the defendants for costs.

Respondents contend, however, that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrers "without leave to amend." It is said that the complaint had been once amended, that the allowance of a further amendment was wholly within the discretion of the court below, and that there is nothing in the record which shows an abuse of discretion; citing Buckley v. Howe, 86 Cal. 596, 605, 25 Pac. 132, 134, where it is said: "The privilege of amending after trial of the issue of law raised by demurrer is not one of right, but one resting in the discretion of the trial court. Code Civ. Proc. § 472. If the plaintiff desired to again amend, she should have applied to the court below, and, if refused, exceptions should have been taken. It is too late to make the point for the first time in this court, when nothing appears in the record to show an abuse of discretion." We do not question that proposition; but, if a complaint states a cause of action, the face of the record would "show an abuse of discretion" in sustaining a demurrer upon any ground without leave to amend. Accordingly, in Buckley v. Howe this court reviewed all the facts which were relied upon to show a cause of action, and concluded that she had failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the demurrer to her complaint was properly sustained. The order refusing leave to amend in this case was inserted in the order sustaining the demurrers, and was made at the same time. It cannot be presumed that the plaintiff asked leave to amend in advance of the ruling upon the demurrers, and, the order denying his right to amend having been made, and excepted to by force of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 647), it could not be required that he should move to vacate or modify it in order to have the point reviewed upon appeal. Demurrers for ambiguity or uncertainty are in aid of the pleading, and contemplate an amendment in the particulars specified in them. We do not say that there is no limit to the right to amend when such demurrers are sustained, since several failures—perhaps but one or two—may develop a want of facts, or show that the fault cannot be remedied. The case of Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 Pac. 113, cited by counsel for the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, has no application. In that case the fact of an application for leave to amend appeared only by the affidavit of counsel, and there was no bill of exceptions or statement containing any action of the court thereon. The contract between the plaintiff and the Eagle Automatic Can Company is set out in full in the complaint, and its principal provisions have been hereinbefore sufficiently stated. Under its terms the plaintiff had no profit or interest in his patents and improvements so long as their use was confined to the city and county of San Francisco. The contract contemplated, however, that these patented machines and improvements might be manufactured for sale or use under a license by other manufacturers outside of said city and county, and in such case he was to have the interest or profits therein specified. It is also alleged that in October, 1895, the Eagle Automatic Can Company agreed to sell to the defendant the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works "all the capital, patents, property, rights, franchises, privileges, and assets owned, held, or controlled by said defendant the Eagle Automatic Can Company, including all the inventions and improvements discovered or made by the plaintiff as hereinbefore set forth, and to be used outside of the city and county of San Francisco, or elsewhere, without any reserve or limitation whatever"; and that on or about February 12, 1896, the sale was consummated by the board of directors, with the approval of the stockholders. It is directly alleged that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works was by said sale authorized to use said property outside of said city and county, and it is also alleged that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works and its licensees have used and are now using the same outside of said city and county. These facts, if proved, would entitle the plaintiff to recover the percentages stipulated for in the contract, at least as against the Eagle Automatic Can Company. It is true, it is alleged that that corporation sold "all its property, capital, and assets of every kind and character, has ceased to do business, now is, and since said sale has been, entirely without assets and insolvent"; but that does not relieve it from liability for its debt. It is also true that it is alleged that it received no consideration from the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works for the property it sold to the last-named corporation; but it is alleged that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works issued, in payment therefor, to the stockholders of the Eagle Automatic Can Company, 2,888 shares of its capital stock. But said corporation was not authorized to sell all its property for stock in another corporation to be issued not to it, but to its stockholders, as we shall hereafter see; and, the facts being stated, it is apparent that the pleader's statement that the corporation received no consideration for the sale is a conclusion of law erroneously drawn from the facts alleged; and, it further appearing that the property sold was "authorized" by the Eagle Automatic Can Company to be used outside of the city and county of San Francisco, a cause of action against said Eagle Automatic Can Company is stated. We also think that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works, and the stockholders in the Eagle Automatic Can Company who received any of the stock issued by the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works in payment for the property sold to it by the first-named corporation, are each proper parties to the suit, and that the demurrer for misjoinder of parties should have been overruled.

It is alleged that the Eagle Automatic Can Company sold all its property, capital, patents, and assets to the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works pursuant to an agreement, and that the last-named corporation issued to Pierce, Howard, Ayres, Watt, Hutchinson, Johnson, and May Martin Philips 2,888 shares of its capital stock in payment therefor,—all of said persons, except Mrs. Philips, being stockholders in the Eagle Automatic Can Company; that said corporation has ceased to do business, and is insolvent. The corporation, however, has not been dissolved, and the effect of this transaction was an attempted distribution of all its property, capital, and assets of every description to its stockholders, in violation of section 309 of the Civil Code, which provides, among other things, as follows: "The directors of corporations must not make dividends, except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock, * * * except as hereinafter provided. * * * Nothing herein shall prohibit a division and distribution of the capital stock of any corporation which remains after the payment of all its debts, upon its dissolution, or the expiration of its term of existence. * * *" Said corporation has not been dissolved, nor has its term of existence expired. It is alleged to be a corporation, and its demurrer admits its existence as such. Section 13 of the act of 1853 (St. 1853, p. 89) contained substantially the provisions now found in said section of the Civil Code, and those provisions were considered in Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300. In that case two corporations, each owning in severalty several water ditches, and having no interest in common, agreed to form a new corporation, to which each should convey all its property, the stock of the new corporation to be distributed in certain proportions to the stockholders of said two corporations. One of said original corporations was indebted to the plaintiff, who brought suit against it, attached the property formerly belonging to it, obtained judgment, and became the purchaser at execution sale, and obtained the sheriff's deed therefor. Before the plaintiff recovered said judgment the defendant recovered judgment against the new corporation, and sold the whole of the property held by the new corporation upon execution, and became the purchaser, and obtained a sheriff's deed therefor. Plaintiff sued to recover possession of the property which he had purchased, and the foregoing facts were set up as an equitable defense. The original corporations were the Eureka Lake Company and the Miner's Ditch Company, and the new corporation was named the Eureka Lake Water Company. It was the property conveyed by the first-named corporation that was in controversy. The court, after saying that the transaction as agreed upon and attempted to be carried out, if effectual in law, would, of necessity, have resulted in an alienation of the entire property and capital of the Eureka Lake Company, and that not a dollar would have remained to satisfy the demands of creditors, said: "The contract was that this stock [in the new corporation] was to be issued, and it was afterwards issued, directly to the stockholders of the Eureka Lake Company. It does not vary the principle that the consideration to be paid was stock instead of money. If the contract had been that on the transfer of the property the Eureka Lake Water Company would pay to the stockholders of the Eureka Lake Company $100,000 in cash, as the price of the property, the legal proposition involved would have been precisely the same as in this case. In either case the consideration would have been paid, not to the trustees as a fund primarily liable to creditors, but to the stockholders for their own use. * * * If this be not a violation of that provision of the statute which forbids the trustees to divide, withdraw, or in any way pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock of the company,' we are unable to conceive a case which would."

Kohl v. Lillienthal, 81 Cal. 378, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520, involved a similar question. There two mining corporations, owning contiguous mining claims, formed a new corporation, to which they severally conveyed their mines, the new corporation paying therefor in stock 100,000 shares to each of the two corporations, one of which was organized under the laws of California. The plaintiffs, who were stockholders in said California corporation, brought suit against it and certain of its officers to compel a distribution of the stock received from the new corporation among its stockholders in proportion to the number of shares held by each. It was held that the stock issued by the new corporation in payment for the mining ground of the former corporation must be considered as part of the capital of such former corporation with which to carry on business, and cannot be distributed among the stockholders thereof until it ceases to exist, either by expiration of its term of existence or by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. In this case Martin v. Zellerbach, supra, is cited and approved. See, also, Railroad Co. v. Bee, 48 Cal. 398, 405, a case of reincorporation, where it was said: "It was certainly not competent to the members of that corporation to dissipate this fund, and place it beyond the reach of creditors, by merely going through the process of reincorporation, taking on a new corporate name, transferring the assets of the old corporation to the new one without consideration, and issuing the capital stock in the new corporation to the holders of the capital stock in the old corporation. This transaction involved a breach of positive statute law."

It may be said that, at the time the sale by the Eagle Automatic Can Company to the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works was negotiated, there was no indebtedness existing against the former corporation in favor of the plaintiff. But there was a subsisting contract existing between them under which a liability might be created, and was created, by the sale to the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works. Of this contract the stockholders of the Eagle Automatic Can Company are charged with notice, since it was, in effect, their contract, executed by their board of directors; and it is alleged that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works purchased with notice of it, and therefore with notice that the sale authorizing the use of the machines outside of the city and county of San Francisco created a liability in favor of the plaintiff which the selling corporation, because of the sale, could not discharge, and therefore it took the property charged with that liability. Under these circumstances, we think it clear that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works is both a proper and a necessary party to the action, and that the stockholders of the Eagle Automatic Can Company who received the stock alleged to have been issued to them in payment for the property sold to the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works are proper parties.

It is also urged that the complaint does not show a case for an accounting. That it is a proper case for an accounting would seem to be clear. These patents and improvements were assigned to the corporation by the plaintiff, but reserving an interest in certain profits which might be realized by the corporation. The relation thus created was fiduciary, and, as to plaintiff's share or part of the profits realized, the corporation was a trustee. But counsel say that the complaint shows that no profit was realized or received by the Eagle Automatic Can Company to be accounted for. The corporation having sold the property, and authorized the delivery of the proceeds of the sale to its stockholders, in violation of the statute, will not be heard to say that nothing was received for which it should account. Nonpayment is sufficiently alleged.

As to the other grounds of demurrer little need be said. There are many faults in the complaint, but they are capable of amendment, and, as to most of them, what has been said will sufficiently indicate what they are. Faults consisting in ambiguities and uncertainties should be viewed, to a certain extent, in the light of the situation of the parties as to their knowledge of the facts; that is, as to facts of which the plaintiff cannot, from their nature, have as full information as the defendant, less certainty is required in the allegations of the complaint, partly because a desirable degree of certainty may be impossible, and partly because, the facts being known to the defendant, he is not likely to be embarrassed or injured.

The allegation that the Eagle Automatic Can Company received no consideration for the sale has been sufficiently noticed.

In paragraph 9 it is alleged that the Pacific Sheet-Metal Works issued stock to the defendants named "to the value of $190,000." It is alleged in paragraph 8 that 2,888 shares of its stock were issued to the persons there named, and in paragraph 10 it is alleged that said 2,888 shares were of the value of $288,800. All of said 2,888 shares were issued to said defendants, and this difference in statement as to the value begets uncertainty. We think the judgment should be reversed, with directions to overrule the several demurrers for want of facts, and to sustain the demurrers for ambiguity and uncertainty in the particulars herein specified, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his amended complaint, if he shall be so advised; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. MOONEY. (Cr. 706.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER ACQUITTAL—EFFECT OF VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL AFTER REMAND—ARSON—INSTRUCTIONS—MISCONDUCT OF JUDGE—PHOTOGRAPHS OF HANDWRITING.

1. Defendant was convicted of arson, and appealed, and the cause was reversed and remanded for the insufficiency of the information. On a return of the remittitur the information was dismissed, and a new prosecution instituted. Held, that the defendant could not plead a former conviction, based on the theory that, as the appeal was partially from a motion in arrest, on remand the judgment should have been arrested, and that the dismissal was in effect a judgment of acquittal, under Pen. Code, § 1237, providing that an arrest of judgment will operate as an acquittal, since no appeal can be taken from such a motion, and the reversal and remand leave the cause as if no trial had ever been had.

2. A statement by the judge during the progress of a trial for arson bearing on the amount of insurance on the destroyed property, but which is made to the attorneys, and in which he says that he does not wish to be understood as quoting the evidence, is not reversible error, since it is not a statement to the jury.

3. A handwriting expert examined as a witness in a criminal case may testify as to the reasons for his opinion.

4. Photographs of handwriting are admissible in a criminal case in which the identification of handwriting is in issue.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; E. W. Riley, Judge.

K. J. Mooney was convicted of the crime of arson, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Peck and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of arson, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment, order denying his motion for a new trial, and order refusing an arrest of judgment. The case has been before the court upon a previous occasion. 127 Cal. 339, 59 Pac. 761. At that time this court declared the information fatally defective, and reversed the judgment and orders appealed from, and remanded the cause for further proceedings. Upon a return of the remittitur to the trial court, the district attorney made a motion, in furtherance of justice, that the court dismiss the information. Thereupon the court dismissed the information and ordered the defendant be discharged from custody. Thereafter such proceedings were had that a second information was filed against the defendant, and upon that information he has been tried, convicted, and now prosecutes this appeal.

Upon pleading to the second information, defendant set up a former acquittal, and based his plea upon the proceedings taken at the first trial, including the appeal to this court, and the judgment rendered upon that appeal. Defendant's contention seems to be that his previous appeal to this court being in part an appeal from an order refusing to arrest the judgment, and such order, in conjunction with the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, being reversed, upon the going down of the remittitur the judgment should have been arrested, and the subsequent order of discharge made by the trial court was in effect a judgment of acquittal. While it is quite a common practice to appeal from an order refusing to arrest a judgment, and while this court seems to have entertained appeals from such orders in a few cases, yet, upon consulting section 1237 of the Penal Code, we find that no direct appeal is allowed from that character of order. It is in effect an order made before judgment, and should be assailed upon appeal as any other order of that kind is assailed. It follows, therefore, that upon the prior appeal the judgment of this court, in substance, was one reversing the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial; and, upon that state of facts, when the remittitur was issued the case stood exactly as if no trial had been had. Certainly, upon the going down of the remittitur it would not have been proper for the trial court to have ordered the judgment arrested; for there was at that time no judgment to be rendered, and therefore nothing to be arrested. So far as the motion in arrest of judgment was concerned, it stood exactly the same as a motion for a nonsuit which had been denied. In such a case, the judgment and order denying a new trial being reversed upon appeal, the motion for a nonsuit goes for naught, for there is nothing to be nonsuited. The trial has been set aside, and another must be had de novo. People v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 262, 30 Pac. 815, appears to be directly in point, and the court there said: "The legal effect of the remanding order was to remit the defendant to his original position upon his plea of not guilty to the information on file, just as though a trial had never been had; and, upon the going down of the remittitur to the superior court, that court had jurisdiction to proceed in the case before it in any way authorized by the criminal law." Defendant claims that he has undergone a statutory acquittal, by reason of section 1188 of the Penal Code, but this claim falls to the ground in view of the foregoing authority. Indeed, without invoking that authority, it is apparent that defendant cannot rely upon said section for an acquittal. An acquittal only follows by virtue of that section when the judgment is arrested, and, as already indicated, the judgment in this case never has been arrested. Section 1385 of the Penal Code provides: "The court may, either of its own motion or upon the application of the district attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action or indictment to be dismissed. The reasons of the dismissal must be set forth in an order entered upon the minutes." Under the authority vested in the court by this section, it made an order dismissing the information and discharging the defendant. It is unnecessary to decide here whether or not that order be construed as broad enough to amount to a dismissal of the action; for it certainly was an order dismissing the information, and section 1387 declares that an order made under section 1385 does not constitute a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, if that offense be a felony. The offense here involved is a felony, and from the record, taking into consideration all the proceedings of the previous trial, including the appeal taken at that time, we find nothing showing a previous acquittal of this defendant, or establishing a bar to the present prosecution. People v. Schmidt, supra.

The contention is made that the court should have given two certain instructions asked by defendant, bearing upon the burning of the building or its contents with the intent to defraud the insurance company. The instructions were not as clear and explicit as they should have been. But, aside from that defect in the wording of them, the court told the jurors that, in order to find the defendant guilty, they must be satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he set fire to the building with the intent to destroy it. This instruction covers the facts set out in the information, and also fully covers the law by which the jury were bound to act in returning their verdict.

The statement made by the judge bearing upon the amount of insurance resting upon the property, as testified to by a certain witness, was a statement made to the attorneys in the course of argument, and not a statement made to the jury. The jurors had no right to consider it. At the same time the judge also stated that he did not wish to be understood as quoting the evidence of any witness in the case. The limitations placed upon the cross-examination of the witness Croop were proper. It was also proper to allow the expert witness Ames to testify as to the reasons upon which he based his opinion given as an expert upon handwriting. Healy v. Railroad Co., 101 Cal. 592, 36 Pac. 125. The admission in evidence of the photographs of handwriting, likewise, was not error. People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 129, 57 Pac. 785. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and orders are affirmed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

BARKER v. HURLEY et ux. (S. F. 2,332.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1901.)

TRUSTS—EXPRESS TRUSTS—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—CHANGE IN FORM OF TRUST PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A denial or repudiation of an implied or resulting trust is not necessary to cause limitations to run in favor of the trustee, but it commences at the time of the creation of the trust.

2. Where there is no express trust created in personal property, and no subsequent declaration of trust, the purchase of real estate with the personality does not create an express resulting trust which will prevent the running of limitations until the trust is repudiated.

3. Civ. Code, § 2221, provides that an express or voluntary trust may be created by any words or acts of the trustor indicating his intention to create a trust, and the subject, purpose, and beneficiary thereof. Section 2222 provides that such a trust is created as to the trustee by acts or words indicating his acceptance of the trust, or his acknowledgment made upon sufficient consideration of its existence, and the subject, purpose, and beneficiary thereof. A few days before his death a decedent executed a will, leaving the larger portion of his property, which was in the form of money, to his sister, but giving a small legacy to his brother and father. A few days thereafter he had the money drawn from the bank, and given to him, and he then gave it to his sister, and told her to keep it all. He then told his brother-in-law to pay certain debts owed by him. The sister afterwards paid the legacy to the brother. Held not sufficient to constitute a trust.

4. Limitations in favor of the sister commenced to run against an action by the public administrator to enforce a trust thereon at the time when she received the money.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; J. M. Mannon, Judge.

Action by J. H. Barker, administrator of the estate of John Carey, deceased, against Richard Hurley and another. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal. Reversed.

McNab & Hirsch, for appellants. J. C. Ruddock and Seawell & Pemberton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brings the action to compel defendants to convey to plaintiff certain real estate, title to which is alleged to be held by them as trustees of the persons interested in the estate of John Carey, deceased. The court gave judgment for plaintiff that defendants pay to plaintiff the sum of $3,509.25, failing in which that the land described in the complaint be sold, and said amount be paid from the proceeds thereof; and, if there be not sufficient, that plaintiff have judgment for any deficiency. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff is the public administrator of Mendocino county, and defendants are husband and wife. John Carey was the brother of defendant Kate Hurley, and on June 6, 1893, was residing with his sister, Mrs. Hurley, on a farm eight miles from Mendocino

City. He died June 8, 1893, leaving a last will, of which the following is a copy: "This is the last will and testament of John Carey, made June 6th, 1893. I give my father, Jas. Carey, of South Ring, Clonacilty, Ireland, the sum of five hundred ($500.00) dollars; to my brother, Maurice Carey, of Fort Bragg, the sum of three hundred ($300.00) dollars; and all the remainder of my estate to go to sister, Mrs. Kate Hurley. I request that my body be decently buried in the Catholic Cemetery in Mendocino, and a suitable monument erected over my grave. John Carey. Witness: W. A. McCormack. Clara F. Thurston." Shortly before his death, deceased had on deposit in bank at Mendocino City $3,509.25. Having been informed by the priest that "he was in danger of death," he sent his brother-in-law, Hurley, on June 6, 1893, with an order on the bank for this money, and Hurley brought it to Carey that day. Neither of the witnesses to the will was called to testify. Hurley testified that on his return with the money he met the doctor on the road, who informed him that he (the doctor) had drawn the will. It was executed before Hurley returned with the money. What took place when Hurley brought the money to Carey was testified to by defendants. No other persons were present. Defendant Hurley testified: "He asked me did I get it. I said, 'Yes.' I asked him if he wanted it counted, and he said, 'Yes.' I counted it out, and placed it back where it was. He said, 'Now, providing I get well, or live, I might want this money back.' I wasn't done putting it in the purse. I said, 'Here, take it now.' He reached out, and took it, and he held it in his hand for probably a minute. He then said: 'Here, Kate; take it. Keep it yourself, and keep it all, and don't give them any of it. Maurice don't deserve it, and father don't need it.' Kate is my wife, John Carey's sister. He handed it to her, and said, 'Keep it all.' He sat up, and reached it to her. He was pretty low at the time. This was on the 6th, and he died on the 8th, two days after. That afternoon I stayed in the room with him. I had further conversations with him in regard to the money. He said, 'If you stay on that train, you're sure to be killed.' I was working on the logging train for the Albion Lumber Company. He said: 'Take my advice. Leave that train. You've money enough now to get along without risking your life on that train.' He said he owed Mrs. Handley some money. Also Dr. Milliken, and Solomon, the Jew, at Navarro. He wanted them paid too." Plaintiff applied for and was granted letters of administration in 1897. Mrs. Hurley testified at the hearing for letters, and her deposition was read in evidence by plaintiff. She testified that after her brother's death she wrote her father that her brother left him $500 under the will, and that the money was in her possession, and that she would pay him all of it; that she told her husband to pay her brother Maurice the $300 left him by the will. She testified: "I kept the rest of it because my brother told me to keep it. He told me to keep it all. * * * I didn't send my father the $500 because I was sick in bed. If he would have taken it, I would have sent it to him." She testified that she asked for letters because the attorney for the public administrator wanted to make some trouble for her; that he had written her that he would make her pay her father the $500, and afterwards "stopped that, and wrote about the will." "You [addressing the attorney] wrote me that you were going to sue me for the $500. I thought there was no need of it. My father gave me the money. Then you wrote me to probate the will. Then I probated the will. When anybody asked me to show the will, I did it." Maurice Carey testified that he was at Hurley's the day after his brother died; that Hurley told him that his brother had left him $300 by will, and his father $500. A few days after the funeral Hurley showed him the will, and paid him $300, and took his receipt, in which he relinquished all claims to the estate of deceased. It was alleged in the complaint that defendants, on November 18, 1893, purchased certain land with the money which they had received from Carey, and "took up their residence upon said land as their homestead, and have ever since had exclusive possession thereof and have resided thereon"; "and that by the said purchase and occupation the said defendants became trustees of a resulting trust in favor of the successors in interest of the said John Carey * * * and others interested in said property, and now hold said property as trustees," etc. It is admitted by defendants that they purchased the land, but they allege that it was for their own benefit, with money part of which was the money received from said Carey and part other money. The foregoing is substantially all the testimony in the case.

The court, among other things, found: That at his death Carey was the owner of the money referred to, to wit, $3,509.25; that prior to his death he gave Hurley an order for said money, "to be drawn and held for the use of John Carey and his successors in interest, and that the said defendant Richard Hurley, by said order, drew the said money, and has ever since retained and appropriated the same to his own and the use of his wife, defendant Kate Hurley; that part of said money was mingled with defendants' money, and was used to purchase said land, but the exact amount of said $3,509.25 so used is not shown by the evidence, and said intermingling was the result of the wrongful acts and fault of defendants; that there was no gift causa mortis, or gift at all, but that "said sum of money was placed in the custody of defendants, to be restored to the said John Carey, if he lived, and disposed of in accordance with the terms of his will if he died." The court found as conclusions of law that defendants "became trustees of a resulting trust in favor of the successors in interest of the said John Carey," and so hold the said property, and judgment was entered as above stated. The fact that Carey made a will was well known to the beneficiaries and other persons. There was no evidence and no finding that it had been fraudulently concealed, or concealed at all. There were but three beneficiaries of the will; one of them Maurice Carey, who was fully paid. There is no allegation and no evidence that the testator's father complains that he has not been paid or desires to be paid, and the only other legatee is defendant Kate Hurley. There is no allegation and no evidence that there are any creditors of the estate, and the only person claiming to have any interest in the action is the public administrator. Defendants contend that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, which was duly pleaded, and we think this contention must prevail. They also claim that the findings are not supported by the evidence either as to the trust or the gift. The rule is well settled that the statute of limitations runs in favor of a defendant chargeable as a trustee of an implied or constructive trust, and that it is not necessary, in order to set the statute in motion, that he should have denied or repudiated the trust. The statute begins to run when the wrong complained of is done, and under our Code the limitation is four years. Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 14 Pac. 88. The doctrine laid down in this case has been frequently approved. Nougues v. Newlands, 118 Cal. 106, 50 Pac. 386; Broder v. Conklin, 121 Cal. 288, 53 Pac. 599.

Respondent does not seriously dispute the rule as to implied or resulting trusts generally, but he contends that, as the court found that there was no gift causa mortis, or gift at all, it follows that there must have been a voluntary or express trust; that section 2215, Civ. Code classifies trusts as (1) voluntary, which are express trusts, and (2) involuntary, which are implied or constructive trusts; that a trust resulting from circumstances may be either voluntary or involuntary,—or, in other words, may be express, implied, or constructive; and that the circumstances here show a voluntary trust. The direct testimony of Hurley and his wife is uncontradicted that Carey made a gift of all his money to Mrs. Hurley, his sister; and there is nothing in the subsequent conduct of defendants necessarily inconsistent with their testimony. But, waiving the question of gift, so far as the direct testimony goes there is none whatever that when Mr. Carey handed the money to his sister he directed it to be disposed of under the will, as the court found was the fact. The will had been executed some hours before

Hurley returned from Mendocino city with the money, and the testimony was that when Mr. Carey gave the money to his sister he expressly stated that she was to have all of it, and neither her brother nor her father was to have any of it. It was after this money was handed to her, although contemporaneously with that act, that he directed Mr. Hurley, not Mrs. Hurley, to pay certain debts which are not referred to in the will; but he gave no direction whatever as to executing the will. The evidence tending to show that the money handed to Mrs. Hurley (which defendants insist was given to her) was to be disposed of under the will was circumstantial, and consisted of the facts that defendants knew there was a will; that Hurley paid Maurice Carey $300 (the sum mentioned in the will), and took his receipt; that Mrs. Hurley wrote her father that he had been willed $500, and she had the money, and would send it to him. We fail to discover sufficient in these circumstances to establish a voluntary or express trust or that there was any understanding of the parties that defendants were to execute the will. An express trust, or what our Civil Code denominates a "voluntary trust," subject to the provisions of section 852, relating to trusts in real property, is created, "as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty (1) an intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and (2) the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust" (section 2221); "and as to the trustee, by any acts or words of his indicating with reasonable certainty (1) his acceptance of the trust, or his acknowledgment, made upon sufficient consideration of its existence; and (2) the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust" (section 2222). That the trust in the present instance related in its inception to personal property does not change the rule as to its creation. The nature of the evidence to establish the trust may be different where it relates to personal property than in the case of real property, but the strictness of the rule is not relaxed in the one case more than the other, so far as relates to the creation of the trust. In both the purposes of the trust, the subject-matter, and the beneficiaries must be clearly indicated. The trust, if a trust at all, commenced with the appropriation of the money, and the trust character was not changed by the subsequent mutations of the property. As to the degree of certainty required in the creation of trusts, see Wittfield v. Forster, 124 Cal. 418, 57 Pac. 219, and Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 1115.

It is not quite clear from the findings upon what theory the court found a resulting trust, but we presume it was because the money which was used to purchase the land was in part the money originally belonging to John Carey, and from which the court concluded that a trust resulted under section 853, Civ. Code. See, however, Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 481, 42 Pac. 152. But there never was any recognition by defendants that a trust existed as to the land; on the contrary, they treated it as their own. The trust with which they were charged, if at all, arose when they appropriated the money. This money could, of course, be followed, if impressed with a trust, wherever and howsoever invested. The trust could not be evaded by converting the money into land; but a subsequent change from money to land, or to any other form of property, after Carey's death, would not change the character of the trust with which defendants were originally charged. If, by any view of the evidence, a trust may be said to have arisen at all, it was not an express trust.

We search the evidence in vain to determine who were named by the parties as beneficiaries of the trust. We find nowhere any agreement, except as it may be implied, and there is not sufficient evidence to enable the court to define, even by implication, the terms, purposes, and beneficiaries of the trust. There are no words or acts of John Carey showing the extent and character of the trust intended by him to be created, and the evidence is wanting that defendants accepted a trust indicated with any sort of certainty by John Carey. The court found that the terms of the will were the terms of the trust, but there is no evidence that John Carey ever so declared, or that defendants accepted any such trust. That Mrs. Hurley, after the death of her brother, decided to pay her brother, Maurice, the $300 left him by the will, and expressed a willingness to pay her father the legacy left him, is consistent with her claim to all the money. Many reasons might be suggested why she thought best to respect these legacies, and yet maintain that she was not obliged to pay them; and Hurley testified that when he paid Maurice by Mrs. Hurley's direction he told Maurice that she was not obliged to pay the money. We do not find in the case evidence of a trust voluntarily assumed, which, by the understanding of the parties, was to be a continuing one, as was true in Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108, and O'Dell v. Moss (Cal.) 62 Pac. 555, where it was held that the statute did not commence to run until the trust had been repudiated. If defendants held the money upon any confidence or trust, it was such as by operation of law was forced upon their consciences, and was not created by agreement. The complaint was filed November 27, 1897, more than four years after defendants received the money; more than four years after they purchased the land, recorded the deed, and entered into possession, and occupied the land as their homestead under claim of ownership; and more than four years had elapsed after occupying the land before any demand was made upon defendants. Assuming that some sort of a trust arose, it was not such as to take it out of the operation of the statute of limitations, and the action was barred.

It becomes unnecessary to determine whether the public administrator could maintain the action, and the numerous other questions presented by the record and urged by appellants. The judgment and order should be reversed, with directions to the lower court to dismiss the action.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

SCHROEDER v. IMPERIAL INS. CO., Limited. (S. F. 1,616.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1901.)
INSURANCE—PROVISIONS OF POLICY—INSTRUCTION—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—KNOWLEDGE OF INSURED.

Where a fire policy provided that, unless otherwise indorsed thereon, it should become void, if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings should be commenced against the property covered by the policy, the policy became void on the service of process in foreclosure, and failure to secure the insurer's consent to the increased risk, notwithstanding insured had no knowledge of the proceedings commenced until such service of process.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; George H. Bahrs, Judge.

Action by Philip G. Schroeder against the Imperial Insurance Company, Limited. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for appellant. Van Ness & Redman, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a policy of fire insurance. The plaintiff's right of recovery depends upon the construction to be given to the following clause in the policy: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon, or added hereto, shall be void, * * * if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings be commenced, or notice given of sale of any property covered by this policy, by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed." The policy was issued November 6, 1893, for the term of three years. At that time the dwelling house, which was a portion of the insured property, together with the land upon which it stood, was subject to the lien of a mortgage, and on April 30, 1895, the mortgagee commenced an action for its foreclosure, and made the insured one of the defendants therein. The insured and the other defendants were duly served with process in the action, and on May 18, 1895, a judgment was rendered therein for the amount of the mortgage debt, and directing a sale of the property in satisfaction thereof. Under this judgment the property was sold June 15, 1895, to the plaintiff in the action. The dwelling house was destroyed by fire November 15, 1895. The insured gave no notice of the foreclosure proceedings to the defendant, nor did the defendant have any knowledge thereof until after the property was destroyed. The superior court held that the above clause did not have the effect to avoid the policy, unless the insured had knowledge of the foreclosure proceedings before or at the time of their commencement, and that, as it does not appear herein that she had any knowledge thereof until the service upon her of the process in the action, the policy remained unaffected by the proceedings. Judgment was therefore rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

A contract of insurance is to be interpreted by the same rules as are other contracts, and is to be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties; and this intention is to be deduced, if possible, from the language of the contract. Civ. Code, §§ 1635, 1636; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Pacific Ins. Co., 44 Cal. 397; Yoch v. Insurance Co., 111 Cal. 503, 44 Pac. 189, 34 L. R. A. 857. The above clause in the policy is included in that portion which enumerates many grounds for avoiding it, and it is manifest that the parties intended by these several clauses to agree that the defendant should not be liable upon the policy in case the risk that it assumed should be thereafter increased, unless its consent to such increased risk should be indorsed upon the policy. The provision above quoted is directed to the fact of knowledge on the part of the insured of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, and not to the time at which he may obtain such knowledge, and the reasonable construction to be given to the clause is that whenever he shall have knowledge of the proceedings, and shall fail to obtain the consent of the insurer thereto, the policy shall be avoided. That the risk assumed at the date of the policy would be increased by foreclosure proceedings against the insured property was a fact well recognized in matters of insurance, and it has been held that a proviso in the policy that it shall be avoided by the commencement of foreclosure proceedings has that effect, even though the insured is ignorant thereof. Titus v. Insurance Co., 81 N. Y. 410; Meadows v. Insurance Co., 62 Iowa, 387, 17 N. W. 600. It was doubtless for the purpose of overcoming the harshness of this rule that the standard form of policy limits this effect to those proceedings of which the insured has knowledge. This limitation is for the benefit of the insured, and that he may have an opportunity to obtain the consent of the insurer to the increased risk, and pay an additional premium therefor, if it shall be demanded. The object of the clause is to provide against an increase of the risk, but such increased risk would not be varied by the knowledge or ignorance of the insured, and it may be assumed that the parties deemed it just that the insured should have an opportunity to procure the consent of the insurer thereto, and therefore provided that the policy should not be forfeited if the proceedings were had without his knowledge.

It would be a solecism to speak of the insured having "knowledge" of proceedings yet to take place. He might be informed of the purpose of the mortgagee to commence proceedings, and he might have a belief that they would be commenced, but this information or belief could not be termed his "knowledge" of their commencement. It is equally unreasonable to assume that the parties intended by this clause to limit the provision avoiding the policy to proceedings of which the insured has knowledge at the identical moment of their commencement. These views find support in Quinlan v. Insurance Co., 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Woodside Brewing Co. v. Pacific Fire Ins. Co., 11 App. Div. 68, 42 N. Y. Supp. 620; Gibson Electric Co. v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co., 10 App. Div. 225, 41 N. Y. Supp. 675, affirmed in 159 N. Y. 418, 54 N. E. 23; Norris v. Insurance Co., 55 S. C. 450, 33 S. E. 566; Insurance Co. v. Brown, 77 Md. 79, 25 Atl. 992.

A contrary construction was given by the supreme court of Idaho in Bellevue Roller Co. v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 39 Pac. 196, but the reasoning of the court thereon does not commend itself to our judgment. It urges in support of its conclusion that it would not be a reasonable construction of the clause to so construe it as to require a party to give notice of a fact of which he has no information or knowledge, but, as the clause makes no provision requiring any notice to be given to the insurer, the reason thus given is inapplicable. The policy merely provides that it shall be avoided, if the consent of the insurer is not obtained. The case in Idaho was cited in one of the district courts of appeals in Texas (Insurance Co. v. Freeman, 33 S. W. 1091), but the decision therein does not appear to have rested upon this authority. In another district court of the same state the clause seems to have received a different construction. Insurance Co. v. Clayton (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 910. The judgment is reversed, and the court is directed to render judgment in favor of the defendant upon the facts stipulated by the parties.

WHITE v. COSTIGAN. (S. F. 1,663.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1901.)

APPEAL—MORTGAGES—REDEMPTION—JUNIOR MORTGAGEE—UNAUTHORIZED REDEMPTION—REDEMPTEE AS ASSIGNEE—EQUITY.

1. Though a receiver's sale of land had been held to be unauthorized on appeal in another suit, the facts affecting the validity of the sale not appearing from the record in the case at bar, and it having been expressly found in the trial court that the sale was properly made, it would be assumed, for the purposes of the case, that the sale was valid.

2. Where, on foreclosure of a mortgage, a deficiency judgment was entered in favor of a junior mortgagee, but prior to his judgment a portion of the mortgaged lands not included in his mortgage had been conveyed by receiver's deed, he was not entitled to redeem such lands, under Code Civ. Proc. § 701, giving a right of redemption to creditors having a lien.

3. Where a purchaser at mortgage sale made a quitclaim deed of the land to the owner, such deed operated as a redemption, and perfected the owner's title.

4. By Code Civ. Proc. § 703, a redemption from a mortgagee is followed by a sheriff's deed, and section 705 requires a redemptioner to serve, with his notice of redemption to the sheriff, a copy of any assignment necessary to establish his claim. Held, that where, after mortgage foreclosure, the purchaser on mortgage sale gave a deed of the premises to the owner, and prior thereto, and with the knowledge of the owner, one who was unauthorized to redeem attempted to do so, and paid the redemption money to the sheriff, under section 703 the redemption was virtually an assignment of the purchaser's interest, though the sheriff was not authorized to make the deed under section 705, and hence should be regarded as the assignee of the purchaser, and the owner entitled to have her title quieted only on condition of paying the redemption money to the redemptioner.

5. Where the purchaser at mortgage sale gave a deed of the premises to the owner, and prior thereto one not entitled to redeem had paid the redemption money to the sheriff, the redemptioner's right to be regarded as the assignee of the purchaser's interest, being purely one in equity, did not extend to the forfeiture of the owner's title for nonredemption, she not being affected by the transaction between the purchaser and the redemptioner, and the deed from the purchaser being, in effect, a redemption.

6. Where one who was not authorized to redeem from a mortgage sale paid the redemption money to the sheriff, such redemptioner had a right to have his equitable title perfected by a conveyance from the owner, to whom the purchaser thereafter conveyed the land.

7. Where one who was not authorized to redeem from a mortgage sale paid the redemption money to the sheriff, his right to be repaid his money, or to have a conveyance from the owner of the lands, being an equitable one merely, he should be allowed legal interest only on the amount paid by him from the date of payment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; J. M. Mannon, Judge.

Action by Frankie White against James M. Costigan. From a decree in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. T. Baggett, J. Q. White, Geo. E. Whitaker, and Walter H. Linforth, for appellant. Seawell & Pemberton, for respondent.

SMITH, C. The suit was brought to quiet title to the lands described in the complaint. Judgment was rendered for the defendant. The appeal is from the judgment, and on the judgment roll. Both parties deraign title from one George E. White, plaintiff's divorced husband. White had mortgaged the lands in controversy and other lands to one Fairbanks, and afterwards some of the same lands, but not the lands in controversy, to the defendant Costigan. Suit was commenced by Fairbanks, January 15, 1895, for foreclosure of his mortgages, to which Costigan was made defendant as junior mortgagee. Pending this suit the mortgages of Fairbanks were assigned to the plaintiff herein, and by her to one Linforth, who was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for foreclosure was entered,—date not given,—and on March 6, 1897, the lands included in the Fairbanks mortgage were sold by the sheriff, and on the return of the sale, March 25, 1897, a deficiency judgment for $3,937 was docketed in favor of Costigan. At the sale Linforth became the purchaser of the lands in controversy for the sum of $500. Costigan redeemed from the sale, within the time allowed by law for redemption, paying the redemption money to the sheriff, and receiving his certificate, and afterwards his deed for the lands sold. The redemption money was paid to, and accepted by, Linforth. The redemption was regular in all respects except as to Costigan's right to redeem. On the day after the redemption, September 8, 1897, Linforth made a quitclaim deed of the land to the plaintiff, who paid no consideration, and took the deed with notice of the redemption and of the acceptance of the money by Linforth. The plaintiff deraigns title under the deed last referred to, and also under a receiver's deed—date not given, but recorded November 21, 1896—made in pursuance of a sale under an order of the superior court of San Francisco of date April 12, 1895, and an order of confirmation of date May 5, 1896, in a divorce suit therein pending between herself and her husband. The validity of this sale was involved in the case of White v. White (decided by the court in bank, Dec. 6, 1900) 62 Pac. 1062; and it was there held, on the facts appearing in that case, that the court was without jurisdiction to order the sale, and the sale and deed made in pursuance thereof consequently void. But in this case the facts affecting the validity of the order of sale do not appear, and it is expressly found that the order of sale, and the order confirming the sale, were "duly made and entered" by the court, and that thereafter a deed was executed to the plaintiff by the receiver "conveying to (her) all the right, title, and interest of the said George E. White in and to the lands * * * sold, * * * including the premises described in the complaint." Hence there is nothing in the record here to show want of jurisdiction in the court; and the maxim, "De non apparentibus, et non existentibus, eadem est ratio," must be applied. It must therefore be assumed, in this case, that the sale was valid.

The relations of the parties to the land in controversy appear, then, to be as follows: Mrs. White, after the foreclosure sale, was the legal owner of the land, and entitled to redeem. By the quitclaim deed from Linforth, she acquired whatever interest he had at the date of the deed, which, unless he had previously parted with his interest as purchaser, perfected her title. But in the meanwhile Costigan had redeemed from Linforth, and, if he thereby acquired any rights, these could not be affected by the deed to Mrs. White. The questions involved relate, therefore, to the validity and effect of this redemption. In considering them, the legal and the equitable aspects of the case must be carefully distinguished. The former will be first considered.

1. The redemption was made by Costigan under his deficiency judgment of March 26, 1897. But before that time the title to the land in controversy had passed by the receiver's deed to Mrs. White. His judgment, therefore, was not a lien upon the land, and did not entitle him to redeem. Code Civ. Proc. § 701. The sheriff's deed was therefore wholly void. "To be entitled to redeem, [the party] must be a creditor having a lien." Haskell v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 57. The power of the sheriff to transfer the title of the judgment debtor or his successor, in invitum, "is altogether statutory, and his acts are nugatory, unless the provisions of the statute are pursued." Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 194. The case, therefore, in its legal aspect, was not affected by the attempted redemption. The legal title was already vested in Mrs. White, but was subject to forfeiture for failure to redeem within the period prescribed by the statute. The deed removed this liability, and in effect operated as a redemption from the sale. Thenceforth her title, i. e. her legal title, ceased to be subject to forfeiture, and thus became perfect.

2. It remains to be considered whether, by his attempted redemption, Costigan acquired any equitable rights, and, if so, what these may be. With regard to this question, Mrs. White appears in a double capacity, or rather in two capacities, namely, as the successor of the judgment debtor, and as the successor of the purchaser, Linforth. In the former capacity she was the owner of the land, subject to forfeiture for nonredemption, and, as she was not a party to the transaction between Linforth and Costigan, her title was not affected thereby. But as grantee in the deed from Linforth she took subject to any equities existing against him in favor of Costigan. The question between her and Costigan is therefore the same, with regard to such equities, as would have been the question between him and Linforth if the deed had not been made. Stated generally, the question involved is as to the effect of a redemption from an execution sale by an unqualified redemptioner accepted or acquiesced in by the purchaser. On this point it seems to be settled that the purchaser is estopped to dispute the validity of the redemption. 3 Freem. Ex'ns, § 317, p. 1870, and cases cited. But whether such estoppel will operate to transfer the interest of the purchaser to the redemptioner must depend upon the statutory provisions of the particular state. Thus, in Illinois,—where the effect of redemption is simply to extinguish the purchaser's interest, and thus to subject the property to the redemptioner's lien,—it has been held that a redemption by an unqualified redemptioner cannot be treated as an assignment, though it is suggested that even there the redemptioner, in a proper proceeding in equity, might be subrogated to the rights of the purchaser. Meyer v. Mintonye, 106 Ill. 414; Freem. Ex'ns, § 321, pp. 1885, 1886. But in this state, by the provisions of our statute, the redemption is followed by a deed (Code Civ. Proc. § 703), and hence "the redemption is virtually a transfer of the certificate of sale." Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 129, 130; Eldridge v. Wright, 55 Cal. 536.

In Bagley v. Ward the redemptioner was qualified to redeem, but it was objected that the papers required by the statute were not produced to the sheriff, which ordinarily would render the redemption void. Code Civ. Proc. § 705; Haskell v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 54; Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 193. It was held that, "as between the immediate parties to the redemption, the production of the papers mentioned in the statute (might) be waived," and that the sheriff's deed passed a good title. In the case at bar the redemptioner was not entitled to redeem, and hence the sheriff was not authorized to make the deed; but the principle that a redemption, under our laws, is virtually an assignment, applies. And, indeed, this is evident from the nature of the transaction; for, as the end and effect of the redemption is to transfer the title, this interest must necessarily enter into the minds of the parties, and the transaction thus contains in itself all the elements of a valid assignment except the formal writing. Civ. Code, §§ 1066, 1636, 1646, 1647. In this case, for lack of the written assignment, the sheriff had no authority to convey (Code Civ. Proc. § 705); but nevertheless the intent is apparent, and the transaction, interpreted in the light of the circumstances, and of the law and usage of the state, must be regarded in equity as an assignment of the purchaser's interest. Accordingly, in Abadie v. Lobero, 36 Cal. 396, 397, which was a case of redemption by an unqualified redemptioner, it was assumed (though not expressly held) that, "since (the purchaser) was satisfied and treated the redemption as valid, it was good, or, if not good as a redemption as between the parties, amounted to an assignment of the certificate of sale," and this opinion is referred to with apparent approval in Eldridge v. Wright, 55 Cal. 536, 537, and in the concurring opinion in effect affirmed. The defendant must therefore be regarded as occupying the position of equitable assignee of Linforth's interest, and is entitled to have his equitable right perfected. But his right, which is purely of equity cognizance, does not extend to the forfeiture of the plaintiff's title for nonredemption; for, as to her original title, she was not affected by the transaction between Linforth and the defendant, and from the legal point of view the deed from Linforth was, in effect, a redemption. Nor, were it otherwise, could equity assist him in enforcing a forfeiture. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to have her title quieted, but only on the condition of paying to the defendant the amount paid by him for redemption. The defendant has a right to have his equitable title perfected by a conveyance from the plaintiff, if she do not redeem; and, as his right is merely equitable, he should be allowed and the plaintiff required to pay legal interest only on the amount paid by him ($560) from the date of payment. The time for redemption should be limited to a reasonable time, not exceeding six months from the entry of the judgment herein ordered. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to render judgment on the findings in accordance with this opinion.

HAUGHAWOUT v. HUBBARD et al. (L. A. 799.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SEWER IMPROVEMENTS—CONTROL BY COUNCIL—DELEGATION OF POWERS—INVALID ASSESSMENTS.

Finlayson, St. Laws, § 3, requires the city council, before contracting for sewer improvements, to pass and publish a resolution of intention "describing the work" proposed, and provides that the city engineer shall make plans and specifications and estimates of the cost thereof, which, by section 5, become part of the contract, to be awarded when approved by the council. Section 6 provides that the work must be done under the direction and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets. The ordinance of intention for the work required it to be done in accordance with plans and specifications on file in the city clerk's office, one of which provided that, "when the ground does not afford a sufficiently solid foundation, the contractor shall excavate the trench to such increased depth as the street superintendent may decide to be necessary, and shall then bring it up to the required level and form with such material and in such manner as the street superintendent may direct." Held, that an assessment levied for work done under a contract based on such plans and specifications was not invalid on the ground that such specifications delegated to the street superintendent powers of the council.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Suit by W. J. Haughawout against Laura A. Hubbard and others to foreclose an assessment lien on a certain lot for sewer work. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. J. Stevens and A. B. McCutchen, for appellant. Mulford & Pollard, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The ordinance for the work requires it to be done "in accordance with the plans and specifications on file in the clerk's office of the city of Los Angeles, said specifications being designated 'C' and 'D.'" The ordinance of intention contains a similar provision. It is claimed by the respondent, in effect, that these specifications delegate to the street superintendent powers vested by the law in the council, and which it had no right to delegate. The specification principally discussed in the briefs, and on the supposed insufficiency of which the decision of the lower court was rested, is as follows: "When the ground does not afford a sufficiently solid foundation, the contractor shall excavate the trench to such increased depth as the street superintendent may decide to be necessary, and shall then bring it up to the required level and form with such material and in such manner as the street superintendent may direct." The point of the objection is that the power is thus delegated to the street superintendent to determine whether the ground does or does not "afford a sufficiently solid foundation," and, in the latter case, the power to determine the depth of the excavation, and the materials to be used in bringing the bottom of the ditch "to the required level and form." The former objection was overruled by the court below. The latter was sustained on the supposed authority of Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 38 Pac. 881, and cases following it. The other objections are similar, but are of a more trivial character, and were regarded by the lower court as without merit. It is assumed in these objections that, under the provisions of the law relating to the subject, it is the function of the council, in ordering any improvement, to determine in advance all the details of the construction; or, in other words, not only to make the specifications, but to make them so complete as to leave nothing to the discretion or judgment of the street superintendent. But to this view of the law there are several decisive objections: First, the function of making the specifications is not imposed by the law on the council, but on the city engineer. The function of the council with reference to them is merely to order them to be made, and to see to it that they are accompanied by an estimate of the cost of the improvement, and are otherwise satisfactory. Next, the law does not impose, either on the council or the engineer, the impossible task of making the specifications so complete

And, finally, it is the obvious intent of the law to devolve upon the street superintendent a certain discretion with reference to the details of the work. A brief review of the act relating to street improvements, and of the several powers and functions imposed by it on the council and other municipal officers, will establish these propositions.

1. By section 2 of the street-work act the power is conferred on the city council "to order" any of the improvements therein specified. Finlayson, St. Laws Cal. pp. 5, 9, § 3. This involves the function of determining the nature or general character of the improvement to be made; and this is also implied in the provision that "a resolution of intention" shall be made and published "describing the work," by which is meant not the work or labor to be done, but the improvement or work to be constructed. This function obviously can be performed only by the council; and if it be delegated, either in whole or in part, to the street superintendent, the assessment for the improvement will be void. Bolton v. Gilleran, supra, and cases cited. But the performance of this function does not involve the necessity of determining or describing the details of construction,—a task for which the council is altogether unfitted. This task is devolved by the law on the city engineer, whose duty it is (in the case of sewer work) to make "plans and specifications, and careful estimates of the costs and expenses thereof" (Finlayson, St. Laws, p. 9, § 3), which, when approved, become part of the contract to be awarded (Id. p. 42, § 5). The function of the council with regard to these is simply that of supervision. Ultimately it is its function to determine the cost of the work, and the amount of the tax to be assessed for it (Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 248, 38 Pac. 881); and this implies that the specifications must be accompanied by an estimate of the cost definitely determining the amount. But, if the specifications comply with this essential condition, and are otherwise satisfactory to the council, its functions are fulfilled; nor—this condition being fulfilled—is its jurisdiction to order the work in any way affected by any defects in the work of the engineer in preparing the specifications. The provisions of the act in this regard are explicit. On the publication of a sufficient resolution of intention "describing the work," and the lapse of the 25 days,—the intervening conditions having occurred,—the council is "deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order * * * the work"; and all that is required of it in addition is that it shall require the specifications to be made, and the cost of the work to be thus determined. It is clear, therefore, that the defects, if any, in the specifications, are not to be regarded as defaults of the council in performing its functions; and that the power devolving on the street superintendent by reason of such defects cannot be regarded as a delegation of the powers of the council.

2. Hence the objections made must be regarded as resting simply upon the supposed defects in the specifications, and upon the proposition, assumed to be law, that these may affect the validity of the assessment. But there is nothing in the act to lead us to suppose that this was intended, and, from the nature of the case, a contrary intention must be inferred. The purpose of specifications is, indeed, to determine and prescribe the details of construction; but this can be effected only approximately. To some extent such details must depend on unanticipated contingencies, and can be determined only by the exigencies of the actual construction. The specifications must, therefore, always fall, more or less, in certainty or completeness of detail; and hence the most accurate and detailed specifications must leave unprovided for many questions arising in the course of the work as to kind and amount of work or materials and other details of construction. The question as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of specifications is, therefore, one merely of degree; that is, not whether they are certain or uncertain, but whether they are more uncertain than is desirable. To this question no general answer can be given; and hence, in the absence of specific provisions of the law, it must be regarded as immaterial to the validity of the assessment.

3. It follows, from the essential nature of all specifications, that many questions as to details must be left to the discretion of the officer superintending the construction,—in this case the street superintendent; and that this must be the case with reference to all details that are in fact not determined by the specifications. This fact is too obvious to have been overlooked by the legislature. Accordingly, it is expressly provided by the act that the work "must in all cases be done under the direction and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets, and the materials used shall comply with the specifications and be to the satisfaction of said superintendent; * * * and all contracts made therefor must contain a provision to that effect." Finlayson, St. Laws, p. 61, § 6. There is thus conferred upon the street superintendent not merely the power to see the specifications carried out, but a power or discretion beyond the specifications. This power is, of course, limited by the contract, and by the specifications as part thereof, but extends to all questions of detail not explicitly determined by the specifications, or the contract; and with reference to such questions his own judgment is by the express terms of the law and of the contract itself made the criterion. General rules may be prescribed by the council directing the exercise of this discretion, but this rather affirms than denies its existence. The cases cited by the court are not inconsistent with this view of the law: In the case of Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 38 Pac. 881, the assessment was, indeed, held to be void on account of defect in the specifications; but the defect was that they did not contain a definite estimate of the cost of the work, but alternative estimates only, of which the one might exceed the other by about 50 per cent. The result was that there was a failure to perform either of the two essential functions imposed by the law on the council, namely, that of determining and describing the nature or general character of the work, and that of determining the amount of the burden to be imposed therefor by assessment on the property of the parties to be charged with the cost. The cases of Stansbury v. White, 121 Cal. 433, 53 Pac. 940, and Chase v. City Treasurer, 122 Cal. 540, 55 Pac. 414, were decided solely on the authority of Bolton v. Gilleran, and must be regarded as mere applications of the principle of that decision. Fisher v. Prince, 3 Burrows, 1364; Osborne v. Rowlett, 13 Ch. Div. 785. In the former case the decision in Warren v. Chandos, 115 Cal. 382, 47 Pac. 132, is cited to the proposition that "a contract which gave to the superintendent of streets the power to increase or diminish the cost of the improvement after the contract had been entered into by requiring a greater or less amount of material for its completion as he should determine, * * * [would render] the assessment invalid." Whether the contract in the case under consideration was of that character or otherwise does not appear from the report, but it seems that authority was given to alter the specifications, which is not the case here. In Chase v. City Treasurer, 122 Cal. 540, 55 Pac. 414, the case was decided mainly on the grounds of insufficient publication of the resolution of intention. The specifications are referred to briefly, but are not set out, or their effect stated. It results from what has been said that on the facts found the judgment should have been for the plaintiff. The judgment is, therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment on the findings for the plaintiff.

In re FREUD'S ESTATE. (S. F. 2,246.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALE OF REALTY—SATISFACTION OF MORTGAGE—STATUTES—JUDGMENT CREDITOR—NO STANDING IN COURT.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1577, provides that, if it shall be for the advantage of the estate, the superior court may authorize the administrator to mortgage the same; and section 1578 requires the petition asking for such power to state the debts, lien, or mortgage to be paid with the money thereby received. Section 1536 authorizes a sale of the realty for the payment of the debts, or when for the best interests of the estate; and section 1537 prescribes that the petition must contain a statement of the debts and charges of administration already accrued, and an estimate of what may accrue during the administration. Held, that it was not error for the court to decree a sale of the realty for the payment of liens thereon and the expenses of administration still to accrue.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1577, 1578, providing that the realty of an estate may be sold or mortgaged for the purpose of paying or renewing liens or mortgages already thereon, an administratrix may mortgage the realty for the purpose of paying existing liens thereon, and may use the money acquired by sale or mortgage to redeem the property of the estate from one who has obtained it at foreclosure sale.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition by Tiny Freud, as administratrix with the will annexed, in the matter of the estate of Morris Freud, deceased, for the sale of the realty to pay incumbrances thereon and the expense of administration still to accrue. From an order granting the sale, an order settling the annual account of the administratrix, and an order for mortgaging the realty, the Warners Bros. Company, as mortgagees of part of the realty, appeal. Affirmed.

Hart H. North and Henry E. Monroe (W. B. Treadwell, of counsel), for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow and Wm. B. Bosley, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeals from an order of sale of real estate, an order settling annual account of administratrix, and an order for mortgage of real property. The several appeals will be considered in the order stated.

The deceased died seised of two lots of land, described in the petition, which he devised to his widow, Tiny Freud (now administratrix), "to hold the same during her lifetime in trust for [testator's] five children" named in the will, and "upon the death of [the] wife * * * to be divided among [his] said children share and share alike." The will was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to Jacob Freud, the executor therein named, March 19, 1883. An order for a family allowance to the widow of $250 a month was made December 29, 1883. The executor's final account, showing a balance of $2,078.62 in his favor, was settled May 25, 1888; and thereupon he was discharged, and Mrs. Freud, the widow of deceased, was appointed administratrix with the will annexed. The estate coming into her hands consisted of the two lots above referred to, found to be of the present value, respectively, of $6,500 and $18,500. The latter lot was subject to a mortgage of the testator to the German Savings & Loan Society for $12,500, and, when the petition was filed, had been sold, May 31, 1898, to the bank, under a foreclosure decree, for $11,143.46. From this sale the appellant, the Warners Bros. Company, had redeemed, November 30, 1898, as successor in interest of Jacob Freud, the former executor, and one of the devisees, under a deed of date October 1, 1897,—the redemption money being $11,609.44; and, in a suit brought by him against the administratrix of the estate and the devisees other than Jacob, a decree of strict foreclosure has been rendered, June 16, 1899, foreclosing their interests, and that of each of them, in the property sold, unless redemption should be made within 60 days from the date of the decree. The mortgage, it will be observed, had not been presented to the executor as a claim against the estate. The petition for the sale of real estate was filed June 7, 1899. Up to this time, as appears from the petition and the findings, the administratrix had received in rents the sum of $37,582.85, all of which had been disbursed in payment of interest on the mortgage, taxes, repairs, and other expenses of administration, except $100 per month, which had been applied by her on her family allowance. The balance due to Jacob Freud, the former administrator,—$2,078.62,—remained unpaid. The estimated amount of the expenses and charges of administration to accrue was $2,000. The order of sale was based by the court on the double necessity of redeeming the mortgaged premises from the appellant's lien, and of paying "debts, expenses, and charges of administration accruing and to accrue."

With regard to the former ground, the contention is that the court was not authorized to order a sale for the purpose of redeeming the mortgaged premises from the appellant's lien. Such authority, it is said, could be derived only from the amendment of 1893 to section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes a sale "for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate, and those interested in it." But under the decision in Re Packer's Estate, 125 Cal. 396, 58 Pac. 59, this provision cannot apply to the estate of the decedent, who died in 1883; and hence, if the order is to be justified at all, it must be justified under the provisions of the original section, or, rather, of the section as amended in 1880. The contention thus far, we think, must be admitted; and it may also be admitted, for the purposes of this case, as is contended, that the money needed for redemption did not come within the description of "debts outstanding against the decedent," the payment of which is one of the objects for which a sale may be made under the provisions of the statute. But a sale is also authorized when it is necessary "to pay the debts, expenses or charges of administration"; and this refers not only to accrued debts, expenses, or charges, but to those to accrue. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1536, 1537. Hence a sale may be ordered when necessary to meet such prospective charges or expenses, though there be "no debts or expenses of administration accrued and unpaid." Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 179, 23 Pac. 9. It is clear, therefore, that, if among the powers of the administratrix was the power to make the redemption and to charge the expense to the estate, then the court was justified in regarding the amount necessary for the purpose as a legitimate prospective charge or expense of administration, and in ordering a sale for the purpose of redeeming.

The question then reduces itself to this: Has an executor or administrator the power to use the money in his hands for the purpose of redeeming property of the estate from liens existing on it? The question is an important one, but seems sufficiently clear. The executor or administrator is intrusted by the law with the property of others. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1452, 1581. And the duty and corresponding power of preserving the estate results necessarily from his character as trustee. 2 Perry, Trusts, § 915. Thus, while generally he has no power to carry on the business of the decedent (In re Rose's Estate, 80 Cal. 166, 22 Pac. 86), yet he may do so if necessary to preserve the property (In re Smith's Estate, 118 Cal. 466, 50 Pac. 701). He may also spend money in litigation either to recover or protect property of the estate, or for insurance. So though, generally, he may not expend money in the erection of a new building (In re Moore's Estate, 72 Cal. 342, 13 Pac. 880), yet he may expend it in repairs to any extent necessary to preserve the property; and in cases that may be readily imagined the power to repair might extend even to the erection of a new building (Abb. Law Dict. "Repair"), as, e. g., in the case of a necessary outhouse destroyed by fire, or of land paying a large rental on which the building had been destroyed by fire, or decayed so as to be no longer available, and where the new building could be paid for in a very short time out of the rental. In fine, the governing principle is that, subject to the contingency of the expense being disallowed by the court, he may do whatever is necessary for the preservation of the property of the estate, and the specific character of the act done is altogether immaterial. Hence, necessarily, his power must extend to the preservation of property by paying off liens existing on it, when necessary for the purpose (Woerner, Adm'n, pp. 690, 691, § 329; Burnett v. Lyford, 93 Cal. 118, 119, 28 Pac. 855), as, e. g., in the case of taxes, tax sales, etc. (People v. Olvera, 43 Cal. 494; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 657, 54 Pac. 254), or as in case of cattle or horses impounded and held for expense of pasture (In re Armstrong's Estate, 125 Cal. 605, 58 Pac. 183). And that this is the intention of the law appears very plainly from the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1577, 1578, where provision is made for the payment by the administrator of liens or mortgages on the realty of the estate. Of the cases cited to the contrary by the appellant (In re Knight's Estate, 12 Cal. 207; Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50, 60), the latter has no application; the decision there resting on the ground, italicized by the court, that "the prior mortgage of Tomes [the lien paid] was not a charge against the estate, [and that] no part of it could ever have been paid out of the estate." The case, therefore, need not be further considered. Nor is the decision in Re Knight's Estate applicable here. In that case it was said, as is doubtless true, that, while it is the duty of the administrator to preserve the estate, "this does not mean that he is, at discretion, to pay off all incumbrances resting on the property upon the notion that the property may increase in value, and thereby a speculation may be made by the estate"; and the point directly ruled was that "he cannot advance money to remove incumbrances unless his intestate was bound to pay the money." Thus, apparently, the decision is placed on two grounds, namely: (1) On the ground expressed, which is in effect that the administrator cannot pay all incumbrances at discretion for speculative purposes, or, it might have been said, for any purpose except for the preservation of the property, and where necessary for that purpose; and (2) on the ground that he cannot pay off incumbrances "unless his intestate was bound to pay the money." Nor can it be determined which of these was the governing consideration in the mind of the court. But the power of the administrator to pay off incumbrances in any case results solely from the necessity of preserving the property, and can be justified only on the ground that the lien is a charge on the estate, and therefore a peril to it; and this is equally true whether the lien was created by the intestate, or, as in the case of taxes, in some other way. The circumstance that the lien was not created by the deceased may therefore be disregarded, and the decision may be construed with reference to the case before the court, and the expressed grounds of the decision. Thus construed, it may be regarded as holding simply that the administrator was not justified, under the circumstances of the particular case, in redeeming from a lien which his intestate was not bound to pay. If, however, the decision be construed as based on the latter circumstances, it does not apply to this case, where the fact is different. Here the mortgage was made and a debt contracted by the deceased. Nor was the debt barred by failure to present it. Suit could still be maintained on it. Code Civ. Proc. § 1500. And it differed from other debts of the estate only in the extent to which it was a lien. Nor was the case materially altered by the sale and redemption. The effect of this, in the legal aspect of the case, was simply to terminate "the effect of the sale," thus restoring the property to the estate, but reviving the lien of the mortgage for the benefit of the party redeeming. Code Civ. Proc. § 703. The appellant acquired no title, but an equitable lien only, by subrogation to the lien of the mortgagee. Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 798, 799, 1211, 1212. It is therefore still the lien of the original mortgage from which redemption is to be made. In another respect, also, is the case of In re Knight's Estate distinguishable from the case at bar. In that decision it was observed by the court, with reference to the case before it, that in such cases, where redemption was necessary, resort could be had to a court of equity. But under the existing law, where in the course of any regular proceeding the relief becomes appropriate, the resort may be now had to the court in which the administration is pending. Toland v. Earl (Cal.) 61 Pac. 914. It follows that, in cases where the administrator is otherwise without power to redeem, authority may be given him by the court, as has been in effect done in this case, by the order of sale. His authority, therefore, can now no longer be disputed, and hence the court had authority to order the sale for the purpose of obtaining the means for redemption.

It is also objected, on the supposed authority of the decision in Re Crosby's Estate, 55 Cal. 574, that the right to have a sale of the real property has been lost by laches. But that was a proceeding for the purpose of paying an allowed claim, and the case was regarded as in effect a suit by a creditor against the heirs. Here the proceeding is for the payment of expenses and charges of administration accrued and to accrue, which is a different case. It is unnecessary to consider here the question of the family allowance. That was not passed on by the court, nor have we any reason to suppose that in making the order of sale it entered into its consideration.

With regard to the settlement of the administratrix's account, the question as to the balance of the family allowance claimed by the widow was expressly reserved from the decision by the court, and therefore need not be considered. The sole question is as to the item of $100 per month credited to the widow on account of family allowance. This was equivalent to a little over six years' full allowance,—a period that covers less than the first two years of her administration; so that, if we leave out of view the delay of payment, the widow has received her full allowance for that period, and no more. Whether her allowance should have been further cut down by reason of her delay in closing the estate was a question for the lower court to determine, and we see no reason to disturb its decision.

With regard to the order for mortgage little need be said. The authority of the court to order a mortgage for the purpose of paying liens on the realty of the estate is expressly given by the provisions of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1578); and the constitutionality of the act has been affirmed by this court in the case of Murphy v. Bank (Dec. 27, 1899) 63 Pac. 368. As to the propriety of the order there can be no doubt. The authority given to the administratrix extends only to the mortgage of the property covered by the lien, which will be lost unless redeemed. No one, therefore, so far as his interest in the estate is concerned, can be injured or aggrieved by the order. The appellant is, indeed, interested adversely to the estate as a claimant of the land, but in this capacity he has no standing in court; and his grievance, if any, in failing to acquire the property of the estate, cannot be considered. The orders appealed from are affirmed.

ADAMS et al. v. CITY OF MODESTO.

(Sac. 659.)¹

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—NUISANCES—OPEN SEWERS—ABATEMENT—CLAIMS AGAINST CITY—TORTS—PRESENTMENT—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

1. Under Civ. Code, § 3479, declaring that anything injurious to health, or indecent or offensive to the senses, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life and property, etc., is a nuisance, an open wooden trough, passing about 300 yards from plaintiff's house, and constituting part of the sewerage system of the city, through which, for a distance of about 450 yards, the city sewage passed, constituted a nuisance, entitling plaintiff to its abatement.

2. Municipal Corporation Act, § 864 (St. 1883, pp. 266 et seq.), declares that all "demands" against a city or town of the sixth class shall be presented and audited by the board of trustees, etc. Held that, though the term "demands" was sufficiently broad to include claims for torts as well as on contracts, yet the purpose of the act being that the claim should be audited, which could not apply to claims for torts, the act did not require presentation of a claim for damages for the maintenance of a nuisance as a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue thereon.

3. In an action for the abatement of an open sewer as a nuisance, where plaintiff alleged that he was damaged by the conduct of sewage through the sewer, and by discharge of the sewage over land adjacent to plaintiff's, but the finding of the court, by which damages were allowed, referred only to the running of the sewage through the sewer, and there was no evidence to show the amount paid for doctor's and medicine bills for sickness alleged as an element of damage, and the evidence did not show that plaintiff had not been able to rent the property because of the sewer, that part of the judgment awarding damages was not supported by the evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Reversed on condition.

For opinion in department, see 61 Pac. 957.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the abatement of a nuisance and for damages, and from an order denying a new trial. The plaintiffs are owners of a tract of land in the city of Modesto, on which, until a short time before the commencement of the suit, they resided with their family. The nuisance complained of is an open wooden trough, passing about 300 yards from the plaintiffs' house, and constituting part of the sewerage system of the city, through which, for a distance of about 450 yards, the sewage matter of the city is passed. This the court found was a nuisance, interfering with the comfortable enjoyment and obstructing the free use of the plaintiffs' property, and that the plaintiffs were damaged thereby in the sum of $650.

That the use of the open sewer by the city in the vicinity of the plaintiffs' land constituted a nuisance, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have it abated, is too clear to require discussion. Civ. Code, § 3479; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 392, 51 Pac. 557; Lind v. City of San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 343, 344, 42 Pac. 437; Wood, Nuis. § 781, note 1.

With regard to damages, it is objected that the demand was not presented to the board of trustees, as required by the provisions of section 864 of the municipal corporation act (St. 1883, pp. 266 et seq.), applying to cities of the sixth class, of which the city of Modesto is one, which provides that "all demands against such city or town shall be presented and audited by the board of trustees," etc. But we do not think this provision was intended to apply to cases of this kind. The term "demands" is, indeed, sufficiently broad to include all claims, whether arising from contract or tort; but, when used in this connection, the term does not usually include demands of the latter class. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1194. That the term is here used in the narrower sense, as referring only to demands arising from contract, and for determinate amounts, is shown by the purpose for which they are required to be presented, which is that they may be "audited,"—a term that is not applicable to demands arising from torts. Law Dictionaries of Anderson, Abbott, Black, Wharton, etc.; Cent. Dict.

We do not think, however, that the finding as to damages is sustained by the evidence. In the complaint it is alleged not only that the sewage matter of the city was conducted through the trough, but that it was habitually discharged upon and spread over the land towards the land of the plaintiffs, and the damages claimed were alleged to proceed jointly from both causes,—that is, not only from the use of the sewer, but from "running the sewage on the ground"; and the testimony of the plaintiff David Adams is to the same effect. But the finding of the court refers only to the running of the sewage through the trough, and nothing is said about the discharge of the sewage on the ground, and there is nothing in the testimony to determine how much proceeded from the latter and how much from the former cause. The testimony of the plaintiff is also otherwise indefinite. He speaks of sickness in his family caused by the nuisance, which "entailed doctor bills and medicine bills," but no amounts are given. He says, also, he "lost the use of the place for two years," and that he could have rented it for $250 a year if it hadn't been for the sewer. But the place contained about 20 acres of land, and its use, except as a dwelling place, could not have been lost by reason of the nuisance complained of; and, indeed, the witness expressly says he "lost the use of it because [he] didn't care to improve it." The plaintiffs were undoubtedly damaged, but the evidence fails to show they were damaged in the amount found or in any other ascertainable amount. A new trial must therefore be granted, unless the plaintiffs prefer to release the damages.

The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial is therefore reversed, unless the plaintiffs, within 30 days after notice of the filing of the remittitur, file their stipulation in writing, agreeing that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the part thereof that relates to damages. Upon the filing of such stipulation, the judgment shall be modified accordingly, and as thus modified shall stand as affirmed.

MEHERIN v. SAUNDERS, Constable, et al.
(S. F. 1,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.)

EXECUTION SALE—RECOVERY OF PRICE—CONDUCT OF SALE—RETURN OF OFFICER—CONCLUSIVENESS—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER—RIGHT OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR TO RECOVER EXCESS—LIMITATIONS—DEFENSE—SET-OFF—ESTOPPEL.

1. A purchaser of property at an execution sale who does not pay the entire price will not be heard to question his liability for the remainder on the ground that the sale was illegal because the entire price was not required to be paid in cash.

2. Where a constable sells property on execution under the usual statutory notice, it is a cash sale, and not a sale on credit, though the purchaser does not pay the entire price, and hence the latter cannot escape liability on the ground that the sale was illegal because on credit.

3. The return of a constable showing that the execution purchaser of property paid the full price bid does not estop the corporation's assignee in insolvency from denying such fact in an action to recover the amount of the bid from the purchaser, since the purchaser was not a party to the proceedings in which the property was sold.

4. An execution purchaser of property is not released from liability on his bid by reason of a prior execution sale of the property, since the rule of caveat emptor applies to execution sales.

5. Where an officer who sells property under an execution at a price in excess of the judgment, and fails to bring an action to recover such excess from the purchaser, and surrenders a check given in payment thereof to the purchaser, and is insolvent, and his bond exhausted, the assignee in insolvency of the debtor may bring an action against the purchaser to recover such excess, by pleading such facts and making the officer a party thereto.

6. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 691, requiring an officer selling property under execution to return any surplus to the execution debtor, the purchaser, who gives his check for such surplus to the officer, and afterwards procures the check from the officer and destroys it, is subject to suit by the debtor for the amount thereof, though the latter was never informed of the giving of the check to the officer, since the debtor may be treated as the equitable assignee of the rights of the officer.

7. Such action is not barred by limitations, when brought within four years from the date of the giving of the check.

8. A purchaser at an execution sale cannot resist payment of the excess of his bid over the judgment, in a suit brought by the assignee in insolvency of his debtor, on the ground that the latter does not show that he is able or willing to procure a constable's deed to the property, since an execution purchaser must pay when the certificate of sale is issued.

9. Where a creditor purchases property of his debtor at an execution sale for a price in excess of the amount of the judgment, before he has reduced his claim to judgment, and the debtor takes the benefit of the insolvency act before the purchaser obtains judgment, the latter cannot set off such claim against an action by the assignee in insolvency to recover the excess.

10. Where a creditor who has not reduced his claim to judgment purchases the property of his debtor at an execution sale at a price in excess of the judgment debt, and the debtor then takes the benefit of the insolvency act, the filing of his claim by the creditor without deducting the excess in his possession will estop him from setting up such claim as a set-off in an action by the assignee to recover such excess.

McFarland, Garoutte, and Harrison, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

On rehearing. Judgment of trial court affirmed, and judgment in department (56 Pac. 1110) reversed.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action by the assignee of an insolvent corporation to recover from the defendants the unpaid balance of the sum bid by the defendant Ambrose for certain real property of the corporation which was sold under execution by the defendant Saunders. In the trial court Saunders made default, but Ambrose defended the action, and he now appeals from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The facts involved in several of the points argued by counsel are somewhat complicated, and may be more conveniently stated in detail as the discussion proceeds, but it will be necessary at the outset to indicate the general nature of the case. The defendant Saunders, a constable, in October, 1891, sold under execution certain real property of the California Steamship Company. Defendant Ambrose was the purchaser, and the amount of his bid was $10,000, of which he paid in cash $855. For the balance of $9,145 he gave Saunders his check on Donahue, Kelly & Co., and received from him a certificate of sale, which he thereafter retained. A duplicate certificate was duly recorded by Saunders. After getting his certificate of sale, Ambrose stopped payment of his check, and it was never paid, nor was any attempt ever made by Saunders to enforce payment. Within 20 days after said sale the steamship company was adjudged an insolvent, and in due course the plaintiff was appointed and qualified as assignee. Saunders having accounted for only $855 of the sum bid at the execution sale, the plaintiff commenced an action against him and the sureties on his official bond, in which he recovered a judgment against Saunders for the balance of $9,145, and against his sureties for $1,000, the full penalty of their bond. That judgment was affirmed by this court, and the opinion there delivered (110 Cal. 463, 42 Pac. 866) states the most important facts involved in the present litigation. On the trial of that action, in June, 1894, the plaintiff learned for the first time of the giving of the check by Ambrose to Saunders for the unpaid balance of his bid, of his subsequent stoppage of payment of the check, and of the redelivery of the check by Saunders to Ambrose, by whom it had been destroyed. On the affirmation of the judgment in Meherin v. Saunders and His Sureties, Ambrose paid the $1,000 due from the sureties, but nothing more has ever been paid on said judgment. The execution against Saunders was returned unsatisfied, and he was then, and has since continued to be, totally insolvent. In the opinion delivered in Meherin v. Saunders it was intimated that Saunders had a right of action against Ambrose to recover the balance of his bid at the execution sale, as undoubtedly he had; but he never took any steps to enforce payment, and thereupon the plaintiff commenced this action on September 28, 1895, less than a month prior to the date when an action on the check would have been barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court credited the defendants with $1,000, the amount paid by Ambrose on the judgment against the sureties of Saunders, and rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $8,145, and interest from October 24, 1891, the date of the execution sale and of Ambrose's check. On his appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial, the defendant Ambrose assails both the findings and the conclusions of the superior court, and also contends that the complaint fails to state a cause of action. As to the findings of fact, we think they were in every material respect fully sustained by the evidence. The finding that plaintiff was not informed that Ambrose had paid only $855 on his bid prior to the trial of Meherin v. Saunders is contrary to the evidence, for it clearly appears that plaintiff received that information immediately after his appointment as assignee. The fact which first came to his knowledge during the trial of Meherin v. Saunders was not that Ambrose had failed to pay any more than $855, but that he had given a check on Donahue, Kelly & Co. for the balance of his bid; that he had stopped payment of that check, and afterwards got it into his possession and destroyed it. As to this matter alone the findings are contrary to the evidence, but the fact found and the actual facts are alike immaterial. In all other particulars there is substantial evidence to support the findings, though as to some matters there is a sharp conflict. The remaining points urged by appellant will be considered in their logical order.

1. He contends that the complaint shows that no sale of the corporation's property was made. The statute, he says, furnishes the exclusive rule for execution sales, and an essential part of the rule is that every such sale must be for cash, whereas this sale was made, at least in part, upon a credit. This, I think, is an objection to the sale which it does not lie in the mouth of the appellant to make, even if it were technically sufficient. But it is not sustained by the allegations of the complaint. They show that the sale was made as such sales are usually made, and in pursuance of the statutory notice. It was, therefore, a sale for cash; and Ambrose, by his bid, agreed to pay cash. There was no fault in the mode of conducting the sale, but merely a failure on the part of the appellant to perform his promise to pay. It is true that under the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 695) the constable, upon the refusal of appellant to pay the full amount of his bid, might have resold the property, in which case appellant would have been liable for the costs of the resale, and for any deficiency in the price realized, but the officer was induced by the appellant to forego this course. He accepted a check in lieu of cash upon the implied, if not the express, representation of appellant that it was the equivalent of cash. He issued and recorded a regular certificate of the sale. He applied the cash actually received to the satisfaction of the judgment under which the property was sold, and of other judgments, executions upon which he had in his hands. He made his return accordingly, and thereby made himself accountable to the steamship company for the full amount of appellant's bid. Meherin v. Saunders, supra. Under these circumstances, it is too late for the appellant to say that there was no liability upon his part to pay the sum covered by his check. Besides, his liability is not a mere statutory liability, if there were any merit in that contention, but is a common-law liability arising out of an express promise to pay, based upon a good and valuable consideration.

2. The second proposition of appellant is that the California Steamship Company is concluded by the return of the constable to the effect that the property was sold for the sum of $10,000. If this proposition were conceded, it is difficult to see what bearing it would have on the present controversy; for the plaintiff, so far from contesting that part of the return, is insisting upon it, and is seeking only to recover the unpaid balance of the price bid. But I suppose the appellant means to claim that the return is conclusive in his favor that he paid the $10,000 in full. If so, the authorities he cites do not sustain his contention. They are to the effect that the return of an officer upon an execution is—with some important exceptions—conclusive upon the parties until vacated. But appellant was not a party to the action in which the execution issued, and is neither bound by the return nor protected by it. Whether he paid the bid or not is a question to be decided upon evidence aliunde.

3. The proposition is not distinctly advanced by appellant, but he seems to claim that he incurred no liability by his bid, because without his knowledge the property in question had been previously sold to another purchaser on execution under another judgment against the steamship company. It is true, the property had been sold a few days prior to the sale to appellant, but under a judgment which was a junior lien, so that the appellant by his subsequent purchase obtained the superior title. It would have made no difference, however, if the first sale had been under a prior lien; for the rule of caveat emptor applies to execution sales, and there would still have remained a right of redemption in the steamship company after the first sale. As it was, the purchaser at the first sale got only a right to redeem from the second sale, and this fact may account in some measure for the full price bid by the appellant.

4. It is contended that there is no privity of contract between the judgment debtor and the purchaser at the execution sale, such as is essential to sustain an action by the former to recover from the latter the unpaid surplus of his bid over and above the amount required to satisfy the execution. Upon this point counsel for respondent are challenged by appellant to cite a case in which a judgment debtor has ever recovered such surplus or balance in the absence of an express agreement between the debtor and purchaser. No case exactly in point is cited in response to this challenge, but the principles which support the position of the respondent are unquestionable. The right of the officer who conducts the sale to sue for the unpaid purchase money is not disputed, but it is claimed that he, and he alone, can maintain the action. Ordinarily, no doubt, the officer is the proper party to bring the action; for it is only by collecting the full purchase price that he can fulfill the commands of the writ. He stands in the position of a trustee as to the proceeds of the sale for all parties interested, —for the execution creditors, to the extent of their interest, and for the judgment debtor as to the surplus. He also has an interest in the fund to the extent of his fees and commissions. For these reasons such an action by the sheriff was sustained by the supreme court of Alabama. Robinson v. Garth, 6 Ala. 204. But in that case the court said (page 209): "We do not doubt that those for whom the sheriff acts, and who are interested in the money to be recovered, may also maintain the action," etc. The principle of that decision was that the sheriff, being the trustee of an express trust, could and ought to sue for the benefit of his cestués, but that his right to sue did not exclude a similar right in the beneficiaries. In this case the trustee has utterly failed and neglected to sue, and the right of action was about to be barred by the statute when the beneficiary commenced this suit, making the trustee a party defendant, and alleging all the facts constituting his equitable right. He shows that the trustee is insolvent, that he has surrendered and permitted the destruction of the written instrument upon which the action could be most clearly sustained, that the liability of his sureties is exhausted, and, in short, that, without action on plaintiff's part, a large portion of the price of his insolvent's land will be irrecoverably lost. It cannot be doubted that, if Saunders had sued in his own name and recovered the amount of appellant's check, he would have held the proceeds as trustee for plaintiff, and that every cent of it would have been assigned to the plaintiff by any insolvency court having jurisdiction of Saunders' estate, to the exclusion of his general creditors. It cannot be doubted that, if Saunders had commenced the action in his own name, the interest of plaintiff would have entitled him to intervene and take control of the litigation, upon the ground that he was the real party in interest, and more especially by reason of the insolvency of Saunders. These things being so, I cannot understand why, upon showing the neglect of Saunders to sue, the plaintiff could not commence the action himself, making Saunders a party. The result is that the same parties are before the court that would have been before the court if Saunders had done his duty by commencing the action, and plaintiff had exercised his clear legal right by intervening. All the facts were fully disclosed by the pleadings, and the court was in a position to do full and complete justice in the premises. There is another sufficient answer to the technical objection of want of privity. By section 691 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is made the duty of the officer holding the execution, in the absence of other specific direction of the court, to return to the judgment debtor any excess in the proceeds of the sale over the judgment and accruing costs. In this case there was no specific direction as to the surplus, which was exactly represented by appellant's check. This check was not cash, and the judgment debtor could not have been compelled to take it. But that objection could have been waived, and, if waived, it would have been the duty of Saunders, under the statute, to transfer the check. It is, indeed, true that the plaintiff never formally demanded a transfer of the check (he never knew of its existence until it had been surrendered and destroyed), and he never waived his right to the cash; but his present action is founded upon the obligation arising out of the nonpayment of that check, and he is entitled to be treated as the equitable assignee. Equity deems that to be done which ought to be done. Saunders ought to have sued on the check, or to have assigned it to the plaintiff so that he could sue. Not having sued himself, he will be deemed to have assigned his right of action to plaintiff. Of this view he cannot complain, and still less can the appellant complain. The necessary privity of contract in this case is worked out by operation of law.

5. It is contended that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action because he does not show that he is willing or able to procure for the appellant the constable's deed. To sustain this proposition, counsel cites Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 533, and similar cases. Such cases have no application here. A purchaser at execution sale must pay when the certificate of sale is delivered. He gets his deed in due course upon demand of the officer. Appellant received his certificate of sale at the date of the sale, and the whole amount of his bid was then payable.

6. If we are correct in holding that plaintiff can maintain this action as equitable assignee of plaintiff's check, or as the real party in interest, because of the default of his trustee, the plea of the statute of limitations is disposed of. The action was commenced within four years from the date of the check.

7. At the date of the execution sale the California Steamship Company was indebted to the appellant in about the sum of $27,000, upon which the appellant had commenced an action and issued attachments, which he had caused to be levied on the property which he afterwards purchased. The subsequent adjudication of the company's insolvency, made within 30 days after the commencement of that suit, dissolved the attachment, and appellant thereupon proved up his claim for the full amount in the insolvency court. This was done subsequent to his purchase at the execution sale, and after he had stopped payment of his check. In proving his claim in the insolvency proceedings he made no deduction on account of the unpaid balance of his bid at the execution sale, but asked and obtained the allowance of the whole of his original claim, undiminished, and when a dividend was declared by the assignee he claimed and received the sum apportionable to the full amount of his original demands. The dividend was only a fraction over 4 per cent. of the company's indebtedness, however, and the amount still due the appellant is largely in excess of the unpaid portion of his bid at the execution sale. Upon these facts the appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing to set off his claim upon the insolvent company against the present claim of plaintiff. To this assignment of error the respondent makes three answers: First, that Ambrose never had a right to set off his claim against the steamship company; second, that, if such right ever existed, he waived it at the time he should have exercised it; and, third, that he is estopped to claim a right of set-off by his claim and acceptance of the dividend in the insolvency proceeding on the whole amount of the original indebtedness of the steamship company. I think the position of the respondent must be sustained on every point.

This case presents a question very different from that which arises in the ordinary case of cross demands or mutual credits. The real question is not whether cross demands may be compensated by setting off one against the other, but is, rather, a question whether a creditor of an insolvent can by his unlawful act defeat the clear and undoubted policy of the insolvency laws, and give himself a preference over other creditors; whether, in other words, he can, against the will of the insolvent debtor, and in violation of his legal rights, secure a preference which could not be secured by their voluntary and concurrent action. Under the provisions of section 55 of the insolvency act, it is perfectly clear that if a debtor in contemplation of insolvency should make over to one of his creditors a valuable asset in consideration of the release of his demand,—the creditor having reason to know the debtor's condition,—the transaction would be set aside as a fraud upon the other creditors. And, if this is so,—if the insolvent cannot give a preference, when he desires to do so, by a voluntary transfer of his property,—it certainly must be allowed that the creditor cannot secure the same preference by unlawfully taking or withholding the property and offering to credit its value. This, however, is precisely what Ambrose is seeking to do in this action. The steamship company did not make a voluntary sale of its property on credit to Ambrose, or to any one. The property was seized upon by an officer of the law who was empowered to sell enough of it to satisfy his execution, or to sell the whole of it for cash, and after satisfying the execution to return the surplus to the owner. If this course—the course enjoined by the law—had been pursued, the constable would not have taken Ambrose's check for $9,145 in lieu of cash, but would have taken the cash itself and paid it over to the company, by whom it would have been turned over to its assignee as a part of the fund for the satisfaction of the claims of its general creditors, including Ambrose. By imposing upon the constable, and violating the right of the steamship company to receive the cash, Ambrose seeks to put himself in the attitude of a debtor of the corporation, with a right to extinguish his indebtedness by a set-off, dollar for dollar, where other creditors must be content with a modest dividend. To sustain him in this position is to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong, and to hold that the policy and plain directions of the law can be defeated by a violation of the law. The doctrine of set-off is pre-eminently an equitable doctrine, and is none the less so by reason of its embodiment in our statutes. Upon a claim of set-off, equity will work out the result that would have followed if that had been done which ought to have been done. If Ambrose had paid the full amount of his bid, as he ought to have done, the plaintiff, as assignee of the insolvent corporation, would have had $9,145 to divide evenly between him and the other creditors. The result of this judgment is to bring about exactly that condition, while to allow the claim of set-off which he asserts would be to give him the whole $9,145, and leave the other creditors no part of it.

But, even if it were conceded that a right of set-off could exist under such circumstances, it is certain that the time to exercise it was when Ambrose proved his claim in the insolvency proceedings. If the cross demands were of such a nature that one compensated the other, he had no valid claim for more than the balance. But he claimed and was allowed the whole of his original demands, undiminished; and this allowance of his claim was, like a similar allowance in probate proceedings, the equivalent of a judgment,—a judgment to be paid in due course of administration. To make this claim and secure its allowance was, therefore, a solemn admission on his part that he had no right to set off the unpaid balance of his bid at the execution sale, but that he must discharge that liability in full, and content himself with the dividend apportionable to the full amount of his original demands. I think it clear that he was well advised in making this admission, and pursuing the course that he did. But, whether well or ill advised in this matter, he certainly went too far to recede when he claimed and accepted a dividend on the whole amount of his original demands. If the right of set-off existed, and the two claims compensated each other, he was entitled to a dividend on a balance of only about $20,000, but he claimed and accepted a dividend on over $29,000. That is to say, about one-third of what he received was money to which he had no right, and it was money of which the other creditors were wrongfully deprived. For the purpose of drawing a dividend in the insolvency proceeding he acts upon the theory that there is no set-off, and that the cross demands are uncompensated. Having in this way appropriated to himself money that on his present theory belonged to other creditors, can he be allowed now to shift his ground, and upon a totally inconsistent theory withhold the fund out of which the other creditors would receive a dividend? It is to my mind clear that he cannot. He is estopped.

These views are, I think, amply sustained by authority, and even by the letter of our statutes. A counterclaim capable of being set off in an action must be in itself an existing cause of action. Was appellant's claim against the steamship company an existing cause of action when he sought to avail himself of it as a counterclaim? Section 49 of the insolvency act furnishes the answer to this question: "No creditor proving his debt or claim shall be allowed to maintain any suit at law or in equity therefor against the debtor, but shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit," etc. The case of Brown v. Bank, 6 Bush, 198, is on all fours with this case. I quote the following from the opinion of the court of appeals: "And to the set-off so pleaded the plaintiff filed a reply, setting forth that before he brought this action the defendant had, in the proper proceedings which were pending in bankruptcy, presented and proved and verified for adjudication and allowance against the estate of each of said bankrupts the whole amount of each of said debts, without giving or allowing any credit on either of them for the two hundred dollars and four cents in controversy, and that said debts, having been proved in bankruptcy, were beyond the defendant's control. * * *

In our opinion, proving the entire debts in the proceedings in bankruptcy, without offering to abate the claims by the amount of said deposit, was a waiver of the right to do so, and an election to proceed on said claims alone in the proceedings in bankruptcy, and that the subsequent assertion of part of the same debts by plea of set-off in this action was equivalent to the prosecution of an original suit upon the claims against the prohibition of the bankrupt law." Russell v. Owen, 61 Mo. 186, is a case of the same complexion, and this is from the opinion of the court: "The chief question for determination in this case is whether a creditor who, in making proof of his claim before the register in bankruptcy, omits to show that the bankrupt has an unsatisfied claim against him, can, when sued by the assignee for the amount of such unsatisfied and omitted claim, plead as a set-off the amount allowed by the register as a balance due to him. The question must receive a reply in the negative. * * * When a party defendant pleads a set-off, he, in effect, brings an action for the amount of that set-off, but by presenting and proving his claim before the register the creditor is to be deemed as waiving all right of action on suit against the bankrupt. It would be clearly contrary, therefore, to the evident intent of the above-recited section, to allow a creditor to do that indirectly which the law precludes him from doing directly,—to accomplish by way of set-off that which he would be debarred from asserting in a direct action. The same view of this point is taken elsewhere. Brown v. Bank, 6 Bush, 198." And see notes to section 21, James, Bankr. L.; Bump, Bankr. (9th Ed.) 684; Id. (11th Ed.) 491.

The superior court did not err in denying the right of set-off. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent, and think that the judgment should be reversed. Apart from the very close questions of law which arise in the case, by which, of course, it must be determined, it is proper to remark that it would be a great hardship to compel appellant to pay the large amount of money and interest claimed to be due respondent on the bid at the constable's sale. Appellant had advanced to the California Steamship Company large sums of money, at one time amounting to $86,000. At the time of the constable's sale the company owed appellant about $28,000. He paid $855 on his bid; he also paid $1,000 on the judgment recovered against the constable and his sureties; he also paid several hundred dollars on a former sale of the same property; and he not only loses all of this, with the exception of a very small percentage coming from the effects of the insolvent corporation, but must now pay in addition the amount of the present judgment, which is for $11,136.47 and interest. I think that it can be gleaned from the evidence that the bid of $10,000 was understood by the judgment debtor, by the constable, and by the appellant to be fictitious, except as to the amount necessary to pay off the judgment lien, $855, which sum appellant paid to the constable, and that the $10,000 was bid with the consent of all parties merely to enhance the apparent value of the property; appellant supposing that it would be deducted from the large amount of indebtedness from the company to himself. It is alleged in the complaint that the constable never demanded payment of the check given him by appellant for $9,145. The judgment debtor, before it went into insolvency, never made any objection to the nonpayment of the balance of the bid. Payment of the check was immediately stopped by notice of appellant, no demand was ever made on the bank on which it was drawn for its payment, and the check was destroyed. No proceedings were taken under section 695, Code Civ. Proc., to have the property resold. This action was not commenced until nearly four years after the date of the bid. There is no finding as to the actual value of the property, and no evidence going very directly to that point, but there is evidence tending to show that it had no value approaching the amount of the bid. Under these circumstances, the appellant should not be compelled to pay this large sum of money unless strict law inexorably demands it, and I do not think that there is such a demand.

As to the law governing the case, without considering the many other points made by appellant, I will merely say:

1. That in my opinion there was no privity of contract between the respondent and the appellant as to the alleged cause of action, and therefore respondent cannot maintain this action. There are many authorities supporting this view, but it will be sufficient to notice the cases of Galpin v. Lamb, 29 Ohio St. 529, and Adams v. Adams, 4 Watts, 160, and the cases referred to in the opinions in those cases. In Galpin v. Lamb the syllabus, which is a correct statement of the point decided, is as follows: "A judgment creditor cannot maintain an action against a purchaser of real estate at sheriff's sale to recover damages for the breach of a contract of sale." Of course, a judgment debtor is in the same position touching this point as a judgment creditor. In the opinion the court say: "The contract of purchase is made with the officer, as representing all the interests involved in the suit in which the judgment or decree of sale is rendered. He and the purchaser are the only parties to the contract of purchase, and he alone can maintain an action against the purchaser to recover the purchase money. The parties to the judgment or decree have different interests and stand in different relations to the property; some holding the relation of debtor, and others that of creditor. But, however numerous the parties or diverse their interests, the officer represents them all, and none of the parties stand in such relation to the contract of the purchaser as to enable them to maintain an action on it." In Adams v. Adams the syllabus is as follows: "For a breach of contract between a sheriff and his vendee of land no action will lie in the name of any one but the sheriff." In the opinion the court say: "The sheriff, in making the contract of sale with James Adams, was not acting as the agent of the plaintiff, nor yet of any one else. He is considered the principal himself in such cases, and the legal as well as real party making the contract of sale. Although it be true that he acts in the character of a trustee, yet it must be borne in mind that it is as an officer of the law that he does so, and that it is from the law he derives all his power and authority; and, in sales of property made by him as sheriff under this authority, he alone has the right to receive the money arising therefrom, and is responsible for the legal appropriation of it, unless it is brought by him into court for that purpose. It would inevitably produce great confusion and clashing of suits to permit other persons besides the sheriff in their own names to maintain suit against a sheriff's vendee for breaches of their contracts made with him. It would also be inconsistent with every principle of analogy in the law." I have seen no cases where the point was directly involved which are in conflict with the above authorities.

2. Under any view, the action, in my opinion, is barred by the statute of limitations. The alleged action is based upon the bid made by appellant at the sale, and not upon a written instrument, and it cannot be brought within any category of actions not barred in at least three years.

GAROUTTE, J. (dissenting). I concur generally in the views of Mr. Justice McFARLAND, but would add an additional suggestion. Though the concession is opposed to all the authorities, let it be assumed that the constable took this check as agent or trustee of the plaintiff,—an act clearly beyond the scope of his authority. Upon this concession, the plaintiff then had either one of two courses open to him: He could ratify the constable's act and take the check, or he could repudiate it and hold him liable for the money he should have received at the sale. Here plaintiff elected to follow the latter course, and recovered judgment against the constable for the full amount of the unpaid purchase price. Having done so, he lost all rights he may have had to the check, and forever afterwards it became the property of the constable. Plaintiff had no right to sue the constable for the unpaid purchase price, and also claim title to the check. These two remedies were absolutely inconsistent with each other, and the adoption of one was a bar to the prosecution of the other. If the plaintiff had taken an assignment of the check from the constable in the first instance, he could not thereafter have sued the constable for the unpaid purchase price; and, having first sued the constable for that purchase price, he never thereafter was entitled to an assignment of the check. Conceding that when the first action was brought he did not know that the check was in existence, still that fact is immaterial, for he did know that the purchase price had not been paid. The foregoing views we believe to be supported by the language of the principal opinion, wherein it is said: "This check was not cash, and the judgment debtor could not have been compelled to take it. But that objection could have been waived, and, if waived, it would have been the duty of Saunders, under the statute, to transfer the check. * * * Equity deems that to be done which ought to be done. Saunders ought to have sued on the check, or to have assigned it to the plaintiff so that he could sue. Not having sued himself, he will be deemed to have assigned his right of action to plaintiff. Of this view he cannot complain, and still less can the appellant complain. The necessary privity of contract in this case is worked out by operation of law." Conceding the foregoing quotation to contain a sound exposition of the law, then the plaintiff, after having brought his action against the constable for the full amount of the purchase price and recovered judgment, would never be declared by the law to be the equitable assignee of the check. It was thereafter the property of the constable, and the plaintiff had no right or title in it. This action cannot be maintained for a moment unless upon the theory that it is an action upon the check. The statutes of limitation absolutely forbid it. The check being the property of the constable, the action must fail.

HARRISON, J. (dissenting). The complaint herein is based solely upon the obligation of the appellant to pay the amount of his bid, and upon the right of the plaintiff, as the assignee of the judgment creditor, to recover that amount from him. After setting forth the facts showing the capacity in which the plaintiff brings the action, and the circumstances attending the bid, and its nonpayment, it is alleged that the plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to recover the whole amount "due to the defendant Saunders, as such constable, from the defendant Ambrose on said bid"; and the court finds, as the fact upon which it rendered judgment against the appellant, that the plaintiff is entitled to have and recover the amount "so due and payable to the defendant Saunders, as such constable, from the defendant Ambrose, on said bid, and now due to this plaintiff, as such assignee in insolvency." The plaintiff's entire cause of action rests, therefore, upon the appellant's refusal to pay the amount of his bid. The complaint is framed upon the theory that the amount bid was due from the appellant to the officer, and that by reason of the officer's neglect and default the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a direct action against the appellant for its recovery. I think it is very clearly shown in the opinion of Mr. Justice McFARLAND that there is no privity between the officer and the judgment creditor, by which the latter is authorized to maintain an action against the purchaser for the amount of his bid; but, if it be conceded that such privity does exist, the creditor can have no greater right of action than could the officer. The plaintiff has no other cause of action against the appellant than such as existed in favor of his assignor, the steamship company; and that company's right of action, if any existed, accrued October 24, 1891, at the time when the appellant purchased the property at the constable's sale. If the plaintiff's right to maintain the action is to be sustained upon the ground that he is the real party in interest, his right of action can be no greater than that of him who conducted the transaction under which he derived his interest, and by virtue of which he claims to be the interested party. If the appellant would not have been liable to Saunders under the facts alleged and found herein, the plaintiff can have no right of recovery against him. It is very evident that Saunders could not have maintained any action against the appellant for the recovery of the amount of his bid unless it was commenced within two years after the date of the bid; and it is equally clear, upon the facts alleged and shown herein, that at the time the present action was commenced Saunders could not have maintained any action against the appellant upon the check. Not only is it alleged in the complaint that he made no demand for the payment of the check, and that he declined to collect it, but it is also shown that when he received it he inclosed it in an envelope and deposited it in the bank "for safe-keeping," and afterwards, and before the commencement of this action, withdrew it and surrendered it to the appellant. He had the same right to surrender the check to the appellant as he would have had to refuse to receive it at the time of the bid. Having thus voluntarily parted with it, he could not thereafter maintain any action upon it, and his only right of action against the appellant would have been for the recovery of the amount of his bid.

The only reason assigned in the opinion of the Chief Justice for sustaining the action, as against the plea of the statute of limitations, is that the plaintiff is the equitable assignee of the check. No adjudicated case is cited in support of this proposition, nor are any rules applicable to the principles governing equitable assignments invoked in its support. The action herein is not upon the check, and the allegations in the complaint, as well as the evidence offered at the trial, and the findings of the court in reference thereto, do not assert any right in the plaintiff by virtue of the check, but are clearly evidentiary statements of the transaction, inserted merely for the purpose of showing that the appellant had not paid the full amount of his bid. Not only does the complaint fail to set forth any right of action upon the check, but, as if with the intention not to do so, avoids any claim to the check by reason of its having been received by the officer. After alleging that he accepted it "in lieu of the balance of the purchase price" bid by the appellant, the complaint sets forth that the officer deposited it in the bank of Lompoc, "where, as this plaintiff is informed and believes, the said check has ever since been, and is now, deposited and remains." Although it was shown at the trial that the check had been withdrawn from the bank and surrendered to the appellant before the commencement of the present action, the above allegation shows that, although the plaintiff then believed that it still remained in the custody of the bank, he made no effort to get possession of it or to make it the basis of his action, but relies upon the liability of the appellant for the amount of the purchase money, and thus destroys his right to be regarded as the equitable assignee of the check. An officer making a sale has no right to accept anything but money from the bidder, or to give credit to the purchaser. If he does so, however, he acts in his individual capacity, and not as an officer, and is liable in his individual capacity equally as if he had in fact received the money. The judgment creditor may affirm the act of the officer in accepting the check or other obligation of the purchaser, instead of money, and thus be estopped from questioning the sufficiency or correctness of the officer's act, but unless he does so accept it he does not acquire any right or title thereto. To say that because he might have accepted the check it may be assumed that he did accept it, upon the ground that equity deems that to be done which ought to be done,—especially when he makes no claim that he was willing to accept it,—is to apply this rule in a manner for which I think no authority can be found. The act of the plaintiff in bringing the former action against the officer, in which he charged him with having received the money upon the bid and obtained judgment therefor, is conclusive against any claim that the plaintiff waived the officer's obligation to receive money upon the bid, and that he was willing to accept the check in its stead. His election of remedies at that time precludes him from maintaining the present action, as is shown in the opinion of Mr. Justice GAROUTTE.

If the remedy provided in section 695, Code Civ. Proc., in case the purchaser refuses to pay the amount bid by him, is not exclusive, the officer's right of action is limited to a suit for the recovery of the amount of the bid. Such an action is a pure common-law action, resting upon the common-law liability of the purchaser upon his bid, and presents no room for invoking the principles of equity, and the rights of the creditor derived by virtue of his privity with the officer can be no greater than those of the officer; but whether the obligation of the appellant is by virtue of the statute, or rests upon his common-law liability, is immaterial. His obligation is not "founded" upon an instrument of writing, and any action to enforce such obligation must be commenced within two years after his liability accrued. Chipman v. Morrill, 20 Cal. 130; McCarthy v. Water Co., 111 Cal. 328, 43 Pac. 956; Thomas v. Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac. 899. As the present action was not commenced until more than two years after the right of action accrued, the defendant's plea of the statute of limitations should have been sustained.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (S. F. 1,665.)¹ (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1900.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge. Action by the city of Oakland against the Central Pacific Railroad Company. From an order denying a new trial, and from a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. W. A. Dow, for appellant. H. S. Brown, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case involves the same questions as in City of Oakland v. Southern Pac. Co. (No. 1,664; this day decided) 63 Pac. 371. Upon the authority of that case, for the reasons therein given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

CROSBY v. AHART. SAME v. KIER. (Sac. 593, 598.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. E. Prewett, Judge. Separate actions by F. C. Crosby against Peter Ahart and against C. T. Kier. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. A. M. Seymour, A. L. Hart, and Pullen & Wallace, for appellant. W. H. Carlin and L. L. Chamberlain, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The foregoing cases were submitted under stipulation that the judgment in them should follow the determination and judgment in the case of Crosby v. Clark (this day decided) 63 Pac. 1022. For the reasons given in Crosby v. Clark (Sac. No. 587), the judgments and orders appealed from in the above-entitled cases are hereby affirmed.

FAY v. REED. SAME v. RICH et al. FAY et al. v. REED. (S. F. 1,509-1,511.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1901.) Department 2. Appeals from superior court, Santa Clara county; M. H. Hyland, Judge. Actions by Charles W. Fay against E. P. Reed and against Jacob Rich and others, and by Charles W. Fay and another against E. P. Reed, to foreclose assessments for street improvement. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed. Jackson Hatch, for appellants. C. T. Bird, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. These are companion cases to Fay v. Reed (No. 1,264) 128 Cal. 357, 60 Pac. 927. The resolutions of intention are precisely like the resolution in that case; in fact, it is the same resolution. A petition for a rehearing was filed in that case, and was denied; and we are convinced the conclusion there reached was necessitated by previous rulings of this court. As the judgment here under consideration has the same infirmity found fatal there, and the assessment is made invalid thereby, it would serve no useful purpose to consider other points urged. For the reasons stated in the opinion in the case referred to, the judgments and orders are reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.

GREENE v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (GINN et al., Interveners; S. F. 2-382.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 16, 1901.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge. Action by J. C. Greene against the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco and others; Ginn & Co. and the H. S. Crocker Company intervening. Hindry, for respondent H. S. Crocker Co. Franklin K. Lane, for respondent board of education.

PER CURIAM. This case involves the same questions as in Greene v. Board (S. F. No. 2-381) 63 Pac. 161. Upon the authority of that case, and for the reasons therein given, the judgment and order herein appealed from are reversed.

In re KRUGER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 758.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1900.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. T. Nilon, Judge. On the settlement of the account of the executors of the estate of W. H. Kruger, deceased, the compensation of the attorney for the estate was fixed, and from the order fixing the amount Ida Gardner and another appeal. Reversed. Fred T. Searls and Geo. T. Wright, for appellants. P. F. Simmonds, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in Re Kruger's Estate (Sac. 757; this day decided) 63 Pac. 31, the decree appealed from is reversed.

PATTON v. CARPENTER. (L. A. 741.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1900.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; J. W. Hughes, Judge. Action by J. A. Patton against H. N. Carpenter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed. Collier & Collier and D. L. Murdock, for appellant. J. Z. Tucker, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action of claim and delivery brought in the justice's court. Defendant by his answer showing that the title to real estate was involved in the litigation, the cause was certified to the superior court. The judgment went for plaintiff, and this appeal is taken. The subject-matter of the litigation consists of a house, and plaintiff's title to the house depends upon his title to the land upon which it rested. During plaintiff's absence defendant removed the house from this particular tract of land. Upon the trial the defendant offered no testimony, and, as far as the evidence shows, was a mere trespasser in removing the building. The court found the plaintiff to be the owner of the property in litigation, and we are entirely satisfied with that finding. It is not necessary to recite the evidence in detail. It appears that the building was located upon land which the plaintiff claimed, upon which he was being taxed, and which he had improved in various ways by fencing, clearing, etc. In addition to this evidence the defendant concedes plaintiff's right of recovery if the evidence justifies the conclusion "that pueblo lot No. 1,196, according to the Poole map, is identical with the same lot according to the Pascoe map." After an examination of the record we deem the evidence substantially discloses that fact. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WARREN et al. v. FERGUSON. (S. F. 2-404.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1901.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge. Action on a street assessment by one Warren and others against one Ferguson. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant appeals. Reversed. Stafford & Stafford, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action upon a street assessment. The question involved upon this appeal—the sufficiency of the engineer's certificate—was presented in Obermeyer v. Patterson (Cal.) 62 Pac. 926, and it was there held that the court erred in admitting the certificate in evidence. Under the authority in that case the court erred herein in admitting the engineer's certificate in evidence, and in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. See, also, Warren v. Ferguson, 108 Cal. 535, 41 Pac. 417. The judgment and order are reversed.

LOCKE v. MOULTON et al. (Sac. 742.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1901.)

APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence is conflicting, and there is a preponderance in favor of the findings, they will not be reversed on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Edward I. Jones, Judge.

Ejectment by George S. Locke against Moulton, McCloud, and others. From a judgment in favor of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. W. Elliott and G. F. Buck, for appellant. Frank H. Smith and Budd & Thompson, for appellees.

VAN DYKE, J. On the 2d day of October, 1885, the defendant Moulton, who was then the owner of and in possession of the real property in controversy, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a certain instrument in writing purporting on its face to be a deed of grant, bargain, and sale. The consideration expressed was $1,500, and the instrument recited that it was made subject to a deed of trust executed by said defendant Moulton, December 17, 1884, to secure the Stockton Savings & Loan Society in the sum of $4,240 and interest. This action was brought November 24, 1890, and is in the nature of ejectment. In his answer Moulton denies that the plaintiff is, or ever was, the owner of the land described, or entitled to the possession thereof; and as an affirmative defense alleges that from the 27th day of April, 1870, to the 15th day of July, 1890, he was the owner in fee and in possession of said premises, and that on the latter date, for a valuable consideration, he conveyed said land to the defendant S. M. McCloud, and on that date executed and delivered to him a grant, bargain, and sale deed therefor; that the instrument executed and delivered to the plaintiff by him, said Moulton, on the 2d day of October, 1885, although in form a deed absolute, was in truth and in fact intended to be and was a mortgage to secure the payment of the sum of $6,127.50, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent.

per annum, which said sum was then and there owing from said defendant Moulton to the plaintiff, and said deed of conveyance was made and delivered only as a mortgage for the purpose of securing the payment to plaintiff of said sum of money, and for no other purpose whatever. The case has been here before on two several occasions. On the first trial, judgment in the court below went for the plaintiff, and this court on the appeal (Locke v. Moulton, 96 Cal. 21, 30 Pac. 957) held that the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that the instrument in question was intended to be, and was in fact, a mortgage; the court saying: "As the mortgage, though in the form of a deed absolute, does not give the mortgagee the right of possession, it must follow that defendant Moulton, or his grantee, McCloud, being the owner of the legal title, cannot be required to pay the debt for which the security was given, or offer to pay it, to enable him to defeat the action brought by the plaintiff to recover possession;" and reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial. On the second trial the defendants demanded a jury, which was denied, and judgment again entered in favor of the plaintiff. On appeal from this second judgment (Locke v. Moulton, 108 Cal. 49, 41 Pac. 28) it was reversed, on the ground, as said: "The affirmative allegations in the answer to the effect that the deed was intended as security for a debt do not constitute an equitable defense in the proper sense of those terms, since they could have been proved under the general denials." On the last trial the court finds, in accordance with the affirmative allegations in the answer of defendant Moulton, that the deed in question was intended to be, and was in fact, a mortgage; that the consideration thereof was the sum of $1,500, borrowed by Moulton from the plaintiff, and the taking up by the plaintiff of the trust deed previously executed by said defendant in favor of the Stockton Savings & Loan Society, and that the money so paid to the Stockton Savings & Loan Society was a part of the money loaned by the plaintiff to said Moulton; that said Moulton never delivered or surrendered possession of the premises to the plaintiff, but always remained in the open and exclusive possession thereof until the 15th day of July, 1890, when he conveyed the same to the defendant McCloud; and that said McCloud has since been the owner of said property, and was such at the commencement of the action, and in the possession and entitled to the possession thereof. The testimony is substantially the same as it was on the first trial, when this court held it sufficient to establish the contention of the defendant that the deed in question was a mortgage, except that on the last trial the testimony of the plaintiff taken at the second trial was read. But this evidence of the plaintiff is rendered practically valueless on cross-examination, and is contradicted by accounts kept by plaintiff, wherein he charged interest on the amount forming the consideration of the deed as for money loaned by him to defendant Moulton. His testimony is also contradicted by his own admissions and statements to other parties who were witnesses on the trial. Under the well-settled rule, the findings of the trial court must be allowed to stand where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Here, however, there is a preponderance of evidence in support of the findings. Under the circumstances of the case it was not error to refuse plaintiff's offer to prove the value of the land in question, or its productive quality. Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

HARLOE v. LAMBIE et al. (L. A. 787.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1901.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—COVENANTS—NOTICE TO PERFORM—NECESSITY—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION—LEASE—EVIDENCE—ALTERATION—CONTINUANCE.

1. Where a lease provided that defendant lessee would not underlet any portion of the premises without plaintiff's consent, in an action to recover possession for breach of such condition a contention that it would not lie because no notice requiring the performance of the covenant was served on defendant as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, was without merit, since such notice has no application to a covenant that cannot be performed after notice.

2. Where plaintiff had leased premises to defendant under a written lease, in an action to recover the possession for breach of conditions, the verified complaint having alleged the execution of the lease, and its contents, which were not denied in the answer, it was not error to admit a copy of the written lease in evidence.

3. The lease being in defendant's possession, and he having failed to produce it when called on to do so, and not claiming that he had not had reasonable notice to produce it, it was proper to admit a copy of it in evidence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1938.

4. Where premises were leased under a written lease, in an action to recover the possession, for failure to pay the rent after notice, it was proper to reject parol evidence that the time for the payment of the rent becoming due on the date mentioned in the lease was extended.

5. Where an affidavit for a continuance merely showed that one of defendant's firm of attorneys was sick, but did not give any reason why defendant had not fully advised with the other member of the firm, who tried the case, nor show any defense, it was proper to deny the continuance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; 'E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by Flora Harloe against C. K. Lambie and another. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant Lambie appeals. Affirmed.

Graves & Graves, for appellant. Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Action in unlawful detainer. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff. Upon this verdict judgment was entered, and defendant Lambie brings this appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

No point is urged against the judgment. No error is claimed as to the instructions of the court to the jury, but certain alleged errors of law are urged, which we will notice in the order set forth in appellant's brief. The facts are as follows: On November 1, 1897, the plaintiff leased to appellant the real estate described in the complaint, by written lease, for the term of three years from said date, for a rental of $1,000 per year. For the first year the rent was payable $350 on April 1, 1898, and $650 on November 1, 1898. The lease contained a covenant that the appellant would "not underlet any portion of said premises or assign this lease without the written permission of the said party of the first part." The appellant entered into possession under the lease, and has continued, by himself and subtenant, to hold such possession. On May 5, 1898, appellant, without plaintiff's consent, and in violation of the terms of the lease, sublet a portion of said premises to defendant Pierce. Pierce paid to appellant the sum of $400 for the premises so sublet to him. Appellant has never paid any rent, and, upon demand made in writing, refused to pay or to surrender up possession of the premises. Plaintiff commenced this action May 31, 1898, to recover possession upon the ground of the failure of appellant to pay the rent, and remaining in possession three days after demand made for its payment, and upon the further ground that appellant violated the covenants of said lease by subletting to Pierce.

It is claimed by appellant that the second cause of action set forth in the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for forfeiture of the lease for a breach of the covenant not to sublet, because "no notice requiring the performance of the covenant" was served on appellant. The covenant was "not to sublet." Appellant had violated the covenant, and had sublet. It is difficult to imagine any purpose that could have been subserved by plaintiff serving a notice on appellant to perform a covenant "not to sublet," when he had already sublet. If the notice had been served, it would have been impossible for appellant not to do that which he had already done. The notice mentioned in the statute has no application to conditions or covenants that cannot be performed after the notice. Code Civ. Proc. § 1161; Bernero v. Allen, 68 Cal. 505, 9 Pac. 429; Kelly v. Teague, 63 Cal. 68.

Plaintiff offered and read in evidence, under appellant's objection, a copy or duplicate of the written lease. This is claimed to be error, for the reason that the lease, being in writing, was itself the best evidence. The objection is without merit, for the reason that the facts stated in the complaint in regard to the execution of the lease and its contents were not denied in the answer. These pleadings were verified, and the lease, when proven, did not add anything to the admissions of the pleadings. The lease was in the appellant's possession. When called upon to produce it, he failed to do so, and said that he had given it to Ernest Graves, one of his attorneys. William Graves, who was trying the case for appellant, said that he did "not know where the lease is. If the lease is in the possession of Graves and Graves, it is in the private box of Mr. Ernest Graves, who is now sick in San Francisco." It thus appears that, when called upon, appellant did not produce the lease. He did not place his objection upon the ground that he had not had reasonable notice to produce it. In such case the evidence was admissible. Code Civ. Proc. § 1938; Burke v. Water Co., 12 Cal. 408; Jones v. Jones, 38 Cal. 584.

In appellant's answer he alleged that the time for the payment of the rent that became due on the 1st of April, 1898, was extended to the 18th day of May, 1898. He offered at the trial to prove such agreement by parol, and the court sustained the objection of plaintiff to the offered evidence. The ruling was correct. A contract in writing cannot be altered except by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement. Civ. Code, § 1698; Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 60 Pac. 426. But, aside from this, conceding the answer to be true, the amount became due May 18, 1898, long before the answer was filed, which was September 1, 1898. There is no allegation of tender or payment in the answer. The cause was tried in November, 1898, and there was no proof of any payment or tender at that date. The court properly denied the motion for a continuance. The affidavit entirely failed to show any diligence on the part of appellant. It simply showed that Mr. E. Graves, of the firm of Graves & Graves, was ill in San Francisco, and had been so for over a week. No reason is given in the affidavit why appellant had not fully advised with Mr. William Graves, who tried the case for him, and who was a member of the firm, as to the merits of his defense. The affidavit entirely failed to show that he had any defense of any kind on the merits or otherwise. The appeal in this case is frivolous and entirely devoid of merit. The judgment and order should be affirmed, with $100 damages to plaintiff.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed, with $100 damages to plaintiff.

PEOPLE v. SULLIVAN. (Cr. 622.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1901.)

JURORS — PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES — NUMBER ALLOWED—MURDER IN SECOND DEGREE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1070, providing that a person on trial for any offense punishable with imprisonment for life shall be entitled to 20 peremptory challenges at his trial, a person on trial for murder in the second degree is entitled to 10 peremptory challenges, since the punishment may be less than imprisonment for life.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; S. P. Hall, Judge.

C. O. Sullivan was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. Crowley, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. An information was filed against the defendant charging him with the crime of burglary, and also including a prior conviction of the crime of murder in the second degree. Upon this information he was tried, and, after conviction, sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of his natural life. At the trial, the defendant, having exercised 10 peremptory challenges, claimed the right to exercise 10 more, which was refused by the court, and he now contends upon this appeal that, inasmuch as in case of his conviction he was liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for the term of his life, he was entitled, under section 1070 of the Penal Code, to 20 peremptory challenges. This question was determined against the contention of the appellant in People v. Clough, 59 Cal. 438, and the ruling then made has been followed in several cases. In People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 Pac. 56, the ruling in People v. Clough was affirmed in this department, and a petition for rehearing in bank was denied. The construction thus given to the section was made nearly 20 years ago, and, as the legislature has not seen fit to make a change in the statute, we do not feel authorized to recede from the construction then given. The rulings of the court upon the questions at the trial which have been presented upon the appeal were without error. The judgment is affirmed.

SOUSA v. PEREIRA. (Sac. 750.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1901.)

EJECTMENT — TITLE — RECOVERY — PUBLIC LANDS—DECISION IN LAND OFFICE—EFFECT—GRANTS—AID OF RAILROADS—RELINQUISHMENT.

1. Where the land in controversy passed to a railroad company by Act Cong. July 25, 1866, granting lands in aid of such railroad, plaintiff acquired no title by filing on the land as a homestead.

2. Where the question as to whether the government had a title to land which it could pass to a homestead claimant was purely a question of law arising on undisputed facts, the decision of the land department is not binding on the court.

3. Where land filed on as a homestead had previously been granted to a railway company, a relinquishment by the company of lands described as "List 16," selected by the state before the grant to the company, which list did not include the land in controversy, did not relinquish the company's title to the land in controversy, since it could only relinquish its claim where it had never received title, and select in lieu thereof other government lands.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Ejectment by Manuel Sousa against Manuel Pereira. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. Magoffey, for appellant. L. F. Coburn and O'Neill & Butler, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The action is in ejectment, and was begun September 28, 1897. On the trial before the court without a jury, plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying him a new trial, the defendant appeals. The plaintiff claims ownership, subject to the paramount title of the government, in the whole of the S. ½ of the N. W. ¼, and lots 2 and 3 of section 33, township 44 N., range 8 W., M. D. M., as designated on the amended plat of said township dated August 9, 1890; and bases said claim upon a homestead application and receiver's receipt dated June 8, 1896. He alleges in his complaint that since June 8, 1896, defendant has been in the wrongful possession of about 30 acres of the northerly part thereof, and prays judgment for the recovery of the possession of said northerly part. In his answer, among other defenses, defendant sets up that the land in controversy is a portion of the land included in the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad in California to Portland in Oregon," passed by the congress of the United States and approved July 25, 1866; that the California & Oregon Railroad Company and its successors built, completed, constructed, and operated said railroad in accordance with the terms of said act; that this defendant and his predecessors in interest have been in the actual, adverse, open, and notorious possession of said lands for more than 30 years last past adversely to the whole world, under claim of ownership; and that plaintiff's claim, if any he has, is barred by the provisions of sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California. Plaintiff's title is also denied in the answer.

There is no conflict in the evidence as to the controlling facts in the case, and said facts are, in substance, as follows: In 1856 one C. C. Tracy, "a United States deputy surveyor, under a contract with the United States government, surveyed a tract of land in this [Siskiyou] county in township 44 north, range 8 west, M. D. M., described as follows: 'Beginning at the northeast corner of Sec. 36, Tp. 44 N., R. 9 W., M. D. M.; thence east three miles; thence south one-half mile; thence west three miles; thence north one-half mile to the place of beginning,—the said strip of land being platted and described by the United States land department as the 'N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of Sec. 31, N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of Sec. 32, and N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of Sec. 33, Tp. 44 N., R. 8 W., M. D. M.'; and said survey was approved by the United States government on the 6th day of October, 1856. But the said Tp. 44 N., R. 8 W., as a whole, was not surveyed in the field until 1880, when one W. F. Benson, a United States deputy surveyor, under a contract with the United States government, surveyed the whole of said Tp. 44 N., R. 8 W., by which survey it appeared that the south $\frac{1}{2}$ of northwest $\frac{1}{4}$ and south $\frac{1}{2}$ of northeast $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 32, and the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 33, are wholly south and about one-quarter of a mile west from the land described as such by the Tracy survey, and are wholly separated therefrom by a strip of land varying in width from north to south from about 70 links to 1.20 chains, and which narrow strip of land has been by the United States government segregated and designated on the amended official plat of said Tp. 44 N., R. 8 W., M. D. M., as lots properly numbered; those in section 33, and involved in this case, being numbered 2 and 3. That the tract of land described by the Tracy survey as the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 33 is, according to the last approved plat of said township, approximately the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 33, and the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 28. That on the 6th day of January, 1859, the state of California selected the last-described tract of land with other land, which selection was duly approved March 14, 1866, and by mesne conveyances the defendant herein became, and he is now, the owner and in possession thereof." In addition to the foregoing facts, which are quoted from the findings, the evidence without conflict shows that the Benson survey was duly approved in 1881; that the land here in controversy passed to the railroad company by the act of 1866, referred to in the answer, it being part of an odd-numbered section, and within the limits prescribed in that act. The map showing the location of the said railroad (then called the California & Oregon) was filed in the general land office in 1871. The land in controversy is shown to consist of a little upwards of 36 acres, and is all south of the survey made by Tracy in 1856, and none of it is within that survey.

On the foregoing facts we think that the evidence shows that there was no title in the government to the land in controversy when plaintiff filed on it as a homestead, and that, consequently, plaintiff acquired no title by reason of such filing, and the finding that he is the owner and entitled to the possession is contrary to the undisputed evidence. We are not governed by the decision of the land department on this question, as it is purely a question of law arising upon undisputed evidence. Wormouth v. Gardner, 112 Cal. 506, 44 Pac. 806. It seems to be admitted by respondent that the title to the land passed to the railroad company, but it is contended that the railroad company relinquished its title when it made the indemnity selection in place of it. If the railroad company relinquished anything in said section 33, it must have been some part of the land that had passed out of the government of the United States before the railroad title under the grant had attached to it. It had no power to relinquish a good title to one piece of property for the purpose of selecting another from the government. It was empowered only to relinquish its claim where it had never received title, and select in lieu thereof other lands of the government beyond the 20-mile limit, and within 30 miles from the line of the railroad. Indeed, the relinquishment describes the land relinquished as in "list 16, state of California, Mar. 1866," which shows that it must have been included in the Tracy survey, as it was from this survey only that land was listed to the state in March, 1866, as heretofore shown. There was, then, no relinquishment of the railroad title in the land here in controversy, and no intention to relinquish it; for this land, as we have seen, was not included in the Tracy survey, and the title to it, therefore, never passed to the state, but when it passed out of the government it passed into the railroad company. It passed into the railroad company certainly as early as the approval of the survey in 1881, as the map locating the railroad had been duly filed some 10 years prior to that time. Railroad Co. v. Whitaker, 109 Cal. 268, 41 Pac. 1083. Hence the government had nothing to convey to a homestead claimant; and as the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of his adversary's title, it would follow that defendant would be entitled to judgment, leaving it unnecessary to determine the question presented as to whether defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

Ex parte RODLEY. (Cr. 740.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1901.)
HABEAS CORPUS — FELONY — CONVICTION — WRIT OF ERROR TO FEDERAL SUPREME COURT — CUSTODY OF PRISONER PENDING THE WRIT.

Where a defendant was convicted of a felony, and the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court, and defendant was granted a writ of error to the federal supreme court, the sheriff has no authority to deliver the defendant to the warden of the state prison pending the decision of the federal court, since the writ of error operated as a supersedeas.

J. Ellis Rodley was convicted of perjury, and the judgment was affirmed (63 Pac. 351), and pending defendant's writ of error to the supreme court of the United States the sheriff undertook to convey defendant to the state prison. Defendant applied for habeas corpus to prevent his delivery to the warden. Ordered that the defendant be retained in custody in the county where he was convicted until final judgment on the writ of error.

Geo. D. Collins, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Ford, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioner, having been convicted of the crime of perjury in the superior court of Butte county, took an appeal to this court, where the judgment was affirmed. 63 Pac. 351. Pending his appeal he remained in the custody of the sheriff of Butte county, confined in the county jail, in pursuance of the order of the superior judge certifying that there was probable cause for his appeal. After the affirmance of the judgment of the superior court by this court there was a petition for a rehearing, and this was denied on the 28th day of January, 1901, whereby the judgment became final. On the following day—January 29, 1901—a writ of error was allowed by me as chief justice of the supreme court, by which the cause is made reviewable in the supreme court of the United States upon assignments of error involving an alleged conflict between a law of this state and the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States. A proper bond to prosecute the writ was presented, approved, and filed, citation and writ duly issued, and copies filed in the clerk's office on January 30th. On the 31st the citation was served on the defendant in error by delivering a copy to the attorney general. On the 1st day of February the sheriff of Butte county was on his way from the county seat to San Quentin, with the prisoner, for the purpose of delivering him to the custody of the warden of the state prison, in execution of the sentence of the superior court, when he was served with the writ of habeas corpus issued herein, in obedience to which the prisoner was produced before me. The parties not being ready to proceed with the hearing at that time, a provisional order was made, remanding the prisoner to the custody of the sheriff, to be by him confined in the county jail of Butte county until otherwise ordered. Subsequently the matter was fully heard, and the facts above stated were disclosed by the records or stipulated by the parties. Upon these facts, and the law established by the statutes of the United States and the decisions of its courts, I have no doubt that the writ of error operated as a supersedeas from the date of its allowance, and that the sentence of imprisonment pronounced upon the prisoner is suspended until the decision of the supreme court of the United States upon the matter to be reviewed is regularly certified to the supreme court of this state. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1000, 1003, 1004, 1007, 1017; Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277, 15 Sup. Ct. 450, 39 L. Ed. 424; In re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 11 Sup. Ct. 735, 35 L. Ed. 409; Bryan v. Bates, 12 Allen, 201. The holding of the prisoner, therefore, in the custody of the sheriff in any other place than the county jail of Butte county, and especially for the purpose of delivering him to the custody of the warden of the state prison in execution of his sentence, is unwarranted and unlawful. He must remain, pending the decision of the supreme court of the United States and its mandate, in the custody of the sheriff, and at the usual place of confinement. It is therefore now ordered that the said J. Ellis Rodley be, and he is hereby, remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Butte, state of California, to be by said sheriff detained in custody until a final judgment upon the writ of error issued by the supreme court of the United States and filed in the supreme court of California in the case of the People of the State of California, Respondent, v. J. Ellis Rodley, Appellant, being case numbered Cr. 643 in the supreme court of California, or until the said J. Ellis Rodley is ordered released on bail, pursuant to the provisions of section 1017 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

FRANTZ et al. v. PORTER et al.
(S. F. 1,741.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1901.)

GIFTS—VALIDITY OF CHECK—UNDUE INFLUENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION—JURY QUESTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Defendant firm had been acting as banker for plaintiff's testator for 14 years, and K., a member of the firm, had been an intimate friend of testator. Testator wrote K. on the 13th day of January that he was sick, and requested K. to call, which he did; and he continued to visit testator until he died, on the 21st of January. K. testified that on the 14th of January testator requested K. to call a lawyer, as he wished to leave something to K., and that he insisted thereon, and that K. then attempted to get attorneys, but failed, and on the 15th testator told him to draw a check for the amount of testator's deposit, and that he would give it to the children of K., and the latter drew a check for $25,000 of such deposit, and testator signed it, and K. had the money transferred to his account. The testator was of sound mind, left no relatives in this country, and was worth $102,000, and devised all his property to his brother, a colonel in the French army. Held sufficient to sustain a judgment for defendant in an action by testator's executors to recover the amount of the check from the firm.

2. The evidence does not raise a presumption that the money was received for the use of the drawer, since there was no relation of trust or confidence existing between the parties.

3. An instruction, as to the validity of a check given as a gift in the last illness of the drawer, that if he executed and delivered the check to defendant while of sound mind, and without fraud, the gift should not be set aside, is not erroneous, as authorizing the assumption that the execution of the check was sufficient to constitute the gift, in connection with instructions requiring the jury to find that the gift was so intended by deceased, and placing the burden of proving such gift on the defendant.

4. The question whether the facts attending the gift of a check shows such a confidential or fiduciary relation between the drawer and payee as will give rise to a presumption of fraud or undue influence is for the court, in an action by the drawer's executors to contest the validity of the gift.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Fred Frantz and another, executors of the last will of Horace Gasquet, deceased, against George K. Porter and others, to recover an amount alleged to have been deposited with defendants by plaintiffs' intestate. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Philip G. Galpin, for appellants. Rothschild & Ach, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover $26,160.92 alleged to have been deposited with defendants by plaintiffs' testate, Horace Gasquet. Defendants answered that they had for two years preceding the death of Mr. Gasquet been acting as his banker, under an agreement "to receive deposits from him, to pay out moneys to him or upon his order, and to allow him interest upon deposits at the rate of four per cent. per annum"; that prior to his death defendants had paid out to him or his order all sums by him deposited or to which he was entitled, except $1,185.38 (including therein $24.46 interest), which amount defendants admitted was due the estate of deceased on August 7, 1896, at the time demand was made on them by plaintiffs, and that defendants then tendered to plaintiffs said sum, etc. The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiffs had a verdict for the amount tendered by defendants, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiffs appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

It appears from the evidence that defendants were partners doing business as Porter, Slessinger & Co., at San Francisco, and had been in business as such for over 20 years; that for some 14 years they had acted as the bankers for deceased, allowing him 4 per cent. interest on balances. During this time deceased resided in Oregon, where he was engaged in merchandising, mining, contracting, and other occupations, and purchased goods from defendants. Defendant Kahn was a married man, residing with his wife and two children at San Francisco. Deceased and Kahn were Frenchmen; the former being unmarried, and without any known relatives in this country. The evidence shows an intimate relation and close friendship, long continued, between deceased and Kahn, and that Kahn had been called upon personally to perform and did perform for deceased various services of a personal and friendly nature. On January 13, 1896, the firm was indebted to deceased in the sum of $26,160.92. On that date Kahn received a letter from deceased, stating that he was very sick, and requesting him to call at St. Mary's Hospital, San Francisco, where deceased was under medical treatment. Kahn went to him at once, and continued to visit him daily until the 21st, when he died. His attending and consulting physician testified that "he was very weak in body, but his mind was clear,—he was of sound mind,"—until his death. Kahn remained all day with deceased on the 13th, and returned on the 14th. Kahn testified: "On the afternoon of the 14th he said that he wanted to change his will, and wanted me to bring a lawyer to him. Said he made a will in Crescent City, but he wanted to leave me something. I said, 'What for?' He said, 'I want to leave you something.' I tried to talk him out of it, but he said: 'No; I insist upon it;' and I said, 'All right. I will bring you some attorney to-morrow.' He insisted, and I called on Rothschild & Ach, and left a note asking them to go to St. Mary's Hospital to draw a will, and that I would send a carriage for them. I went to the hospital on the 15th, but neither Mr. Rothschild nor Mr. Ach could go. Gasquet said, 'Where are the attorneys?' I said they would come in the afternoon. He said, 'Never mind about the lawyers.' He said, 'You go and write out a check for the money I have at Porter, Slessinger & Co.'s, and I will give it to you for your children.' I talked with him a little while, and he said, 'Just do as I tell you.'" Kahn went back to Porter, Slessinger & Co., and spoke to Mr. Porter about it. He also spoke to the bookkeeper, and told him to look at the account and tell him the balance due deceased, and explained why he wanted to know, and was told by the bookkeeper that the amount was between $25,000 and $26,000. Kahn then drew a check at the office of the firm for $25,000, and showed it to the bookkeeper; and Mr. Porter and witness thinks he showed it to Mr. Slessinger, also. Kahn took it to the hospital on the 15th, and deceased signed it. Kahn testified: "He signed it on the 15th of January, and handed it back to me. He said: 'I give you this for your children. Give them a musical education, or what you like, with it. Let the boy buy all the postage stamps he wants.' I accepted the check at the time." The check is in evidence, and Kahn testified that he took it back to the firm, showed it to Porter and the bookkeeper, "and told the bookkeeper to give him credit on the books for $25,000 to Joseph Kahn, trustee. I gave him the check." It was indorsed by Kahn, and stamped, "Paid January 15th, 1896," with the stamp of the firm; and the books of the firm showed a charge against Horace Gasquet for the amount of that date, and a credit to Kahn. Kahn testified that he told his wife that evening about the gift, and also told Levi Strauss. There is evidence that Mr. Gasquet was very ill with cancer of the stomach, and that he said "that he never expected to get up," and Kahn testified that: "When the check was being signed, some one knocked at the door, and I said, 'Come in.' It was the nurse. He did not come in, but excused himself and went away." There was no one present except Kahn when the check was signed and delivered. A large number of letters were introduced, showing the correspondence between Kahn and Gasquet during several years, from which it appears that they were very close and intimate friends; and this is confirmed by the evidence of Gasquet's anxiety to have Kahn near him, and as much of the time as possible, while he was suffering from his mortal illness at the hospital. Deceased left a will that was executed at Crescent City on January 10, 1896, when on his way to San Francisco for medical treatment, in which he made his brother, a colonel in the army of France, his sole devisee, and it appeared that the estate was of the value of $102,000, including the claim here in question.

Appellants say in their brief that the evidence of plaintiffs in rebuttal was largely circumstantial, but that it tended to show the improbability of such a large and unusual gift; that it was shown that Gasquet had other acquaintances, whose relations with him were equally intimate and less of a business character than his relations with Kahn; that Gasquet was very weak from the day of his arrival, and took little or no nourishment; that Kahn told no one of having received the check, except the members of the firm and the bookkeeper; that there were persons in the hospital who might have been, but were not, called to witness the signing of the check; that the gift was at variance with the desire of Gasquet as expressed in his will. These and some other circumstances of like import are relied on as showing that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. The evidence was that Kahn not only told the members of the firm and the bookkeeper of the gift, but he told his wife, and he also told Levi Strauss; and the circumstance of alleged variance with the expressed purpose of the will is met by the evidence that Gasquet at first desired to change it so as to make provision for Kahn, in lieu of which he finally determined to give him the check. The evidence is uncontradicted, and comes from an entirely disinterested source, that Gasquet was of perfectly sound mind when he gave the check and until his death. There is no evidence of fraud or undue influence, in any way impeaching the action or motives of Kahn. The jury had all the evidence before it, and with its conclusions we cannot interfere.

Appellants claim that there is a presumption arising, under the proven circumstances, that the check was given for the use of the drawer; citing White v. Warren, 120 Cal. 322, 49 Pac. 129, 52 Pac. 723. The case cited was that of a husband claiming that the money alleged to have been loaned him by his wife was in fact a gift, and the court said that when the husband introduced evidence of gift "the presumption of law immediately arose that the gift was obtained from the wife by the exercise of undue influence upon his part," and cast the burden on him of disproving the presumption. The decision rested on certain provisions of the Civil Code, and on the advantage gained by the husband in the particular transaction in question. The court said: "It is only in those transactions where one secures an advantage over the other that the confidential relation existing between them may be invoked, and the equitable principles laid down in the chapter of the Code upon trusts be called into operation." But there was nothing in the present case from which a relation of trust and confidence may be said to have existed between Kahn and Gasquet at the time. The relation was neither more nor less than that of warm personal friendship, and there can be no presumption, under the facts in this case, that the check was given to Kahn for the use of the drawer. Besides, there was evidence directly against any such presumption, and sufficient to overcome it if such a presumption arose.

It is claimed by appellants that while the court properly instructed the jury as to the burden of showing that the check was executed by Gasquet, and that the gift was in fact made, as claimed by defendants, nevertheless the court erred in giving another instruction from which the jury could assume that by the mere signing and execution of the check the gift was in fact made. The instruction complained of was as follows: "If you should find that Gasquet executed and delivered to the defendant Kahn the check in question, then you are further instructed that if Gasquet at that time was mentally sound, and that there was no fraud or undue influence exercised by the defendant Kahn in this matter, the gift should not be set aside, although it might be considered highly improvident, and although a mere stranger was the recipient of the donor's bounty." Standing alone, this instruction might perhaps have conveyed the impression that signing and delivering the check completed the gift, which certainly would not have been sufficient, for it might have been delivered for some different purpose. But in the same connection, and immediately preceding this part of the instructions, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The defendant thereupon claiming, as he does, a gift, it became his duty to establish a gift to your satisfaction, by satisfactory evidence. If, in your opinion, you find that that signature was genuine, that the check was delivered to defendant Kahn, and that the gift was in fact made, then the burden of proof, and the duty of showing that the gift was obtained through fraud or undue influence, rest upon the plaintiff, because the law, unless in cases of confidential relations, which are not here presented, does not presume fraud, and does not presume undue influence. Therefore in such case the party who asserts fraud or the party who asserts undue influence has to prove it." The court in other instructions gave emphasis to the fact that the burden was on defendants to prove that a gift had been made. In an instruction the court said: "The evidence must be clear and satisfactory to your minds that a gift was intended by Horace Gasquet." Again: "You must be satisfied that the alleged gift is clearly established by a preponderance of the evidence, or you must find for the plaintiff." We do not think the jury was left in any doubt as to the meaning of the court that defendants were required not only to prove delivery of the executed check to Kahn, but also to prove that when delivered it was intended as a gift. We do not feel called upon to notice the line of cases cited in which fiduciary and confidential relations were shown to exist, and where the courts have held that the burden of proving independent advice to the donor was cast upon the donee. Here there were no fiduciary or confidential relations proven, and appellants' counsel admit in their brief that the relations of Kahn and Gasquet were "not what are called technical confidential relations; that is, such relations as are declared by law to be confidential." It is also claimed that whether the relations between Kahn and Gasquet were confidential and fiduciary was a question of fact for the jury, and that it was error for the court to instruct, as matter of law, that there were no such relations. It is claimed "that the court should have instructed the jury that, if they believed the relations of the parties were confidential, the burden of rebutting the presumption of fraud and undue influence was upon defendants." Whether the facts showed such a fiduciary relation as would cast the burden of proof upon the donee to overcome a presumption of fraud and undue influence which would arise from such relation was exclusively within the province of the court. The facts given, it was for the court to say whether they made out what in law would constitute a relation of trust and confidence,—such relation, for example, as in White v. Warren, supra, warranted the court in saying that when the husband proved a gift, and no more, he "rested too soon"; adding, "Such evidence, standing alone, compassed his defeat, for by reason of that evidence the presumption of undue influence arrayed itself against him." The question of fraud and undue influence is not directly raised by the pleadings, and there is no evidence addressed to such an issue. The question arises, if at all, by the presumption on which appellants now rely, and from which they seek to cast upon defendants the burden of showing that there was neither fraud nor undue influence. Appellants' position cannot be maintained. The order is affirmed.

ROGERS v. RIVERSIDE LAND & IRRIGATING CO. (L. A. 772.)

IRRIGATION CANAL—MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR—NECESSARY EXPENSE—INJUNCTION—EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT ROLL—RATABLE ASSESSMENTS—COLLECTION—ATTORNEY'S FEE.

1. Defendant was liable for a part of the necessary expenses of maintaining and keeping an irrigation canal in repair. Plaintiff was tenant in possession, and as part of the expenses charged the defense of defending suits brought to restrain him from making changes in the canal. Held, that the judgment rolls in these suits were admissible to show whether or not their defense was necessary, since the matter in issue could not be determined by the complaint alone.

2. Defendant had a right of way through plaintiff's irrigating canal for the passage of a certain amount of water, under an agreement that defendant was to pay that proportion of the necessary expense of repairing and maintaining the canal which the volume of water it was entitled to bore to the entire volume. Held, that the expense of defending a suit brought to restrain plaintiff from making changes necessary to prevent the appropriation of water by persons not entitled to it was a necessary expense of maintenance and repair, so as to render defendant liable for his proportion thereof.

3. Where the expense of maintaining and repairing an irrigating canal is to be borne ratably by the parties entitled to convey water through the same in proportion to the amount of water used, the expense of collecting their ratable portion from parties who have refused to pay is a part of the necessary expense of maintenance, since, unless the rate due from such parties is collected, there would be no fund for maintenance and repair.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county; J. W. Ballard, Judge.

Action by I. D. Rogers against the Riverside Land & Irrigating Company. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John G. North and Purington & Adair, for appellant. E. W. McGraw, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. On the 5th day of February, 1890, the North Riverside Land & Water Company was the owner of the portion of the canal in question here from the source of the same in the Rancho San Bernardino down to the west line of the Rubidoux Rancho, and on that day conveyed the same to the Stearns Ranchos Company. The deed of conveyance contained the following reservation: "Hereby specially reserving, however, the right of way to carry through such canal the 350 inches of water, being the same 350 inches reserved by first party in its conveyance of other water to second party by indenture, dated May 23, 1888, * * * subject, however, to first party's paying the proportion of the entire expense of maintaining and repairing such canal that 350 inches of water sustains and bears to the entire amount of water from time to time being carried through said canal." The plaintiff is the lessee and tenant in possession of said canal under the said Stearns Ranchos Company. The defendant, by mesne conveyances from the North Riverside Land & Water Company, acquired its said right to a portion of said water to be carried through said canal. The suit is for the portion alleged to be due from the defendant of the expenses of maintaining and repairing such canal or ditch from June 1, 1897, to August 1, 1898. The aggregate expenses for the whole canal were $4,386.35, defendant's portion thereof being $358.32, for which amount judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

The first point made by appellant is that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the admission in evidence of the judgment rolls in the cases of B. R. Smith against Stearns Ranchos Company, and Riverside Land & Irrigation Company against Stearns Ranchos Company. Among the items in the aggregate expenses are $500 attorney's fees for defending the suits in question. This, together with $25 attorney's fees in another case, going into the aggregate expenses, are the only items of expenses in reference to which any question is raised. The introduction of the judgment rolls was for the purpose of showing the nature of the actions and the necessity of incurring the expense of attorney's fees in defending the same. The actions in question were brought to restrain the defendants therein from making certain changes and alterations in certain flumes, boxes, pipes, and penstocks. It is maintained by appellant's counsel that, "whether the defense in the two suits named was necessary expense of 'maintenance and repair' was to be determined from the complaint alone; and, if the defendant had defaulted, and the plaintiffs had secured all the relief demanded in the prayers of their complaints, such relief would not in any sense have interfered with the maintenance and repairs of the canal." Appellant's counsel also contends in his brief that it was not necessary to defend those suits, and hence it was not necessary to employ an attorney for that purpose; but the finding of the court on the issue raised by the affirmative matter in the answers would seem to show that the defense of the suits was necessary in order to carry out the improvements,—that is, proper maintenance and repairs of the canal. The answers in said actions set up that there was good cause for making the changes; that the plaintiffs in said actions and others on the canal were habitually using water to which they were not entitled, and which belonged to other persons, thereby depriving the other persons of the water to which they were entitled. The court found that the respondent, I. D. Rogers, the lessee and tenant in possession, threatened to remove the outlets, flumes, boxes, pipes, and penstocks mentioned in the complaint, and to replace them with others better adapted to prevent the waste and unauthorized use of water; that the removal of said outlets, flumes, boxes, and penstocks, and the substitution for them of others, was a reasonable exercise of the power of regulation and management of such canal. Appellant's counsel is mistaken in supposing that issues in a cause can be raised only by allegations in the complaint controverted by the answer. Very frequently the most important issues tried in a cause arise outside of the allegations in the complaint. In addition to the denials contained in the answer, it may contain a statement of new matter constituting a defense; and the statement of such new matter in the answer on the trial is deemed controverted by the opposite party, and an issue arises from such new matter in the answer thus controverted by implication of law. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437, 462, 588, 590. The proper construction of the terms as used in the reservation contained in the deed to the Stearns Ranchos Company would seem to be that the canal or ditch should be kept in such condition as to enable the owners of water who have the right to have the same carried or conveyed through said ditch or canal unobstructed, and with as little loss as possible, and so as to prevent others from using or appropriating the quantity to which they may be entitled; and, whether breaks or obstructions should occur from natural causes, or by trespass or injunction suits, it would be equally the duty of the owner of the canal to prevent or remove the obstructions and repair the breaks; and if it should become necessary to bring suits or defend suits for the purpose of protecting the canal, and keeping it in good repair, the expense of such litigation, including an attorney, would seem to be a part of the necessary expenses of maintenance and repair. Under a contract of lease of a canal by which the lessee agreed to pay to the owner three-eighths of the whole receipts from tolls after deducting expenditures for repairs, it was held that the lessee was entitled to charge a salary for his own supervision of the canal. Dyer v. Fitch, 63 Me. 171. See, also, the following cases in reference to what the terms in a covenant or agreement of "maintaining and repairing" will include: Rhodes v. Mummery, 48 Ind. 217; Attorney General v. Union Soc. of Worcester, 116 Mass. 167; Foster v. Goddard, 1 Black, 506, 17 L. Ed. 228; Reg. v. Heath, 6 Best & S. 587; Sevenoaks, M. & T. Ry. Co. v. London, C. & D. Ry. Co., 11 Ch. Div. 634. The other attorney's fee of $25 was incurred in bringing suit for the collection of unpaid assessments from different users of water carrying the same in said canal. The expense of maintaining and repairing the canal is borne ratably by the parties who are entitled to convey water through the same, and, unless the assessments or rate due from such parties could be collected, there would be no means of keeping the canal in repair. If any of such parties refuse to pay their pro rata of the assessment or expenses for the purpose of maintenance and repairs, it would be necessary to enforce the collection by suit, and it would be clearly in the interest of those who do pay their pro rata to compel the others to contribute their portion also.

Appellant's counsel objects to the language of findings 4 and 20, where it is said, "The defendant was by plaintiff permitted to convey water through said canal;" and also to the language in finding 13, wherein it is said that the only interest which the defendant had in the canal was an easement therein to carry water through the same, "conditioned upon payment therefor as alleged in the complaint." The reservation in the deed of conveyance already set out reserves to the defendant the right of way to carry through such canal its quantity of water, "subject, however, to first party's paying the proportion of the entire expense in maintaining and repairing such canal." If the language of the findings objected to is not precisely that contained in the reservation, no injury to the defendant results therefrom. It sufficiently appears from the findings that the defendant has an easement or right in the canal, subject to or conditioned upon paying its proportion of the expenses for maintenance and repairs.

FOR PREMIUM—PAYMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 2598, declaring that an acknowledgment in a policy of the receipt of the premium is conclusive evidence of its payment so far as to make the policy binding notwithstanding any stipulation therein that it was not to be binding until the premium is actually paid, an insurance company is liable on a policy reciting that it is issued in consideration of $12 paid, and providing that there shall be no liability thereon while any promissory note given for premium remains past due and unpaid, notwithstanding the fact that a note for the $12 mentioned in the policy is due and unpaid.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a policy of fire insurance. The defendant issued its policy of insurance to the plaintiffs against loss by fire for the term of five years from the 27th day of May, 1897, until the 27th day of May, 1902. The policy was signed by its officers at New York, but contained a provision that it should not be binding until countersigned by its general manager at Chicago. It was so countersigned, bearing date June 7, 1897, and was thereafter delivered to the plaintiffs. It recites that it is executed "in consideration of twelve dollars paid, and the payment of installments when due on an installment note for forty-eight dollars, due as follows: Twelve dollars on the 1st days each of June, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901." It also contains the following provision: "It is expressly agreed that this company shall not be liable for any loss or damage that may occur to the property herein mentioned while any promissory note or obligation, or part thereof, given for the premium, remains past due and unpaid." The plaintiffs had made their application for the insurance to an agent of the defendant in California, on May 27th, and in consideration for such insurance, and the policy therefor, executed on that day their promissory note to the defendant for the sum of $12.65, payable on or before the 1st day of October, 1897, and also the note for $48 recited in the policy. The note which was payable October 1, 1897, recited that it was the "first payment for policy of insurance based on application made this day to the Continental Insurance Company of New York." Each of the notes contained a recital that, in case of its nonpayment at maturity, the company should not be liable for loss during such default, and that the policy for which the note was given should lapse until payment was made. A portion of the insured property was destroyed by fire, October 11, 1897, and at that time the note which was payable on October 1st had not been paid. A tender of its amount was made by the plaintiffs October 15th, and was refused by the defendant. The present action was brought upon the policy to recover the amount of the loss sustained by the fire. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant has appealed.

By the recital in the policy that it was made "in consideration of twelve dollars paid," the defendant is estopped from showing, for the purpose of disputing the validity or binding effect of the policy, that such payment had not been made. Section 2598, Civ. Code, declares: "An acknowledgment in a policy of the receipt of premium is conclusive evidence of its payment, so far as to make the policy binding, notwithstanding any stipulation therein that it shall not be binding until the premium is actually paid." Such recital would not conclude the insurer in an action upon the note from showing that it had not been paid, but this provision of the Code makes the recital conclusive evidence of its payment, "so far as to make the policy binding," notwithstanding any stipulation in the policy to the contrary. Its effect is of the same character as the vendor's acknowledgment in a conveyance of land of the receipt of the purchase price. He is not thereby estopped from collecting the money from the vendee in case it is not in fact paid, but the transfer of title is not defeated by showing such nonpayment.

The policy herein acknowledges the receipt of the $12, which, so far as the payment of premium is concerned, rendered the contract of insurance binding until the 1st day of June, 1898, and it is immaterial whether the plaintiffs made the payment in money or by giving their note therefor. The binding effect of the policy caused by this acknowledgment continued until another year's premium should fall due, unless in the meantime there should be some breach of condition by the insured, other than the payment of the first year's premium. The provision for forfeiture contained in the stipulation in the policy is limited to the nonpayment of the promissory note referred to therein as thereafter to mature, and cannot apply to the nonpayment of the note given for the premium, whose payment is acknowledged. If the defendant had given an indefinite credit to the plaintiffs,—that is, a credit generally, without specifying the time at which the premium should be paid,—its acknowledgment in the policy that it had been received would be conclusive against it in an action upon the policy. It is none the less conclusive because the time of credit is limited to 60 days, or for the reason that the agreement for credit is evidenced by a note. There is no statement in the policy that the $12 was paid by a note, or that the plaintiffs had given their note therefor, and the conclusive effect created by the statute cannot be set aside by showing that a note was given. It was competent for the defendant to accept the note of the insured as payment of the premium, and it can no more dispute the binding effect of the policy by showing that the payment was made by a note which has not been paid than it could if it had accepted their personal credit in lieu of money.

The condition as to forfeiture which is contained in the note in case it should not be paid at maturity is not available to avoid the policy by showing such nonpayment. Joyce, Ins. § 1211. This provision in the note is for the benefit of the insurer, and it is not at liberty to retain the note after its maturity as a binding obligation against the insured, with the right to collect it if no loss should occur during the life of the policy, or refuse to pay the loss if it should occur before the payment of the note. The insurer in such a case is bound to demand payment at the maturity of the note, and, if not then paid, can exercise its option to declare the policy forfeited, or to continue it in effect.

It is contended by the defendant that the note and policy are to be considered as parts of the same transaction, and are to be construed together, and that the proviso in the note is operative to defeat its liability upon the policy, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2598. Without determining whether the two instruments can be considered as parts of the same transaction,—the note having been made May 27th, and the policy not issued until after June 7th,—if it should be so conceded the same conclusion would follow. If the two are construed as parts of the same instrument, the result would be that the policy would acknowledge the receipt of payment of the first year's premium, and would contain a stipulation in two places, one in the note and one in the agreement for insurance, that the failure to pay the note should forfeit the policy. Section 2598 is sufficiently comprehensive to include as many stipulations therein referred to, and as many different forms of such stipulation, as the insurer may express in its policy. By inserting in the section the phrase, "notwithstanding any stipulation therein," the legislature intended to prevent the insurer in any action upon the policy from disputing its acknowledgment that it had received the payment. The section is not limited to a policy which contains a provision in specific language that it shall not be binding unless the premium has been "actually paid," but extends to any stipulation which is intended to have that effect. The judgment and order are affirmed.

WRIGHT v. KILLIAN et al. (L. A. 946.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1901.)

MINES AND MINING—MINING CLAIMS—ABANDONMENT—ASSESSMENT WORK—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—DEFECTIVE PLEADINGS.

1. An admission in defendant's pleading, in an action to quiet title to a mining claim, that plaintiff was the owner of the claim during certain years, is an admission that he did the requisite amount of assessment work during such years.

2. Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, permits the miners in each mining district to make regulations as to the amount of assessment work necessary to retain possession, but requires the work in each year to be of the value of $100. Plaintiff, who owned four claims, employed G. to perform the assessment work for a certain year, and paid him $400 therefor, and he constructed a shaft on each of the claims larger than that required by the local regulation. G. and other witnesses testified that such work was worth $100 a claim. Defendant's evidence was to the effect that the expenses for help and necessary supplies, etc., could not have reached $100 a claim, but no bad faith was shown on the part of plaintiff, and the remoteness of the mines entailed additional expense. Held sufficient to support a finding that an assessment work of the value of $100 had been performed.

3. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, authorizing the miners of any district to establish regulations as to the amount of assessment work necessary to hold possession of a claim, but requiring the work to be of the value of $100 a year, and providing that a failure to do such work shall work an abandonment, compliance with a local regulation providing that an improvement of a certain description shall be sufficient will not prevent an abandonment, when the value of the work is less than $100.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by Lewis Wright against F. G. Killian and others to quiet title to certain mining claims. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rolfe & Rolfe and Frank B. Daley, for appellants. Leonard & Morris, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to quiet title to certain four mining claims and for an injunction. Plaintiff had judgment. The appeal is from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The verified complaint alleged ownership and right of possession of the mining locations in question for more than five years prior thereto; that defendants entered upon the property on January 1, 1899, and thereafter extracted and are now extracting ore therefrom; and that they claim some interest in and to the said mining locations. Defendants answered, denying the ownership of plaintiff "at the commencement of the action or at any time on or after the 1st day of January, 1899"; alleged that plaintiff failed to do work on each of said locations of the value of $100 during the year 1898, and that he therefore forfeited any interest he might have had therein; that for more than three years prior to January 1, 1899, defendants "had known of the mining claims mentioned in said complaint, and of the gold-bearing veins or lodes thereon"; that, knowing plaintiff had forfeited his rights by failure to do the requisite assessment work, they "entered upon the premises * * * on said 1st day of January, 1899, * * * for the purposes of locating and in good faith working and developing the ores," etc., and erected substantial monuments and posted notices, and within 20 days thereafter recorded the same in the county recorder's office. The court found that "each and all of the averments of the complaint are true"; that plaintiff, during the year 1898, "performed, and caused to be performed, upon each of said mining claims, * * * not less than one hundred dollars' worth of work and labor in the development and improvement of each of said claims." The court found, in detail, the acts and things done by defendants constituting their location of the property, setting forth copies of their notices, but the court found that said notices made no reference to any natural objects or permanent monuments in existence, sufficient to identify any of said locations, and that the monument erected by defendants on each of said claims was not erected at any point of discovery thereon, nor upon any gold-bearing ledge, vein, or lode of rock in place bearing any mineral deposits or precious metals. As conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff is the owner, and that defendants had no right in or to any of the claims, and that defendants be perpetually enjoined from working the mines. Judgment was accordingly entered.

1. It is contended that the evidence does not support the finding that plaintiff performed, or caused to be performed, $100 worth of work on each claim during the year 1898. This is the principal question in the case. The answer, by its form of denial, admits that on December 31, 1898, and for five years prior thereto, plaintiff was the owner of the mining claims in question, but it is alleged in the answer that plaintiff forfeited his interest by failure to do the requisite assessment work for 1898. An admission of ownership would imply that plaintiff had done whatever was necessary to constitute ownership, including assessment work. The parties, however, seem to have treated this admission (which was also made in open court when the trial began) as simply establishing a prima facie case for plaintiff, and as casting the burden on defendants of proving the alleged forfeiture, and they at once assumed the burden, and put in their evidence on that issue.

The provisions of section 2324, Rev. St. U. S., which relate to questions involved in the pleadings, including that relating to the labor required, are as follows: "The miners of each mining district may make regulations not in conflict with the laws of the United States, or with laws of the state or territory in which the district is situated, governing the location, manner of recording, amount of work necessary to hold possession of a mining claim, subject to the following requirements: The location must be distinctly marked on the ground so that its boundaries can be readily traced. All records of mining claims hereafter made shall contain the names of the locators, the date of the location, and such description of the claim or claims located by reference to some natural object or permanent monument as will identify the claim. On each claim located after the tenth day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than one hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year. * * * And upon a failure to comply with these conditions, the claim or mine upon which such failure occurred shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made, provided that the original locators, * * * their representatives, have not resumed work upon the claim after failure and before such location."

It appears without conflict that one Greenleaf was employed by plaintiff to do the requisite assessment work on each of the four claims, and that he was paid \$400 by plaintiff therefor. The claims are about 50 miles from any railroad station, and 120 miles from San Bernardino, whence Greenleaf went with a team and five men to do the proposed work. He testified that he thought it necessary to take men from San Bernardino, because he was not sure of finding them near the mine. All these men, together with Greenleaf, worked more or less days, and excavated a shaft on each claim of dimensions, as Greenleaf testified, of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet by 6 feet, and about 12 feet deep. The character of the ground through which they ran the several shafts varied somewhat in the different claims, but it required blasting, and was what would be called hard ground to work, and Greenleaf testified that the work performed by him on each claim was reasonably worth \$100 and more. In this estimate he was corroborated by several witnesses who were qualified to judge of the value of the work, and who examined the shafts and the ground, and also by two of the men who helped do the work. The evidence was that Greenleaf fitted out the party with tools, forge, powder, fuse, and other supplies and a team; that he supervised the work, as well as did some part of it with his own hands; that he was familiar with the value of that class of work, and had done much similar work in that mining district. Defendants offered in evidence the recorded affidavit of one Phelps, who had helped do the work and made the proof of labor on behalf of plaintiff, and this affidavit stated that at least \$100 worth of labor and improvements was performed and made on each of the claims. It was in evidence, without objection, that the miners in that mining district had adopted and caused to be recorded in the office of the county recorder the rules and by-laws of the district. Among those who organized the district were two of the present defendants, and among the rules adopted was article 6, "that a shaft 4 ft. in width, 6 ft. in length, and 10 ft. deep, or its equivalent in cubic feet, shall be excavated in each claim, and this shall constitute the regular assessment work of the district."

It appears, however, that the wages in the district generally was $3 per day for a man where he boarded himself, or $2 when board was furnished, the employer to furnish tools, powder, etc., in both cases; that the shaft dug on each claim could be done by one man in 15 to 18 days, and the wages actually paid by Greenleaf to his men did not exceed these figures. Estimates by witnesses for the defense showed that the supplies, tools, team used, and other items of expense, added to the cost for wages, could not have reasonably amounted to $100 for each location. It is claimed that there is, in no true sense, any conflict in the evidence, because it clearly appears that the witnesses who estimated the value at $100 could not give in detail the items aggregating so great a sum for the work actually done. There is no question but that plaintiff paid Greenleaf in good faith the full amount of $400. It is fair to infer from the evidence that Greenleaf did work which he believed sufficiently complied with the law, and was of the value of $100. There is nothing in the evidence justifying the inference that there was any intention to evade the law or come short of its requirements by plaintiff or by the men whom he employed to do the work. Considering all the circumstances under which he undertook the work; the remoteness of the mines from any place where labor could be relied on as available; the extra cost of supplies; the inconvenience in procuring wood and water, requiring a team to be kept there; the lack of facilities for cooking and other like circumstances,—it may be doubted whether there was any profit to Greenleaf, notwithstanding all that appears as to the cost of the various items of expense. But, even if he made some profit, there is evidence substantial, direct, and credible that the labor performed on each claim was worth $100, and we cannot take from the trial court, in such a case as appeared here, the right to determine from all the evidence the ultimate fact of the value of the work performed, nor can we say there was no substantial conflict in the evidence. The facts brought out by defendants tended strongly to weaken the evidence adduced by plaintiff, but it did not destroy it utterly, and leave the facts without conflict. The good faith of plaintiff was further shown, in this: That he had sold the mines conditionally, and the deeds were in escrow, and he had employed Greenleaf to go with the representatives of the proposed purchasers and examine the property after the assessment work was done. They went, and some of them were there on December 31st, taking samples of ore, and returned the next day (Sunday), January 1st, to continue their examination and development work, and then found that during the intervening night, at the hour of 12 o'clock and 10 minutes, defendants had "jumped" the claims, and had tied the tools together that they found at one of the claims, and attached a notice thereto, "saying 'Remove Tools,' signed by Jack Killian," one of defendants. They thereupon left the mines, being unwilling to purchase a lawsuit, and shortly after plaintiff brought this action.

It is no doubt true, as appellants contend, that the provision of the law as to assessment work is often evaded, and that, as this court has said, "the conditions imposed by the act of congress are wise and salutary, and are by no means onerous" (Russell v. Brosseau, 65 Cal. 605, 4 Pac. 643), and must be complied with (Id.); but there is disclosed here no effort or intention to avoid the provisions of the law. The trial judge had the witnesses before him, and all the peculiar circumstances surrounding the parties must have received consideration. The by-law above referred to could not dispense with the requirements of the statute, but it tended to show how miners regarded the general character of the mining ground in that district, and what amount of work in their judgment would be worth $100; and it also tended in some degree to rebut any inference of bad faith in stopping the work in a shaft after it had been sunk 12 feet of the required dimensions, even though it cost less than $100. We think there was sufficient evidence to support the finding.

2. The fourth finding, as to the want of knowledge of defendants concerning the presence of gold-bearing veins, is not material. Conceding that the proceedings taken by them to relocate the claims were all regular, they could confer no right, inasmuch as plaintiff had not forfeited his right. The same may be said as to finding 7, that defendants' notices did not refer to any natural objects or permanent monuments sufficient to identify their locations, and that the locations were not distinctly marked on the ground so that their boundaries could be readily traced. Findings upon these matters, and as to whether defendants complied with the act of 1897 (since repealed, but then in force), become immaterial, and, if not supported by evidence, were without injury.

3. Numerous exceptions to rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting testimony were taken by defendants, but few of which, however, are referred to in their brief. We have examined the record at the points indicated, and, while we think in one or two instances the rulings should have been the other way, they were not prejudicial to defendants. The essential facts came out quite fully on both sides, and we can discover no instance where evidence was admitted or excluded over defendants' objection, to their injury. It is advised that the order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GRIMES. (Cr. 675.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1901.)

HOMICIDE—CONVICTION—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT—KILLING TO PREVENT FELONY—TO PREVENT MISDEMEANOR—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—HABIT OF CARRYING WEAPONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

1. Defendant and deceased were playing cards in a room adjoining a saloon, and deceased claimed that defendant had cheated, and took some money won by defendant. Defendant followed deceased into the saloon, and demanded a return of the money, which deceased refused. Defendant declined to drink with deceased, and, after the latter returned to the card room, bought a drink for himself, and remarked to the bartender that it might be the last he would ever drink, and then, drawing his pistol, went towards the door, and said to deceased, "Give me back my money, or I'll shoot you," and deceased replied, "Shoot," whereupon defendant shot the deceased as the latter stood with his hand near his hip pocket.

Held to support a verdict of murder in the second degree.

2. Where deceased took money defendant had won at a game of cards, and refused to return it, and defendant, after leaving the card room, returned with a drawn pistol, and shot deceased as he stood with his hand near his hip pocket, it was proper to charge that, if defendant was not a wrongdoer in seeking to get back his money, and deceased met his death by such a demonstration as justified defendant in believing the deceased was about to inflict great bodily harm on him, and the assault was sudden, and the danger apparently great, the defendant was justified in standing his ground, and in slaying the deceased to win his own safety.

3. It was proper to charge that, if defendant killed deceased having reasonable grounds to believe that, if he did not do so, deceased would then and there do defendant some great bodily harm, then defendant's act was neither murder nor manslaughter, but justifiable self-defense.

4. The court charged that defendant had the legal right to prevent the attempted commission of a felony, even to the extent of inflicting death on the one so attempting; or, if the deceased was endeavoring to escape with the proceeds of the felony, defendant also had the right to prevent such escape, even by inflicting death; but, if the attempt or commission would amount only to a misdemeanor, then defendant had no such right. Held, that the charge was not prejudicial to defendant as informing the jury that, if the threatened assault on defendant by deceased was a misdemeanor, the right to kill deceased in self-defense did not exist, since the instruction referred to the right to kill deceased to prevent him from keeping defendant's money.

5. Where deceased kept money which had been won from him by defendant at a game of cards, and refused to return it, and in an ensuing quarrel defendant shot deceased, and contended that he did so to prevent the deceased from committing a felony in taking the money, it was proper to charge that a homicide committed in endeavoring to restrain the commission of a mere misdemeanor was not justifiable.

6. It is not error to refuse a requested instruction where the substance of it was covered by instructions already given.

7. An instruction as to the weight of certain evidence was properly refused, as the matter was a question for the jury.

8. Where it appeared that the deceased was standing with his hand near his hip pocket when he was shot by defendant, and that defendant had worked with deceased, and was familiar with his habits, the fact that the court allowed the state to introduce evidence in chief to show that the deceased had a marked peculiarity in habitually standing with his hand near his hip pocket did not justify a reversal of conviction, since the evidence was clearly admissible in rebuttal of defendant's claim of self-defense.

9. Where a defendant charged with homicide introduced evidence that deceased had been seen on several occasions with a pistol, it was proper to allow the state to show in rebuttal that an intimate acquaintance, who had lived in the same house with deceased for a considerable time, had never seen deceased with a pistol.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Thomas F. Grimes was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. Tirey L. Ford, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. Defendant was charged with the murder of one Charles McLaughlin, and was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The principal features of the case are these: At about 6:30 o'clock of the morning of December 26, 1899, the appellant, the deceased, and one Gleason were engaged in playing poker in a card room adjoining the main saloon of Fred Lutz in the town of Ophir, Placer county. They had been so engaged through most of the previous night. When the last hand was being played, the deceased "called" the appellant, and upon the latter naming his hand deceased said, "That is good," and threw his hand over to Gleason, who was to deal next. Appellant pulled the money which had been bet partly towards his own pile, when deceased demanded to again see the hand. Gleason, who had taken up appellant's hand preparatory to shuffling for another deal, took appellant's hand from the top of the deck, and spread it upon the table, when it appeared that there were six cards in it. Gleason testified that there were only five cards in appellant's original hand, but that in taking it off the deck he had accidentally taken another card with it. The deceased immediately charged appellant with having six cards in his hand, and, reaching over the table, he took the money, which was lying some little distance from appellant's pile, and put it in his pocket. Appellant demanded the money back, and deceased refused to give it to him, and thereupon the game ceased. The parties then went into the main saloon, where appellant several times demanded the money of the deceased, who refused to give it to him, and threatened to strike defendant if he did not let him alone. Deceased asked all present to drink, but appellant refused. The deceased, after he had taken his drink, went back into the card room, and was heard walking to and fro across the room. Appellant then took a drink by himself, saying to the barkeeper, "This will probably be the last drink I will ever take." He then drew his pistol, and started towards the opening in the partition which led into the card room. When a few feet from the opening he was heard to say to the deceased, "Give me back my money, you ———, or I will shoot you," and the deceased was heard to say, "Shoot, you coward, you darsn't." Thereupon appellant shot the deceased, who retreated, and appellant shot at him several times afterwards. Deceased died within half an hour from the wounds inflicted by appellant.

There is no foundation for the contention that there was not sufficient evidence to support the verdict. That defendant killed deceased is beyond question. There are two defenses set up: First, that the homicide was committed in justifiable self-defense, because, as asserted by appellant, when he approached the deceased the latter had his hand in his hip pocket, and appellant had, therefore, reasonable ground for believing that he was about to be shot by deceased; and, second, that appellant had the right to kill deceased in order to prevent the latter from committing a felony, to wit, robbery,—appellant contending that the taking of the money by the deceased at the card table constituted robbery. But the jury was justified in holding that neither of these defenses was established.

We do not think that there was any prejudicial error of law which warrants a reversal. Upon the general matters of law applicable to the case the court instructed the jury correctly, and certainly not unfavorably to appellant. As to the instructions touching the claim of self-defense, "appearances," etc., the appellant has no just cause of complaint. Upon these points the court, among other instructions, gave the following: "If you believe that the defendant was not a wrongdoer in seeking to get back his money, and the deceased met his death by such a demonstration as justified the defendant in believing the deceased was about to inflict great bodily harm upon him, and the assault is sudden, and the danger apparently great, then I charge you the defendant was justified in standing his ground, and in pursuing and slaying the deceased to win his own safety." And: "The jury are instructed that if they believe that Grimes killed McLaughlin, having reasonable grounds to believe that if he did not do so McLaughlin would then and there do him some great bodily harm, then his act was not either murder or manslaughter, but justifiable self-defense." Appellant contends that there was error in giving instructions 8 and 9, which are as follows: "(8) The defendant had the legal right to prevent the attempted commission of a felony, even to the extent of inflicting death upon the one so attempting; or, if the one so attempting endeavored to escape with the proceeds of the felony, he also had the legal right to prevent such escape by any and all means, even to inflicting death; but, if the attempt or commission would only amount to a misdemeanor, then the defendant had no such right. (9) A homicide committed in endeavoring to restrain the commission of a mere misdemeanor is not justifiable under the law." Appellant seems to assume that these instructions refer to the right of self-defense as against an assault or threatened assault on the person of the defendant by the deceased, and that they state the law to be that, if such assault would be only a misdemeanor, then the right to kill would not exist. But clearly the instructions do not refer to the right of a party to kill another in order to prevent an assault upon his person, on which subject the court had already fully and correctly instructed. They refer to the other defense made by appellant, namely, that he had the right to kill the deceased in order to prevent him from keeping the money taken from the card table, which appellant contends amounted to robbery; and it is apparent that the jury could not have otherwise understood them. There was no error in refusing instruction 13, asked by appellant. The substance of it was given elsewhere. Appellant's instruction 15 was properly refused for the reason given by the trial judge. Instruction 17 was also properly refused, because it was as to the weight of certain evidence, which was a question for the jury. The foregoing includes all the points made as to instructions.

It appeared in the course of the introduction of the main evidence of the prosecution as to the facts of the homicide that about or just prior to the shooting the deceased had his hand in or near his hip pocket. In connection with this evidence, the prosecution, having proved that the appellant, for a considerable length of time, had worked with the deceased in the same mine, had slept with him in the same room, and had been on terms of great intimacy with him, was allowed, over appellant's objections, to prove, as part of its case in chief, that the deceased was noted for a marked peculiarity, which consisted in resting his hand on his hip or in his hip pocket while walking or standing. Considering that it had already appeared that the deceased had his hand near his hip pocket about the time of the shooting, it is not entirely clear that the evidence here in question was not proper as part of the prosecution's case in chief; but, conceding that it was irregular as part of the case in chief, still, if it was proper in rebuttal, the fact that it was introduced out of order would not warrant a reversal. People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 124, 54 Pac. 591. Indeed, its introduction in chief was apparently an advantage to appellant; and, as appellant afterwards testified that the fact of deceased having his hand at his hip was a reason why he anticipated danger, the evidence here in question was clearly admissible as rebuttal. The jury had the right to consider this evidence in determining—First, whether there was any real danger; and, second, whether appellant had a reasonable apprehension of danger from the appearances. Neither do we think that there was error in allowing the witness Smith, who was an intimate acquaintance of the deceased, and had lived with him in the same house for a considerable length of time, to testify that he had never seen deceased with a pistol in his possession. This was in rebuttal of the testimony of two or three of appellant's witnesses that they had seen deceased on certain occasions with a pistol. The testimony of appellant's witnesses was of value only as tending to show the habit of deceased as to going armed, and as to this subject the testimony in rebuttal was as proper as that introduced in chief.

We have noticed all the points made, and we see no grounds for a reversal of the judgment. The deceased may have treated the appellant unfairly and unjustly in the matter of the game of cards, but that treatment gave appellant no legal excuse or justification for taking his life. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

McGREW v. MUTUAL LIFE INS. CO. OF NEW YORK. (S. F. 1,230.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1901.)

FOREIGN COURTS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—EFFECT—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—DIVORCE—ADULTERY OF WIFE—DOMICILE—EFFECT ON PERSONALTY—LIFE INSURANCE—ACTIONS—PAYMENT TO WRONG PARTY—EFFECT.

1. Where the guardian of an insane man in Hawaii obtained a divorce for him, the judgment will not be invalid in California on the ground that, as there was no express statute permitting a divorce action by the husband's guardian, he could not do so under the general provision that the guardian of an insane person shall appear for and represent his ward in all legal suits and proceedings, since, as the courts of Hawaii have held otherwise, their construction of their statutes cannot be assailed.

2. Where a divorce had been granted in Hawaii, in a subsequent action involving the conclusiveness of the judgment, a contention that it was not final, because exceptions taken by defendant therein had not been disposed of as required by a Hawaiian statute, was not well taken; the supreme court of Hawaii having held that the judgment had become absolute, and there being no express finding on the subject in the court below.

3. Plaintiff was served with process in a divorce action in Hawaii, brought by her husband's guardian, on the ground of adultery, and appeared therein by attorney, but before judgment removed to California to make it her permanent home. The judgment was merely a decree for divorce, and did not deal with property rights; but a statute of Hawaii provided that, when a divorce was decreed for the adultery of the wife, the husband should hold her personal estate forever. Held, in an action in California on a policy of insurance on her husband's life, payable to plaintiff, that she was entitled to recover, since, as she was domiciled in California at the time of the judgment for divorce, the statute of Hawaii had no operation on her or her personal property.

4. It was not error to exclude evidence of the fact that defendant had satisfied a judgment on the policy recovered by the husband's administrator in an action to which plaintiff was not a party, since the fact that defendant paid the policy to the wrong party would be no defense to an action brought by the right party.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; George H. Bahrs, Judge.

Action by Alphonsine McGrew against the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory (Edward Lyman Short, of counsel), for appellant. Platt & Bayne, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Action on a life insurance policy. Judgment was for plaintiff in the court below, and from the judgment defendant appealed. The respondent is a resident of California, where this action was commenced, and the appellant is a resident of the state of New York. The defense is rather a remarkable one. It rests upon a decree of divorce rendered by a court of the republic of Hawaii in an action brought there against the present respondent by the guardian of her husband,—a decree which could not have been obtained here, and upon a Hawaiian statute which has no force here except by comity. The material facts in the case are these:

On September 14, 1892, the respondent was the wife of one Henri G. McGrew, and she and her husband were then residing and domiciled in Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. On that day the policy of insurance sued on was executed, by which defendant promised to pay $5,000 to the respondent herein, Alphonsine McGrew, upon the death of her husband, Henri, provided that she should be living at the time of such death. Henri died on the 22d day of October, 1894, leaving the respondent, his wife, surviving him. In 1893 Henri and respondent made a trip to California for the benefit of the health of the former, and in the latter part of December, 1893, they returned to Honolulu; he being then in a very feeble mental condition from softening of the brain. When they landed at Honolulu they were met by one Carter, who assumed control over them, and ordered them not to go to the home in which they had been living, but to go to a hotel. It appears that soon afterwards Carter was the legally appointed guardian of the person and estate of Henri, who had then been judicially declared to be non compos mentis; but it does not appear when he became such guardian. A few days after respondent and her husband went to the hotel, Henri was removed by Carter from the hotel to a hospital. Respondent wanted to go back to the home where they had formerly lived, but Carter, who had the key and control of the house, would not let her, and he sold all the furniture in it, except a piano, which plaintiff claimed as her own. Carter would not furnish her a home or any money, and Henri was an imbecile, incapable of understanding the situation. On February 8, 1894, Carter, as guardian of Henri, brought an action on behalf of the latter to obtain a divorce from respondent, alleging adultery as the ground of divorce. Service of process was served on respondent in Honolulu, and she appeared in the action by an attorney, and filed a demurrer, and afterwards an answer denying the charge. On April 5, 1894, respondent left the Hawaiian Islands, with the intention of not returning there again, but intending to come to California and make her home here. She obtained the funds to pay the expense of the journey by the sale of her piano. She said that she came to California to make her home here, and also through fear that "they" would take her infant child away from her. She arrived here in the same month,—April, 1894,—and has since then constantly resided in California, intending it as her place of residence. On August 25, 1894, the Hawaiian court entered a decree of divorce in the said action brought by Carter, dissolving the bonds of matrimony between this respondent and the said Henri (and it is not improper to say that the evidence in the case was conflicting). There was nothing in the pleadings in said case about property, and the decree was simply one of divorce, without any disposition of any other matter whatever; but there is, and at that time was, a statute of Hawaii which declares that, "when a divorce is decreed for the adultery or other offense amounting thereto of the wife, the husband shall hold her personal estate forever."

Respondent contends that the judgment in the divorce suit should be held invalid because, in the absence of an express statute on the subject, an action for a divorce cannot be maintained by a guardian, and there is no such statute in Hawaii; the only one relied on being the general provision that the guardian of an insane person "shall appear for and represent his ward in all legal suits and proceedings, unless where another person is appointed for that purpose." But, admitting these legal propositions to be correct, the courts of Hawaii have held otherwise, and their construction of the statutes of their own country cannot be here assailed. McGrew v. McGrew, 9 Haw. 475. Full effect must therefore be given to the judgment in the divorce suit.

It is also contended by respondent that the judgment in the divorce suit was never absolute and final, because certain exceptions taken by defendant's attorney therein have never been disposed of, and it is provided by the Hawaiian statutes that "no order or decree for a divorce shall be made absolute until such exceptions shall have been disposed of." The transcript contains many things about the law of Hawaii touching the taking of exceptions in a trial court, and having them certified up to the appellate court, which are somewhat difficult to understand; but, as the supreme court of that country seems to have held that the judgment in McGrew v. McGrew had become absolute (Carter v. Insurance Co., 10 Haw. 117), and as there is no express finding on the subject in the case at bar, we are compelled to hold that the said judgment was final and conclusive as to the matter therein adjudicated.

Under our views of the case, it is not necessary to determine the points made by respondent that the Hawaiian statute has no force here on the ground of comity, because it is penal, works a forfeiture, and is contrary to the public policy of this state, etc. As the plaintiff herein was served in Hawaii with process in the divorce suit, and appeared therein by attorney, the court there had jurisdiction, and the judgment therein rendered concludes her as to the one thing adjudicated therein. But the judgment is merely a decree of divorce. It does not deal with any property rights; and if, as claimed by appellant, all the personal property of respondent, including the policy sued on, passed to her husband, that result must have flowed from the said Hawaiian statute providing for the forfeiture of the wife's property, and not from anything decreed in the judgment. It was not a case where the adjudication by final judgment of property rights asserted in the pleadings relates back to the commencement of the action; for in that case there were no property rights averred, or considered, or adjudicated. The respondent's right to her property was not affected by the mere pendency of the suit for divorce, and the statute had no applicability until the entry of the judgment. The question, therefore, is, what was the right of respondent to the property involved at the time when the said statute could be invoked? And it is clear that, if at that time she was domiciled in California, the Hawaiian statute had no operation upon her or her personal property here; for the law which governs personal property is the law of the domicile. See Whitney v. Dodge, 105 Cal. 192, 38 Pac. 636, and authorities there cited.

In our opinion the respondent, at the time when the Hawaiian statute took effect, was domiciled in California. This is clearly so, unless we must ignore her actual residence on account of the maxim (or "fiction," as it is sometimes called) that "the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife." We think that the reason of the rule, and, of course, the rule itself, ceases when the husband discards his wife by instituting proceedings for the dissolution of the bonds of matrimony. The theoretical unity of husband and wife dissolves in the presence of a legal proceeding, the direct and only purpose of which is to destroy that unity. This is admitted to be so where the wife brings the suit for divorce; but the reason of the rule applies to her, whether she be plaintiff or defendant. Her interests and rights as defendant are frequently more serious than any she could have as plaintiff. It is not the law that a husband who is a plaintiff in a divorce suit can—as in the case at bar—actually put his wife out of his home, and at the same time successfully claim that by operation of law she is still in it. We think that the correct principle is stated in the decisions hereinafter noticed. In some of them it was held that the divorce itself was invalid outside of the state in which it was granted, because founded upon the theory that the domicile of the husband was the domicile of the wife, contrary to the actual fact; but the principle applies much more strongly to the case at bar, where the question is not as to the validity of the divorce, but as to the operation of a foreign statute upon her and her personal property at a time when she and the property were in this state.

In Irby v. Wilson, 21 N. C. 568, the parties had married in South Carolina, where they were then domiciled, had afterwards removed to and established a residence in Tennessee, and then, after a separation, the wife had gone to North Carolina and permanently resided in the latter state, and afterwards the husband had obtained a decree of divorce in Tennessee. The opinion of the court contains interesting discussions of the doctrine of the extraterritorial force of laws and judgments, but the decision turned on the single point that the domicile of the wife at the time of the divorce was in North Carolina, and not in Tennessee, where the domicile of the husband was. The court, among other things, say: "The aphorism that the husband and wife are but one person has been alluded to as founding the argument that his domicile is necessarily hers. * * * But it is a mere fiction, which is never allowed, even in the common law, to obscure, much less defeat, justice. They are two persons to make a marriage contract. They must also necessarily be two persons to litigate between themselves upon any subject, and, above all, upon the obligation, continuance, or dissolution of that contract. They are not, therefore, so identified that they cannot have opposing interests,—that they cannot have separate existences and separate residences and homes. If the argument of the counsel were well founded, it would prove that the husband might sue his wife for a divorce, enter her appearance, and in her name confess his own allegation." In Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 329, the court declares the law—we quote for brevity from the syllabus—as follows: "Although, prima facie, the domicile of the wife is the same as that of the husband, the law recognizes an exception to the rule when the husband begins an action to dissolve the marriage contract. In such case, the theoretical identity of person and interest ceases to exist, the legal fiction of one domicile no longer operates, and the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action depends upon the actual existing facts." In Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. St. 375, the question involved was that of the domicile of parties to a divorce suit, and the court said: "But the unity of person created by the marriage is a legal fiction, to be followed for all useful and just purposes, and not to be used to destroy the rights of either, contrary to the principles of natural justice, in proceedings which from their nature make them opposite parties. It required their mutual consent to establish the relation from which the unity arises, and the same law of right demands them to be viewed in their separate natural condition when either proceeds against the other to destroy this relation. It is the necessary effect of their being opposite parties in the same proceeding." See, also, Derby v. Derby, 14 Ill. App. 647; Hews v. Hews (Sup.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 119.

The principle declared in the above cases is recognized and restated in section 129 of the Civil Code of this state, as follows: "In actions for divorce the presumption of law that the domicile of the husband is the domicile of the wife does not apply. After separation each may have a separate domicile, depending for proof upon actual residence and not upon legal presumptions." There is no reason for limiting this broad provision to cases where the wife is plaintiff. In the case of In re Wickes' Estate (Cal.) 60 Pac. 867, 49 L. R. A. 138, cited by appellant, there was no question as to the law of domicile, as between husband and wife, when they are hostile parties to a suit for divorce. There had been no divorce, nor action for divorce, in that case, and no question touching any phase of the subject of divorce was before the court. There a married woman had been living, at the time of her death, in a county different from the one in which her husband was living, and in which she formerly lived with him; and it was merely held that under those circumstances the jurisdiction of the administration of her estate was in the county where her husband resided. Our conclusion is that at the date of the decree of divorce the respondent was domiciled in California, and had been since she came here in April, 1894, and that therefore the Hawaiian statute under which the forfeiture of her personal property is claimed had no effect upon her or her property in California.

It is not necessary, therefore, to consider the point made by respondent that, even if her domicile continued to be that of her husband until the date of the decree, yet upon the entry of the decree her actual residence instantly became her legal residence, and that if the decree, the legal change of residence, and the taking effect of the statute were simultaneous, the court, under the rule that a forfeiture will always be defeated if possible, will give precedence to the change of domicile.

The court did not err in excluding evidence of the fact that appellant had satisfied a judgment recovered against it by the administrator of Henri G. McGrew on the policy here sued on, in an action to which the respondent here was not a party. The fact that appellant paid the policy to the wrong party would be no defense to an action brought by the right party.

Under the views which we have taken of the case, the other exceptions argued by appellant are of no importance. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HEDGE et al. v. WILLIAMS. (Sac. 724.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1901.)
In bank. On rehearing. Denied.
For opinion in department, see 63 Pac. 721.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. The conclusion that Fountaine was the servant of independent contractors is fully sustained by the record, but it does not dispose of the case. Respondents charged negligence in the selection of a person to do this work who was unacquainted with the properties of distillate and its gases. Their contention is that, in any operation involving the use of dangerous means or the handling of dangerous explosives, the employer of an independent contractor is bound to exercise care in the selection of a person who knows the danger and how to guard against it. They cite a number of authorities to sustain this proposition,—cases in which the employer has been held liable for injuries caused by blasting, etc., by incompetent contractors. In view of the evidence in this record, which shows that both Schultz and Fountaine were entirely ignorant of the danger involved in lowering a lighted lantern into a large tank recently filled with distillate, and still containing about a gallon of that substance in liquid form, and therefore necessarily surcharged with its vapors or gas, it is manifest that the question of negligence is not disposed of by merely holding that the work was being done by independent contractors, if it is true that the employer in such cases is liable for want of care in selecting a proper person to do the work. I think, therefore, that the cause should not be remanded for a new trial, leaving this question open. Its decision is necessarily involved in the ultimate determination of the controversy, and, in my opinion, is necessarily involved in the disposition of this appeal.

BRUNNINGS v. TOWNSEND. (S. F. 2,502.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1901.)
APPEAL—TIME IN WHICH TO FILE TRANSCRIPT—GROUND FOR DISMISSAL—DISCRETION.

1. An appeal was taken, and the appellant also brought a mandamus as to the same controversy; and the appellant was granted 40 days after the decision of the mandamus proceeding in which to prepare, serve, and file the printed transcript in the appeal case. The mandamus proceeding was in bank, and determined adversely to the appellant, but he presented no petition for a rehearing. Held, that the time to prepare and file the transcript commenced to run on the determination of the mandamus proceeding, instead of after the expiration of 30 days thereafter in which a rehearing could be granted.

2. Where a printed transcript is not filed within the time granted by the supreme court, but such failure is due to a mistake as to when such time expired, and is filed shortly thereafter, and no material delay is occasioned, and no costs are caused to respondent, the appeal will not be dismissed therefor.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. M. Angellotti, Judge.

Action by Mary Brunnings, an insane person, by her guardian, E. Myron Wolf, against Hulda R. Townsend. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Foshay Walker, for appellant. W. L. Pierce, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. In this case the superior court made an order for the payment of an attorney's fee out of the estate of the plaintiff. After payment by the guardian, the appellant, Townsend, made a motion to vacate the order allowing the attorney's fee, and requiring its repayment by the attorney, with interest. In due time the superior court made an order which expressly vacated the previous order allowing the attorney's fee, but was not explicit upon the point of repayment. The appellant, acting upon the theory that the effect of the second order was to deny that part of her motion relating to repayment, took this appeal from such denial. But apprehending that it might be held that there had been no decision upon that part of the motion, and in order to be safe, she at the same time commenced an original mandamus proceeding in this court to compel a decision. On the 7th of August, 1900, that case was decided here; the court in bank holding that the motion had been fully decided and that the legal effect of the order was to deny that part of the motion relating to repayment. Townsend v. Angellotti, 129 Cal. 466, 62 Pac. 59. The result of that decision was to vindicate the propriety and necessity of this appeal as the proper and only remedy of the appellant for any wrong she may have suffered in consequence of the action of the superior court. Pending the decision of the mandamus case, on the 6th day of June, 1900, this court made an order in the present case granting the appellant "until and including forty days after final decision of this court in the mandate proceeding * * * within which to prepare, serve, and file her printed transcript on appeal herein." The printed transcript herein was served on respondent September 26, 1900,—more than 40 days after our decision in the mandate proceeding was filed,—with a request that he stipulate its correctness. On October 1st respondent returned the transcript, declining to stipulate. After some delay, and after making numerous corrections, the county clerk certified the transcript; and on October 15th it, with the requisite number of copies similarly corrected, was filed in this court. In the meantime, on October 12th, respondent had served notice of this motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the record within the time prescribed by the rule of court and the order extending time. The decision of this motion to dismiss requires a construction of the order extending time as to the date when the 40 days began to run. Respondent contends that the time began to run on the 8th of August, when our decision was filed, while appellant contends that it did not begin to run until the expiration of the 30 days during which the remittitur is ordinarily retained in appeal cases, and during which a rehearing may be ordered. We do not think appellant's construction of the order extending time can be upheld. In case of an appeal decided in department, where, in the absence of a special order for an earlier issuance of the remittitur, the judgment is not final until the lapse of 30 days, his argument would have some force; but this was an original proceeding, decided in bank, and in the sense of the order the decision was final when filed. Besides, there was no petition for a rehearing or motion for a new trial by this appellant in that case, and it was certain the respondent therein, the prevailing party, would not so move or petition; and we think the appellant should have construed the order as we do,—to give her 40 days, commencing with the filing of the decision on the 8th of August, within which to file her transcript.

But, although there has been a failure on the part of appellant to comply with the rule and orders of the court as to the time of filing her transcript, we are not inclined, in view of all the circumstances of the case, to deny her a hearing on the merits of her appeal. We are satisfied that her counsel has acted in good faith upon his mistaken construction of the order extending time. The transcript was actually served on respondent within 10 days after the time allowed by the order, strictly construed. No material delay will be occasioned in the hearing of the appeal, and respondent has been put to no costs or other inconvenience; and, since the enforcement of the rule is within our discretion, we shall deny the motion. It is so ordered.

EXTORTION—INDICTMENT—REVERSAL—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—EVIDENCE.

1. An indictment for extortion, charging threats by defendant to accuse another of a violation of the laws of the United States in sale of cigars, is not demurrable because charging a violation of a federal and not of a state statute.

trate," does not compel a previous preliminary examination.

3. A stenographer may testify as to evidence given by accused before the grand jury, where the evidence in no sense amounts to confession.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, a stenographer may read from her notes of the evidence in order to refresh her memory.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Eldorado county; M. P. Bennett, Judge.

John E. Sexton was convicted of extortion, and appeals. Affirmed.

F. Adams, Jas. W. Keyes, and Clarke Howard, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of extortion, and appeals to this court. By the indictment it was alleged that defendant obtained $30 from one Greenwald under fear induced by threats upon the part of defendant to accuse him (Greenwald) of the "crime of having, in violation of the laws of the United States of America, sold and delivered cigars in a form other than in a new box not before used for the purposes of packing cigars therein." In substance, it may be said that defendant threatened to accuse Greenwald of violating the United States revenue laws, and, under fear induced by such threat, secured from Greenwald the aforesaid sum of $30. It is insisted that the facts alleged do not constitute an offense against the laws of the state of California, but, upon the contrary, constitute a crime exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal court. We find nothing in this contention. The defendant is charged with the crime of extortion,—an offense directly within the jurisdiction of the state courts. He is not charged with a violation of a federal statute, but with a violation of a state statute. He threatened to accuse a man with the commission of a crime. It makes no difference if that crime be one solely triable in the federal courts, for defendant is not being tried for that crime. If he had threatened to have Greenwald arrested upon the charge of counterfeiting the money of this country, and was charged with the crime of extortion for that reason, clearly his offense would be one against the laws of this state. It would be extortion as defined by the Penal Code of this state, and this court would not be concerned as to whether or not defendant's crime was also punishable under federal laws. The court finds no substantial defect in the indictment, and the demurrer thereto is not well taken.

A demurrer to a previous indictment laid against defendant was sustained, and the case referred to a second grand jury, which grand jury returned the indictment now before the court. It is insisted that defendant's second prosecution should have been based upon a preliminary examination, and an information filed thereon. There is no merit in this position. When section 1008 of the Penal Code says that after such order of re-submission the defendant "may be examined before a magistrate," the word "may" takes its usual, ordinary meaning, and is not to be construed as "must."

The stenographer who was present and took the testimony before the grand jury was sworn as a witness, and testified as to certain evidence given by defendant before that body. This evidence in no sense amounted to a confession, and hence no question of duress or menace upon the part of defendant at the time he gave his testimony is involved herein. Under such circumstances, defendant's statements, whether made in the grand-jury room, at the trial, or extrajudicial, may be used against him, and we see no error in their admission here. The stenographer had the right to read from her notes of his evidence taken at the time, if she was so inclined. The statute contemplates that she may thus refresh her recollection. Section 2047, Code Civ. Proc.; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 104, 35 Pac. 444.

We find nothing further in the record demanding consideration. While the evidence tending to support the verdict in this case is very weak, we are not prepared to say it is insufficient. Owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the character of the evidence relied upon to support the verdict, we think the law would have been well satisfied with a judgment finding the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor. But that is a matter beyond review by this court. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and orders are affirmed.

(S. F. 1,572.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1901.)
WAREHOUSEMEN—LOSS BY LEAKAGE—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Barrels of spirits were in apparently good condition when received at defendant's warehouse for storage. Six weeks later defendant discovered they were leaking, and immediately notified plaintiff, who found excessive loss by leakage. The evidence showed that the leakage was caused by defective cooperage, but there was no evidence that the barrels were improperly piled, or that the warehouse was improperly constructed, or subject to improper drafts by winds or otherwise, or that it was defendant's duty to continuously inspect them, or that there was any such usage among warehousemen. Held insufficient to support a verdict that the loss was due to defendant's negligence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William R. Daingerfield, Judge.

Action by Rudolph J. Taussig and others against Bode & Haslett, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. T. Wright, for appellant. Reinstein & Eisner, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover damages for loss from 64 barrels of spirits deposited in defendant's warehouse. The case was tried before a jury. Plaintiffs recovered a verdict. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order denying the defendant's said motion. It is claimed by defendant, and we think correctly, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The defendant is and was at all the times mentioned in the complaint engaged in the business of keeping a bonded warehouse. It is alleged in the complaint that about the 20th day of January, 1896, the defendant, for hire, received on storage from plaintiffs 64 barrels of spirits, for the purpose of safely storing and keeping, and returning the same upon demand; that "defendant did not well or safely or properly store, handle, keep, or return said barrels or packages, and said spirits contained therein, but, on the contrary, said defendant improperly, carelessly, and negligently stored, handled, and kept said barrels or packages and said spirits, and in consequence of said carelessness and negligence, and of said improper handling and storage of said barrels or packages, * * * a large quantity of said spirits was permitted to leak out of said barrels, and to become lost and destroyed."

The plaintiffs having alleged damage by reason of the negligence of defendant, the burden was upon them to prove such negligence affirmatively. Shear & R. Neg. (5th Ed.) § 57; Schouler, Bailm. & Carr. (3d Ed.) § 23; Jackson v. Railroad Co., 23 Cal. 269.

The evidence is substantially without conflict, and shows that on the 20th day of January, 1896, the spirits arrived at defendant's warehouse, and, upon notification being made to them, plaintiffs sent their agent to inspect the goods. After such inspection the agent reported to defendant that the lot was in proper condition to be piled, and the barrels were at once piled by defendant in the usual method followed by it. The method of handling the barrels and of piling them was shown to be proper. They were stored two tiers in height, and dunnage, or strips of wood, placed between the first bilge hoop and the second bilge hoop for the barrels to rest upon. On March 4, 1896, the defendant for the first time discovered that some of the barrels were leaking, and immediately telephoned to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs went to the defendant's warehouse, and upon receiving the 64 barrels found that 8 of them showed excessive loss by leakage. One barrel was practically empty, three or four leaking pretty badly, and the others leaking to some extent. The total amount of leakage over and above the ordinary allowance for evaporation was 181½ running gallons, or 225½ proof gallons, of the value of $434.50. The plaintiffs immediately sent Nyland and Herbert, two competent parties, to examine the barrels, to determine as to whether or not the cooperage was defective. The witness Nyland testified: "I took the head out of the barrels, and found they didn't have as much glue in as other barrels had. * * * I found four or five of the joints that were caulked with a kind of string, something like a lamp wick, the same as they use around distilleries and warehouses, and around places where there are leaky joints. * * * The glue in the barrel stuck in most places, in what I call the most defective places. From my knowledge as an expert, the fact that the gluing did not stick in some places would account to a great extent for the leakage from that barrel." The witness Herbert testified: "The packages I saw needed driving very much. They were shrunk. I could tell from my examination whether the wood from which they were made was or was not properly seasoned. It was not well seasoned. A barrel that was made of such wood as that would be dangerous, and likely to shrink and cause leakage. I did not make any examination of the inside of those barrels at that time, but about that time I examined the inside of four of them that had the heads out. I found that they were not properly glued." The evidence further shows that defendant, during the two years prior to the trial, had on storage in the same warehouse over 18,000 packages, and, except the leakage complained of in this action, there was no other leakage in excess of the government allowance, which is known as the "Carlisle" allowance.

The above evidence not only fails to show any act of negligence on the part of defendant, but shows that the leakage was the result of the defective cooperage of the barrels from which the leakage occurred. It is claimed that the fact that defendant did not inspect the barrels and endeavor to discover leakage is evidence of negligence. The evidence shows that the barrels were in apparently good condition when received by defendant and placed in its warehouse, and that they remained there only about six weeks. It further shows that in such case there should be ordinarily no leakage. There is no evidence tending to show that it was the duty of defendant to continuously watch and inspect the barrels, or that there is any such usage among warehousemen. The defendant was required to use ordinary care. It was required to use such care and diligence as prudent persons in the same class of business are wont to exercise towards such property or in the management of their own property under like circumstances.

It is further claimed that the two rows of barrels were piled chine to chine, with not sufficient space between them to admit any one going in between the rows to inspect the ends of the barrels. It does not appear that it is the usage or custom for warehousemen to pile barrels with space sufficient to go between the rows. In fact, the witness Robin testified that he was familiar with the custom of storage of spirits in the bonded warehouses in San Francisco, and that in some of the warehouses they packed the barrels chine to chine. There is no evidence that the warehouse was improperly constructed, or subject to improper drafts by north winds or otherwise. The rule invoked by plaintiffs that a prima facie case is made out against a warehouseman who refuses to deliver property stored with him upon proof of demand and refusal to deliver, and that the burden is then shifted upon the warehouseman to account for the property, does not apply to the facts of this case. Here there was no refusal to deliver the identical barrels that had been stored. The plaintiffs received the barrels. The leakage had occurred while they were on storage. The question was as to whether the leakage was caused by defendant's want of ordinary care. We cannot say as a matter of law that it was want of ordinary care in defendant not to inspect the separate barrels for six weeks. It would seem to us that if the barrels were properly made, for the purposes for which they were used,—the holding of spirits,—and were in good condition on the 20th day of January, 1896, and properly stored in the warehouse, the presumption would be that they would not leak out their contents by the 4th of March, 1896. All the above facts are shown to be true by the record, except that the barrels were properly made. It appears that they were not properly made, and the defective cooperage must have been the cause of the leakage. It is unnecessary to discuss the other questions raised in the record. The judgment and order are reversed.

NEWMAN v. OVERLAND PAC. RY. CO.
(S. F. 1,465).¹

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1901.)
NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—ORDER—PRESUMPTION—APPEAL.

1. Where one of the grounds of a motion for a new trial was the insufficiency of the evidence, an order granting the motion which does not exclude that as one of the grounds on which it was granted will be affirmed on appeal, since it will be assumed that it was one of the grounds.

2. The rule that if an order in general terms grants a new trial, and can be sustained on any of the grounds presented therefor, it will be assumed on appeal that it was made on such ground, is not affected by the fact that the court filed an opinion wherein it discussed one or more grounds presented, since the order entered is the only record of the court's actions.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Jerome Newman against the Overland Pacific Railway Company. From an order granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. Morganthal, for appellant. Henley & Costello, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. The above cause was tried by the court without a jury, and, upon the findings of fact made by it, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards moved for and obtained an order granting a new trial. From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

In its notice of motion it designated, as the grounds upon which the motion would be made, "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision," and "errors of law occurring at the trial." Specifications of particulars wherein it was claimed that the evidence was insufficient, and of various errors of law upon which the defendant relied, were made in the statement of the case which was afterwards filed, and upon which the motion was heard. After hearing the motion the court made the following order: "In this action, the motion for a new trial herein having been heretofore submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and now the court having fully considered the same, it is ordered by the court that the said motion be, and the same is hereby, granted." In the minutes of the court the clerk added, immediately after the above order, the words, "Opinion filed." On the same day the following opinion was filed: "In view of the rule laid down in Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 18, 40 Pac. 29, and in Golinsky v. Allison, 114 Cal. 461, 46 Pac. 295, it would seem that Hunt had no power to bind the corporation defendant by executing the notes in question, and on the authority of those cases the motion for new trial is granted."

The rule is firmly established that the superior court is not only authorized, but that it is its duty, to grant a new trial whenever, in its opinion, the evidence upon which the former decision was made was insufficient to justify that decision. Its action in granting a new trial upon this ground is so far a matter within its discretion that, if there is any appreciable conflict in the evidence, it is not open to review in this court (Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124; Domico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 411, 35 Pac. 1024; Harrison v. Railway Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019); and when this is made one of the grounds of the motion, although other grounds are also presented, if the order does not by direct language exclude this from the grounds upon which the motion is granted, it will be assumed that it was one of the grounds for making the order, and the order will accordingly be affirmed. This rule rests upon the proposition that error is to be affirmatively shown, and will not be presumed; that if the order is in general terms, and can be sustained upon any of the grounds presented therefor, it will be assumed here in its support that it was made upon that ground. This rule of procedure is not affected by the fact that at the time of making the order the court files an opinion in support of its action, wherein it discusses one or more of the grounds presented. The order which is entered in the minutes is the only record of the court's actions, and is to be measured by its terms, and not by the reasons which the court may give for it. In the present case, the order, being that "the motion be, and the same is hereby, granted," is unqualified in its terms, and we cannot indulge in conjecture as to the grounds upon which it was made. If the court had intended to limit the grounds for making the order to the principles of law given in the cases cited in its opinion, it should have expressed this intention in its order. There is nothing in the terms of the order to indicate that it may not have been made upon the consideration that the evidence was insufficient under these cases to establish the authority of Hunt. One of the questions controverted at the trial was whether Hunt, at the time he incurred the liability for which he gave the notes set forth in the complaint, was acting in behalf of the defendant, or of another corporation of which he was president; and it may be that the court, upon a review of the entire evidence in reference thereto, was of the opinion that it had erred. The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. ROBERTS v. RUSS et al.
(S. F. 1,840.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1901.)
NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—FINDINGS—MATERIAL FACTS—FAILURE TO MAKE.

Defendants, who owned land bordering on a river, certain tributaries of which, called sloughs, penetrated their land, erected dams across these sloughs for the purpose of reclaiming the land, thus preventing the water of the river from ebbing and flowing therein. In an action for the abatement of such dams as a nuisance, it was alleged that they materially affected the navigability of the river; and much evidence was offered on the issue. Held that, no finding of fact having been made on such issue, though demanded, a new trial will be granted, since, if the dams obstructed a navigable stream, they constituted a public nuisance.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

Action by the people, on the relation of Robert W. Roberts, against W. N. Russ and another, for abatement of a public nuisance. From an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, L. F. Puter, and C. M. Wheeler, for appellant. J. H. G. Weaver and W. F. Clybourne, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant was the owner of a certain tract of marsh and tide land under patents from the state of California.

Cal.Rep. 63-65 P.—23

A navigable stream, known as "Salt River," bordered this land upon one side. Certain tributaries of this river, designated as "sloughs," penetrated these lands of defendant in various directions. The water in these sloughs came from the ocean by way of Salt river, and rose and fell with the tides. For the purpose of reclaiming its lands, defendant erected dams across these sloughs, thus preventing the waters of Salt river from ebbing and flowing therein. The state, upon the relation of one Roberts, brought the present action to abate these dams, claiming them to be public nuisances. This claim is based upon two grounds: First, it is alleged that these various sloughs are navigable streams, and for that reason dams erected therein constitute a public nuisance; second, it is alleged that by the erection of these dams the tidal area of Salt river is decreased, that the amount of water ebbing and flowing therein is likewise decreased, and that the daily action of these tidal waters, flowing in the aforesaid sloughs and river, kept the channel of said river and of Eel river bar, its outlet, deep and navigable, and prevented the filling up of said river and Eel river bar with debris and sediment. It is then alleged that these dams, by reason of said causes, obstructed the free passage, use, and navigation in the customary manner of Salt river and Eel river bar. Issue was joined upon both of these theories of the complaint, and, after the testimony of many witnesses had been given, the court made its findings of fact. The pivotal questions in the case rest upon a few of these findings, and, the present appeal being from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the sufficiency of the evidence to support them is one of the matters directly confronting us. It is found as a fact (1) that these certain sloughs, tributaries of Salt river, are not navigable streams. It is also found (2) "that the reclamation of the said land and the damming of said Jacks slough and said sloughs A, B, and C, as hereinbefore found, lessens the tidal area of said Salt river and Eel river; but, other than the reclamation of such land and the damming of said sloughs, the said defendants have not, nor have either thereof, in any manner or at all, obstructed or interfered with the free or any passage or use of said Salt river or Eel river bar." It is also found (3) "that said defendants have not, nor have either thereof, unlawfully or otherwise, obstructed the free or other passage or use, in the customary or any manner, of a navigable river or stream or any public highway." Upon these findings of fact judgment was entered for defendant.

The court has had some trouble in arriving at a proper understanding of findings here numbered 2 and 3. Upon first inspection these two findings appear to be inconsistent, for the first declares that defendants have not obstructed or interfered with the free use of Salt river or Eel river bar, other than by the erection of the aforesaid dams, while the other finding declares that defendants have not obstructed the free passage and use of any navigable river or stream. But upon careful consideration we are satisfied the inconsistency in these findings is not real. The court, having first found that these sloughs were not navigable streams in fact, then made the finding that the dams were not obstructions to navigable streams; and when it referred to "streams" it had in mind the aforesaid sloughs. This is made entirely plain when we read the carefully considered opinion of the trial court, found in the briefs; for it is there said: "It will be seen from the reading of this section that before the people are entitled to a judgment in their favor it must be shown, among other things, not only that the alleged obstruction was an unlawful one, but also that the sloughs in question were in fact navigable sloughs." And again the court says: "If the sloughs in question be nonnavigable, there is no doubt but that the people could not recover in the action." And again the court says: "The elimination from the case of this element makes it quite certain that the only matters, if any, of which the state could complain, would be the damming of the sloughs in question, and the title to the bed of which is seen and has been found to be in the defendants." It will thus be observed that the trial court held the pivotal point in the case to be the one of navigability or nonnavigability of the sloughs tributary to Salt river; yet this was only one of the pivotal points in the case. There was another equally important to the plaintiffs, namely, did these dams materially affect the navigability of Salt river and Eel river bar? It was so alleged in the complaint and was denied in the answer. It may be said that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of fact as to the nonnavigable character of these sloughs. But we find no finding of fact in the record directly responsive to the allegation that these dams substantially interfered with the navigability of Salt river and Eel river bar. A great mass of evidence was offered upon that issue, and an express finding of fact upon it was demanded. Finding 2 indirectly declares that these dams had a deleterious effect upon Salt river and Eel river bar, but the character and extent of the effect are not found.

The trial court has intimated in its opinion that defendant, having the right to reclaim its lands, was entitled to carry out its system of reclamation, even though its acts resulted in serious detriment to navigable streams. We find it using this language: "The act of reclamation was therefore undoubtedly authorized by federal and state governments, and the owners of these lands cannot be held to have violated any law simply because the tidal areas of navigable streams were thus reduced, and by reason thereof less water was thereby caused to flow in or out of such streams near at hand." If this intimation of the trial judge goes to the extent of declaring that the owners of swamp and tide lands have rights in the reclamation of those lands superior to and above the rights of the public to the use of navigable streams, the proposition cannot be maintained in law; for, if a tributary of a navigable stream be necessary to its navigability, then the owner of the land upon which this tributary is situated has no right to dam it, in order to effect the reclamation of his land. The swamp and overflowed act does not purport to give the owner any such right, even conceding such a power in the state; and the right of the public in the use of a stream as a public highway is paramount to any right which the owner of the land has to reclaim his land from overflow. There is no practical difference as to results, if the owner of the land should place his dam upon the navigable stream itself, and not upon its tributary. Neither do we see any difference in the legal aspect of the two cases. The mere fact that an owner has title absolute to the bed of the tributary, and not title absolute to the bed of the navigable stream, does not mark a substantial difference in the eyes of the law. A man may not create a public nuisance upon his own land. In the somewhat celebrated case of People v. Gold Run Ditch & Mining Co., 66 Cal. 138, 4 Pac. 1152, it was held that the acts of defendant in casting debris into a tributary of the Sacramento river, 50 miles or more distant from the river, constituted a public nuisance, as obstructing the free use of the Sacramento river as a navigable stream. It is the result—the effect of the act of a party—that determines its character as a nuisance. The particular point of location where the act is done is not material in determining the character of the act. Directly diverting waters in material quantities from a navigable stream may be enjoined as a public nuisance. Neither may the waters of a navigable stream be diverted in substantial quantities by drawing from its tributaries. If those tributaries form the source of the stream, no private ownership in their beds justifies a damming of them to the result of an obstruction to navigation in the stream below.

In this case the same principle is directly presented. If the dams upon these sloughs result in the obstruction of Salt river as a navigable stream, they constitute a public nuisance. The fact that these sloughs carry tide waters which ebb and flow presents no different case from one where the tributaries so dammed flowed fresh water. It is the result of the act which characterizes the nuisance, and the methods and instruments used leading to that result are immaterial. In other words, no man may use his own property whereby that use creates a public nuisance. While the state is pleased to see its swamp and overflowed lands reclaimed, and thereby become productive, yet the constitution of the state declares that no owner of tide lands of any harbor, bay, inlet, estuary, or other navigable water in this state shall be permitted to destroy or obstruct the free navigation of such water. Section 2, art. 15.

In view of what has been said, it is plainly apparent that an express finding of fact as to the effect of these dams, placed in the sloughs tributary to Salt river, upon the navigability of that river, is a material and vital question in the case, and for that reason a direct and specific finding should be made upon it. For the foregoing reasons, the order is reversed and the cause is remanded.

In re LIVERMORE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 2,339.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1901.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD—DEATH OF WARD—
REAL ESTATE OF WARD—SUBSE-QUENT SALE—VALIDITY.

A guardian after the death of his ward filed his account, and the probate court decreed that the ward's estate was indebted to the guardian. Held, that an order authorizing the guardian to sell the real estate of the ward for such debt was invalid, since on the death of the ward the authority of the guardian expired.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Application by the guardian of Delfina Livermore, deceased, for an order to sell deceased's real estate. Appeal from an order authorizing the sale. Reversed.

Metcalf & Metcalf (Johnson & Shaw, of counsel), for appellant. W. R. Davis and G. W. Langan, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is taken from an order allowing a guardian to sell the real estate which formerly belonged to the ward. Prior to the application for the order the ward had died, being at the time over the age of majority. After her death the guardian filed her accounts, and upon the settlement thereof it was found and decreed by the court that the estate of the ward was indebted to her in a considerable sum of money. Thereupon this application for a sale of the real estate of the late ward was made by the guardian, and ordered granted by the court.

The foregoing proceeding is unique in this state, and the order made by the trial court cannot find support in the law. The title furnished to a purchaser at the sale by the deed of the guardian would not be worth a dollar. The proceedings here taken for the sale were taken under the Code provisions pertaining to guardianship matters, and, as to a sale of real estate, those proceedings only contemplate a case where there is a living ward,—a living ward not only when the proceedings are inaugurated, but up to and including the moment the deed is made. When the guardian executes the deed, he executes it for and in the place and stead of his ward, and the moment that ward is dead his power to execute the deed is gone. He has no more power to execute a deed under these circumstances than would an attorney in fact after the death of his principal. It is unnecessary to consider here what a court of equity might do under the circumstances presented by the facts of this case, in aid of the probate jurisdiction of the superior court; for here the statutory procedure laid down in the Code in guardianship proceedings alone has been followed, and the sale is asked under that procedure. The guardian, as such, is attempting to make the sale, and the court is well assured it cannot be done. In Alford v. Halbert, 74 Tex. 354, 12 S. W. 76,—a case similar in principle to the one at bar,—the court said, in speaking of the efforts of a guardian to recover from the ward's estate the amount found due him by the probate court, "We think the only course left her was to administer in the proper court upon the estate of the deceased ward." For the foregoing reasons, the order is reversed and the cause remanded.

STANDARD QUICKSILVER CO. v. HABISHAW et al. (S. F. 1,626.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1901.)

PUBLIC LANDS—MINING CLAIM—HOMESTEAD—LAND SUBJECT TO HOMESTEAD—DETERMINATION OF LAND DEPARTMENT—ADVERSE POSSESSION—PAYMENT OF TAXES—APPEAL.

1. A homestead title to land containing minerals is good, as against a subsequent mining claim located thereon, though Rev. St. U. S. § 2318, reserves all mineral lands from sale, as the action of the land department in issuing the patent was conclusive as to the character of the land, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or imposition.

2. The question whether a certain tract of land was properly allowed to be homesteaded cannot be raised by the defendant in an action by the homesteader against one who subsequently located a mining claim thereon, unless the patent is void.

3. Where a patent to a homesteader is absolutely void, as issued without authority, or to reserved land, or where prohibited by statute, such facts may be set up as a defense to an action by the homesteader to quiet title against a subsequent mining claim thereon.

4. A shaft had been sunk on certain lands which developed a streak of cinnabar ore. There was no testimony that it was worth working, but the mine might have been worth prospecting. It was afterwards abandoned, and the land was homesteaded. Held not sufficient, in an action by the homesteader to quiet title against a subsequent mining claim, to show a known mine at the time of the execution of

5. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 322, requiring a person claiming title by adverse possession to found his claim on an instrument of writing, a person claiming by adverse possession under notice of the location of a mining claim must have taken the possession thereunder, and the notice must purport to convey the property.

6. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 325, requiring a person claiming title to land by adverse possession to have paid the taxes thereon, the payment of taxes shown by the tax receipts to have been on property in a different section is insufficient, though the person in possession supposed that he was paying on the land in question.

7. The payment of taxes by one not in possession of real estate excludes the presumption that they were assessed to or paid by an adverse claimant in possession of the property.
